The Government are obsessed with composition. We should move the debate on to firmer territory. If we are to make progress, and if we are to get anything like the consensus that the Government say in the White Paper that they seek, we must move the debate on to territory on which we can make progress. We must get away from the Government's obsession with composition and deal with the role and functions of the other place. We are talking not about Mickey Mouse changes, but about a fundamental alteration to the way in which we are governed. The nation needs to know what those changes will be.

The new clauses set out in more detail than anything the Government have produced what an interim Chamber should be doing. I ask my colleagues to support the new clause in the Lobby.

Mr. Fallon: I congratulate my hon. Friend on his ingenuity in finally bringing the Committee round to the subject that should have occupied us from the beginning—the functions of the Chamber that we seek to reform. I compliment him on his further ingenuity in offering the Committee three variations of the new clause. Like him, I much prefer new clause 26, which is slightly less bureaucratic than new clause 24, and avoids some unnecessary form filling.

It is essential that we begin with the assertion of exactly what the upper House is supposed to do. We would want to do that anyway if we sought to reform its composition, but we want to do it all the more because we see in the White Paper the first shadowy outline of the type of second Chamber that the Government would prefer. It is clear from chapter 7 of the White Paper that the Labour party would prefer a weaker House. The Government make that explicit. They talk about powers that might be used more frequently, but should be reduced. They suggest that the delaying power should be reduced, so that the power of the upper House to ask us to think again should not result in a Bill being delayed as long as it can be now. They even suggest that the ping-pong legislative procedure at the end of each Session should be curtailed, so that when the other place asks us to have second thoughts it will not have the leverage that it has at present when a Session of Parliament is expiring.

The Chairman: Order. I must help the hon. Member and the Committee. The debate on the new clause cannot be widened into a general debate about the functions of the House of Lords. The issue must be referred to only in the context of the job specification for life peers in the terms of the new clause. The hon. Member has started to go outside that issue, so I ask him respectfully to come back within the narrow definition that I have given.

Mr. Fallon: That guidance is extremely helpful to the Committee, Sir Alan. It is important that we ventilate this issue, because the role of the interim House will be significant when we eventually decide the role of the House after stage 2. There is no point inviting people to serve in the interim House unless we are clear about what they are there to do.

You have rightly ruled out, Sir Alan, any further discussion of what Labour Members think those who will serve in the interim House should do, but I am sure that that does not preclude us from stating clearly in the statute what they will do. My hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) has laid out those functions very clearly. The new clause states that there should be "a willingness to participate in . . . the consideration of Bills".

That will be enormously important in the interim stage, not least because, if the Government want a weaker House on stage 2, those who participate in the interim House will do so in the knowledge that only a small number of them will eventually graduate to membership of the House at stage 2. Unless we include in the Bill a clear definition of their role, they may feel cowed and unable to exercise even their present functions properly and without fear. Without such a definition, they may feel constrained: they may feel that they will miss out on the transition to stage 2.

Mr. Forth: Is my hon. Friend satisfied that the wording is strong enough, and is likely to be effective enough? It strikes me that it would be possible to make such a declaration, and do precious little afterwards.

"shall indicate a willingness to participate"

Mr. Fallon: Later in my speech, I shall identify a number of respects in which I feel that the new clause is rather modest. As my right hon. Friend says, it is possible that the willingness indicated by the ticking of a box on a form at the beginning of a Session will be no guarantee of the number of sittings that the peer in question will attend. I know that, if there were a league table for attendance, my right hon. Friend would be in the premier division. He is an assiduous attender not just of this Committee, but of our sittings generally.

The drafting of the new clause may need to be examined, but I am sure that, if it is accepted, my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring will deal with that on Report. Perhaps, when he winds up the debate, he will tell us how "willingness" might be defined.

Let me return to the functions that we are discussing. Unless we reassure Members of the interim House that they have a proper role to play, they will inevitably be overwhelmed and cowed by the need to ensure that they survive to become Members of the stage 2 House. That applies regardless of whether they consider standing for election should all or even part of that House be elected. They will, of course, want to assure those who select them for election that they have been good boys, or good girls, in the interim House—that they have not been too aggressive towards the Executive. It will also apply if they wish to stand for membership of the nominated element of the stage 2 House. I believe that they will feel cowed by the knowledge that the Government want a weaker stage 2 House, and that they must not prejudice their membership of that House.

Dr. Fox: There is, perhaps, a more pressing reason for the functions of an interim Chamber to be detailed. The interim Chamber may, in effect, be stage 2. Page 29 of the White Paper states:

"If there is consensus, the Government will make every effort to ensure that the second stage of reform has been approved by Parliament before the next election."

Given the difficulty that has been experienced during this century in securing any form of consensus on reform, there is a good chance that the interim Chamber will become at least a semi-permanent Chamber, and there is, therefore, all the more reason to detail what it will do.

Mr. Fallon: That is another powerful argument in favour of the new clauses—so powerful, indeed, that I begin to puzzle why my hon. Friend did not include it in his speech.

I have studied these matters for some time—ever since the publication of the Home report in 1978—and I have never believed that any interim House could become the stage 2 House. I think it was Freud who, when told that the Russian revolution would begin a period of chaos that would eventually lead to a paradise on earth, replied, "I half believe it." I half believe that the Government were originally serious about reforming the House of Lords; but, as the process has been unveiled, along with the peculiarly cack-handed way in which they have approached it, it has become apparent that we are likely to be stuck with an interim House for a long time.

The Chairman: Order. Freud is dead, and I think that this part of the hon. Gentleman's speech should die with him, because it is well beyond the scope of the new clause.

5.30 pm

Mr. Fallon: I apologise, Sir Alan. I fear that my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring slightly misled me by drawing the Committee's attention again to paragraph 21 of the White Paper, where it is made clear that there is no binding commitment to legislation in the current Parliament. That is why it is important that the Committee should focus on the functions to be undertaken by the interim Chamber.

Dr. Starkey: As I understood it, the argument that the hon. Gentleman was advancing before the previous intervention was that Members of the upper House would be incredibly cowed by their need to be selected for either election or nomination. Does that not apply to all Members of the upper House, at least half of whom will be selected by the Conservative party? They will not all be selected by the Government.

Mr. Fallon: Those Members will be selected for the interim House, of course, but Members on both sides of the interim House will have to have an eye on their eventual selection for the stage 2 House. We all in the Committee anticipate that the Government will change at the next election, so exactly the same argument will apply to Members on each side of the interim House.

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): Did I understand the hon. Gentleman's argument? Does he feel that membership of the House of Lords should be permanent and not subject to review under any circumstances, with no elected component at any stage?

Mr. Fallon: That is not a proposition that I have advanced either today or at any previous sitting of the Committee. What is important is that those whom we now invite to be Members of the interim House should be clear as to what their functions are. That is why those functions are spelled out in the new clauses.

My hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring has hit the nail on the head. Consideration of Bills is obviously a primary function of the upper House. It is all the more necessary that it is exercised properly because of the number of Bills and the haste with which they are pushed through the House. The scrutiny process in the House of Commons has been curtailed by the use of timetable motions at the drop of a hat. Therefore, it is all the more important that the interim House takes that legislative function seriously.

Mr. Graham Brady (Altrincham and Sale, West): I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way, not least because I notice that my parliamentary neighbour, the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell), has recently entered the Chamber. My hon. Friend's point is particularly relevant following an exchange at Prime Minister's Question Time yesterday, when the Prime Minister said that he did not believe in parliamentary scrutiny, and that he believed only in the mandate that his Government had to implement their business. That is precisely why the new clause is so important.

Mr. Fallon: You would rule me out of order, Mr. Martin, if I repeated a section from my Second Reading speech, but it was Baroness Jay who let the cat out of the bag. She said that the Bill was all about "modernising government". It is not. The new clause is about ensuring that a reformed second Chamber—there are many arguments for reforming it—has a clear statement as to the functions that it is supposed to perform. Better consideration of Bills, particularly legislation that is rushed through the House of Commons, must surely be one of those primary functions.

On the function in subsection (2)(b) of new clause 26, the study of European Community obligations, the ability of the House of Commons to consider properly the merits of those European Community obligations and the legislation that flows from them is restricted by the terms under which the original Select Committee was set up in 1973; that is why we had to revise our procedures and to set up the two new Standing Committees. Therefore, it is all the more important that we set out in statute the requirement that life peers should participate in the study of European Community obligations.

The third function, the scrutiny of Ministers of the Crown, will be important work for the upper House. The Government have said that, in the second stage House, Ministers might not even have to be Members. They have said that it would be difficult if they were not, but they have not ruled it out. Perhaps there is some fancy continental proposal floating around that Ministers might not need to be a Member of either House. In fact, we have seen an example of that already—Lord Macdonald seems to have floated around in the Government over the past few months without being a Member of either House. Perhaps Ministers from Whitehall might only have to turn up and stand at the Bar of the other place. It is essential—

Mr. Letwin: Does my hon. Friend agree that there is a particular need to scrutinise the Ministers in the other place, given the extremely controversial nature of some of them at present?

Mr. Fallon: My hon. Friend may be leading me on to political ground, which may be a little outside the scope of the Committee.

What we can say about the Ministers who serve the Crown in another place is that they have not sought election or endorsement. Indeed, many of them have not stood for any sort of public office or even taken the trouble to be a member of the political party that has appointed them. It is all the more important that those unelected crony Ministers should be properly scrutinised. That is why I am delighted to see that function spelt out in subsection (2)(c).

On subsection (2)(d), I am not the first member of the Committee to draw attention to the excellent work of the Select Committees of the Upper House, whether in scrutinising European legislation or scrutinising science and technology. By the way in which they have carried out their work, the noble Lords who serve on those Committees have built a strong reputation for them, both in Brussels and in Whitehall. Their reports are widely respected. It is part of the tradition of the House and we want to see the transfer of the knowledge and experience that have been built up.

When I spoke on the previous group of amendments, I was told that the reason for keeping the Privileges Committee, even though it would be adjudicating on claims that have nothing to do with the current House, is that it has great tradition and has built up a great body of knowledge. That is to be kept for a function that it is no longer necessary for it to discharge, but the Government are happy to see that retained simply because the expertise built up is so great. If that applies to the handling of the Ampthill baby or the various Moynihan babies, it certainly applies to the handling of European legislation.

I am delighted that my hon. Friends have tabled this new clause and enabled the Committee to focus for the first time on the functions that the reformed House will exercise. It has enabled us to bring out the threat to the second Chamber that lies in almost every paragraph of chapter 7 of the White Paper. If we accept the new clause, it will give some comfort to those whom we are [illegible] at very little cost—as we discovered under an earlier group of amendments—to serve us. I urge my right hon. and hon. Friends to support the new clause.

Mr. Garnier: I commend my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) for introducing the new clause and for reminding the Committee of our party's support for the need for a discussion about the role of the interim Chamber and our commitment to a second Chamber. We all know that there is no certainty about the length of time that the second Chamber will last in its interim form. I believe that I am right in saying that, if there are members of the Committee who want a unicameral legislative system, they are to be found on the Labour Benches, not the Conservative Benches. It may well be that not many Labour Members desire a unicameral system.

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells).

Mr. Garnier: I am corrected by the Leader of the House. I gather that my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford is in favour of a unicameral legislative system. Be that as it may, he is very much in the minority. As he is not in the Chamber, he should be able on another occasion to explain the reasons for his preference.

I fully endorse the need for a second Chamber, and for a strongly equipped second Chamber that will perform all the functions stated in new clause 24. I shall deal with those duties in a moment. First, however, I have a couple of queries, with which my hon. Friends the Members for Woodspring and for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) or the Minister may be able to deal.

[Mr. Garnier]

We should examine the functions of the interim second Chamber in the light of the constitutional disposition that is shortly to come into effect. As my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring pointed out, a new Parliament in Scotland and Assemblies in Wales and in Northern Ireland have been established. The Committee would be far better employed working out the proper relationship of the constituent parts of the Union, their relationship to the United Kingdom Parliament and the governmental systems of the European Union that have some effect on our deliberations before we consider the composition of the membership of the second Chamber—which, as my hon. Friend quite correctly said, seems to be the Government's primary concern.

The Government have yet to tell us what they believe is the proper relationship between the two Houses of Parliament, or the relationship of the Scottish Parliament, the Assembly of Wales, the Northern Ireland Assembly and both Houses of the United Kingdom Parliament. We have yet to hear from the Government what they believe is the proper place of the United Kingdom Parliament in the United Kingdom constitution.

The Government have yet to tell us also what they want the second Chamber to do, in either its interim form or its final form, whenever that may come. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring that we need a strong second Chamber that is able to hold the Executive to account. Under our current constitutional arrangements, the Government may appoint Ministers from both Houses, and both Houses are able to question Ministers. Of course, whether they receive answers is another matter.

The Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department and I have had our little disagreements about his ability to answer questions and to allow himself to be held to account. Perhaps, when attempts were made to hold the Government to account, he would be encouraged to answer questions more satisfactorily if he were not only available to be cross-questioned in this Chamber and in the Select Committees of the House but required occasionally to attend the second Chamber to answer questions. Perhaps future constitutional academics, and we politicians, will have to consider that matter.

Equally, perhaps better scrutiny of Government could be achieved if Ministers who are appointed by the Prime Minister to the other place are available for scrutiny also in this place.

Dr. Starkey: Will the hon. and learned Gentleman be making those points in a submission to the royal commission—which is considering precisely those issues on the role and functions of the second Chamber? Is he not pre-empting that consideration?

5.45 pm

Mr. Garnier: This is the House of Commons. One reason why I was sent to this place by my constituents was to discuss Government legislation. We are here to discuss the Bill, which, sadly—with some honourable exceptions—most Labour Back Benchers have not condescended to come and support with their words.

Mr. Letwin: Does my hon. and learned Friend agree that the comment of the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) betrays the fundamental disposition of Labour Members to assume that they do not need to worry about the functions of the interim Chamber? They want to leave all that to the White Paper, but the long-term plans may never come about.

Mr. Garnier: I was thinking in Committee yesterday evening that it seemed to many Labour Back Benchers that the White Paper, not the Bill, was the legislation.

Mrs. Beckett: Has it not struck the hon. and learned Gentleman or the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) that perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) was smart enough to spot that the Government do not propose any change to the functions or power of the interim House?

Mr. Garnier: If that is the case, more's the pity. The current second Chamber is diffident about using its powers to scrutinise and amend Government legislation. That has been the case under this Government and under the previous Conservative Administrations of my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) and my noble Friend Baroness Thatcher.

Mr. Stunell: The hon. and learned Gentleman has made an interesting point. What is his evaluation of whether the upper House was more inclined to give serious scrutiny to Conservative legislation or to the legislation of the current Government?

Mr. Garnier: I do not have the figures at my fingertips, but many Conservative Bills were given serious scrutiny by the House of Lords. The rights and remedies available to the House of Lords under the constitution and the precedents and traditions of our country are not sufficiently used for fear of offending the elected House. There is nothing wrong with that, because we are the elected Members and the Labour party has a majority in this House, by a huge chalk. It is permissible for the House of Lords to restrain itself. However, if we are revisiting the workings of our constitution, are we not entitled to invite the Committee to apply its mind to the proper functions of the second Chamber in its interim form and in its permanent form, if there is to be one? The proposals in the new clauses on the job specification of the Members of the second House are worthy of consideration.

Mr. George Stevenson (Stoke-on-Trent, South): I have listened with great interest to many speeches, particularly that of the hon. and learned Gentleman. The new clauses talk about a declaration of a willingness to serve. What criteria would he use to judge whether that willingness had been made a reality? Does he envisage a penalty being imposed on those who did not make such a declaration?

Mr. Garnier: I congratulate the hon. Gentleman, who must have very good eyesight. That is the next point in my notes. I said at the start of my speech that I wanted to draw to the attention of my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring two points of concern about shortcomings in new clause 26, which I am otherwise happy to support.

My first concern was the lack of sanctions for failure. The hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Stevenson) asked what sanctions or penalties would be available to the second Chamber if a Member of that House, having made a declaration to the effect that he was willing to serve under the terms of the new clause, failed to abide by that declaration. Would it be open to the second Chamber to expel him? Would it be open to the Government—or the Prime Minister who had recommended to Her Majesty that the Member be granted a life peerage to sit in the House—to withdraw the life peerage? Those matters need to be considered. It would have been useful for the Committee to hear more about the matter, but that does not vitiate the good sense of the thrust of the new clause.

Mr. Stevenson: Will the hon. and learned Gentleman address the first question in my previous intervention? What criteria does he envisage being established to determine whether the call for a declaration of a willingness to serve has been made into a reality?

Mr. Garnier: We are talking about a hypothetical situation.

Mr. Stevenson: No, we are not.

Mr. Garnier: If the hon. Gentleman will have the patience to listen to the answer to his fair question, he will see that we are talking about a hypothetical position, because the measure is not yet in effect. One would have to look at the new clause criteria and see whether any given Member of the second House had complied with the willingness declaration. Had he or she given sufficient attention to the workings of the second Chamber in relation to the consideration of Bills and draft statutory instruments? Had he or she given sufficient attention and time to the study of the European Community obligations of the UK, the scrutiny of Ministers of the Crown and the work of Select Committees? Many things are easier to recognise than to define and, in the event of a Member of the second Chamber failing to come up to scratch in relation to the declaration of willingness, the other place would find mechanisms for bringing him or her to book.

My complaint is that those mechanisms are not spelled out in the new clause. Although the new clause in itself is not to be undermined on that basis, it would have been a better new clause if the details had been included.

Mr. Brady: Does my hon. and learned Friend consider that, even without sanctions, the inclusion of the new clause would have the benefit of dealing with a problem raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Fallon)—that there would be a premium on the silent Member of the interim Chamber who might wish to be appointed to a subsequent Chamber? The new clause would make it difficult for a Government to choose the Members who had done and said nothing to go on and serve in any ultimate Chamber.

Mr. Garnier: I take my hon. Friend's point, which he made more eloquently than I might have.

Mr. Andrew Love (Edmonton): The hon. and learned Gentleman said that he felt that the new clause had a problem, in that it failed to include any sanctions. Types of sanction have been suggested, but the hon. and learned Gentleman has not stated any view on them. Before you leave the issue, you should give your wisdom to the Chamber in terms of appropriate sanctions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. I always deliver wisdom to the Chamber.

Mr. Garnier: You have done so again, Mr. Martin.

I find new clause 26 generally acceptable, but it has one or two deficiencies. There is an omission regarding the Law Lords—the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary—who at present are life peers and Members of the other place, and are entitled to vote and speak on matters outside their remit as judges of the highest court in the land. I am marginally concerned that the requirement to declare a willingness to be involved in the matters listed in subsection (4)(a), (b), (c) and (d) may in some way affect the independence of the judiciary.

Mr. Letwin: My hon. and learned Friend is making a serious point. I hope that he will accept that it was no part of our intention to suggest that there should be any such prejudice to the Law Lords' neutrality. Of course, we assume that the Standing Orders would reflect that, in defining such participation by the Law Lords as neutral.

Mr. Garnier: I am pleased to have that assurance. I am not surprised, because, if our party stands for anything, it stands for the independence of the judiciary.

Mr. Rammell: I was fascinated to hear the hon. and learned Gentleman lauding the Conservative party's commitment to the independence of the judiciary. Is that his party's view on General's Pinochet's case, which is being adjudicated in the other place?

Mr. Garnier: I will not answer that question. That was an unworthy intervention. In expecting me to answer, the hon. Gentleman seems to suggest that the Committee should have some role in influencing the Judicial Committee in reaching its decision in the extradition case. He will have to await the judgment of the other place. I am not prepared to express an opinion about that matter in this forum.

There is an unmet need to define the relationship between the two Houses of Parliament and the new devolved bodies in Northern Ireland, Wales and Scotland. I want to be sure that the Judicial Committee of the other place, or that body in its other guise as the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, will be entitled to carry out its work in arbitrating differences between, for example, the Scottish Parliament and the United Kingdom Parliament.

We must anticipate that there will be constitutional tensions between the devolved bodies and the United Kingdom Parliament. Equally, there are already tensions between this place and the European Parliament and the constitutional arrangements of the European Union. There may also be tensions between us and London's new mayor and assembly, but I am not so worried about that.

We need an arrangement that protects the ability of the Judicial Committee to arbitrate on such matters. A jurisdiction may grow up that provides a body of law; the independent judiciary and the constitutional court which may develop should be uninfluenced and uninhibited by the need for declarations such as those in the new clauses.

Mr. Letwin: Given that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is specifically given the role of adjudicating devolution issues, we have taken it as axiomatic that, in serving on that Committee, their lordships would be acting not as Members of the House of Lords but as members of that Committee, and hence wholly neutral.

Mr. Garnier: The only problem with that point is that they will in fact be Members of the House of Lords. We may need to give that aspect of the new clauses further consideration. It may be that we shall be assisted in that by the other place, when it considers this aspect of the Bill.

It is important that we should carefully consider the current constitutional role of the other place and what we hope its future constitutional role will be in dealing with the legal matters to which I adverted. In the past, the House of Lords has performed a vital role as an arbitrator between the justice systems of the Commonwealth and the citizens of its states, and I hope that it will continue to perform that role in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John M. Taylor (Solihull): Under the previous Government, I undertook a mission on behalf of the Lord Chancellor's Department to visit several of the jurisdictions in the Caribbean.

Mr. Forth: Lucky you.

Mr. Taylor: It ill lies in the mouth of my right hon. Friend to begrudge me a trip to the Caribbean, which was non-stop hard work. I never had a moment's relaxation, as I visited all the jurisdictions in the eastern Caribbean—

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. I have slackened the reins somewhat, and the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) has talked about the Law Lords, but we must get back to the new clauses, which are more narrow than the subject that the hon. Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) is addressing.

Mr. Taylor: I apologise to the Committee, Mr. Martin, but I was provoked.

The First Deputy Chairman: Order. If the hon. Gentleman is intervening, it is a rather long intervention, and I wish to see the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) back on his feet.

Mr. Brady rose—

Mr. Garnier: You want me back on my feet, Mr. Martin, and I shall obey you. Before very long, I shall get back to my seat, but I wish to express my genuine support for the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring. I do not yet have a firm view about which new clause is better, and whether the declaration should be of a sessional length, a parliamentary length or for life, but I accept the arguments of hon. Friend the Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) about the need for declarations to be made. I trust that the Committee will guide me further on the length of time for which they should be made.

I run the risk of crossing you, Mr. Martin, but, contrary to your ruling a moment ago, I think that the role of all Members of the interim House of Lords, in all their guises as legislators and judges, must be considered under new clause 26. On that basis, and having expressed some of my concerns in a gentle, acceptable and interesting way—

Mr. Forth: Two out of three.

Mr. Garnier: I am always so grateful to my right hon. Friend—I think. I shall resume my seat and invite other members of the Committee to comment on what I have said.

Mr. Stevenson: I, too, have suffered provocation. I had not intended to contribute to the debate, but I feel that I must. I have listened to the contributions from Opposition Members and read the new clauses, and one might be tempted to think that they had some superficial attraction. The new clauses seek first to identify what the role of the interim Chamber might be. I repeat that, as I listened to Conservative Members, I felt a certain attraction towards that objective. The second objective is to try to ensure that, whoever might be the Members of the interim second Chamber, there is a written declaration that they are willing to participate in the activities set out in the new clauses.

However, as the debate continued, that superficial attraction turned into a proverbial Irish mist. The activities referred to in the new clauses are important. How do we define them? What are they? Should we not take this opportunity to define them so that there is no risk of the interim second Chamber not knowing what it is about? I listened to the ingenious arguments put forward—indeed, the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) was congratulated by his hon. Friends on the ingenious way in which he had used the new clauses to introduce that important element of definition—but, on at least one occasion, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office intervened to point out that it is not the Government's intention to change the functions currently exercised in the second Chamber. I thought that that was pretty clear.

Mr. Tyrie: Is the hon. Gentleman not aware that, by changing the composition of the Chamber, he changes the effectiveness with which the Chamber may exercise those functions? That is the crucial element in the argument that seems to have eluded so many Labour Members, but is so clear to Conservative Members.

Mr. Stevenson: I understand the hon. Gentleman's point. Having attended most of the debates, I have listened to the arguments ad nauseam. By the way, I note the disappearance from the Chamber of the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth)—or is he the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood? No, he was kicked out of that seat.

I acknowledge the argument about effectiveness, but these new clauses talk not about effectiveness, but about willingness; we are attempting to define the powers and responsibilities of the interim second Chamber. I acknowledge that there are arguments about how effectively those powers might be exercised in terms of what the interim second Chamber will be, and those arguments have been put forward by many right hon. and hon. Members. On the parts of the new clauses that attempt to identify those responsibilities, I am certain that that matter is important and equally certain that my hon. Friend the Minister directly answered the concerns that were expressed. I have no doubt that my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House will also refer to the matter.

When I referred earlier to the declaration of willingness, I noticed that the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) nodded, so I assume that he supports that point. However, that aspect of the new clauses is flawed. In an intervention on the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), I asked what criteria would be used to determine whether that willingness was a reality. He was unable to answer, but called in aid the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady), who gave a definition that I thought he had plucked out of the air. It is my assertion that, if we were to ask the 30 or 40 hon. Members in the Committee for a definition, we should hear 30 or 40 different definitions.

The new clauses are fundamentally flawed. It is no good talking about hypotheses, as the hon. and learned Member for Harborough did in answer to my intervention. We are talking not about hypotheses, but about new clauses which, if accepted, would appear in the Bill.

What would be a criterion for demonstrating willingness? Would it be a Member's attendance record? Perhaps a Member would be deemed to have shown willingness if he attended a Scrutiny Committee meeting and listened to the discussion. Sometimes one contributes as much by listening as by speaking—I would remind the hon. Member for Aldershot of that if he were present, but he is not. How would one judge those criteria? Would Members have to produce sick notes from their GPs? Would they have to provide explanations such as, "I'm sorry that I could not attend, but I was sick" and "I had a family crisis"? The whole area is a minefield.

I respectfully suggest to the hon. Member for Woodspring that it would be impossible to employ criteria to determine whether a declaration of willingness was real. I challenge the hon. Member for West Dorset—if he intends to contribute again to the discussion—to spell out what those criteria would be. I shall listen with great interest as I contend that that is an impossible task.

If it were possible to arrive at criteria, we would have to consider what penalties might be imposed if no willingness were indicated—as it says in new clause 26. It is not just a matter of willingness, but an indication of willingness. I do not know what that means. I understand what "willingness" and "indicate" mean, but I am not sure what indicative willingness is. I challenge Opposition Members to clarify that point. It is not a hypothetical matter: if the new clauses are passed, they will go into the Bill. We are dealing with reality.

The new clauses seek to do two things to which I referred earlier. First, they seek to define the responsibilities of the other Chamber. My hon. Friend the Minister answered that point and said that there would be no changes. Therefore, that part of the new clauses is not required. Secondly, the new clauses seek to introduce a declaration or indication of willingness. That is simply impractical and impossible and would not stand up to even the slightest scrutiny. That point has not yet been clarified by the Opposition. They have not explained what criteria would be used to determine whether real willingness had been shown or what penalties might be imposed if it was not.

New clauses that appeared to be superficially attractive have proved to be nothing but political posturing. I shall listen carefully to the remarks of my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, but I hope that the Government will oppose the new clauses. If that is the Government's intention, I shall certainly pass through the Lobby with enthusiasm.

Mr. Forth: I rather agree with the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Stevenson). I think that my hon. Friend the Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) will have quite a job to persuade me and, perhaps, other hon. Members of the viability of the new clauses. I do not question the importance of the subject that has been raised. The hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South is an experienced Committee Chairman and he knows that it is not always sufficient for the Government to criticise Opposition amendments for their technical content. It is possible for the Government, as a matter of good will, to say, "We accept the substance, but would like the amendment to be redrafted." In the ministerial response, I shall look for an indication of how Ministers believe that the substance of the new clauses can properly be addressed. Following the speech of the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, I am worried about the ability to translate words such as "participate" into reality.

By analogy, let us consider this House. Can we imagine setting out to judge Members on participation—to say nothing of penalties? It is a little easier to deal with the point about penalties. This House has a combination of party discipline and the Whips, the Government's power of patronage, the huge attraction of becoming an Opposition Front-Bench spokesman and the ultimate sanction of party selection and the electorate. None of those is available in the other place—at least until my objective of a wholly elected upper Chamber is realised. The point about participation will be rather difficult to get a grip of.

Even if, under the terms of the new clauses, people said, "Yes, I will be a working peer"—I think that that is the general objective—and even if the declaration is made in good faith, how will a judgment be made on whether that declaration will be fulfilled? It does not matter which paragraph of the new clauses we consider. As the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South said, how are we to account for assiduous attendance in a debate such as this if one has not spoken? Would we have to bob up and down, intervening constantly, just to show that we had been present? Would a record be kept of those who sat on the Benches, as happens in the other place so that Members may qualify for their daily allowance? Let us consider the even more difficult question of participation in "the study of European Community obligations".

It would be very difficult to get any definitive grip on such matters.

[Mr. Forth]

Although I fully support the thrust of the suggestion of my hon. Friend the Member for West Dorset, he has his work cut out if he is to persuade me—and, obviously, the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South—that the new clauses can work, and that we can find a way in which to measure and monitor such matters, especially participation. We would have to deal with penalties, too. If we found ways of judging, and Members were found wanting, what would happen? What would happen if I signed a declaration and were made a Member of an interim House, but was judged not to have participated adequately?

Mr. Fallon: The following might be one test of participation. Would my right hon. Friend say that he had been participating in a debate on these new clauses if he were able to vote for them? Is he participating in this Committee to that extent?

Mr. Forth: That raises a series of issues, which my hon. Friend is right to raise. Is the mere act of voting a sufficient indication of participation to satisfy the criteria?

I do not want to labour the point; I wanted to reinforce the remarks of the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, which were worth reinforcing, so that my hon. Friend the Member for West Dorset will—I hope—seek to satisfy the Committee on them before we vote. I hope that he can, because I want to support the new clause. However, I shall need further persuading before being able to do so.

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) opened the debate with an echo of our Second Reading debate in which, having accused the Government of wanting to kick the reform of stage 2 into the long grass, he came up with a long list of things that should have been considered before we did anything at all, which would probably have taken at least 10 years. In tonight's debate, he again said that he thought that this process should have begun with careful consideration, from first principles, of the role of Parliament. He then said that, having given the matter some such consideration, the Opposition strongly believed that there should indeed be a second Chamber.

In that, as in several other matters, there is not much dispute between hon. Members on opposite sides of the Chamber. Much earlier in our debates on the subject, I understood an hon. Member—I shall have to rely on Hansard to bring his proper description—to say in an intervention that he was in principle a unicameralist.

Mr. Garnier: I believe that it was my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells).

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. and learned Gentleman may well be right, and I am grateful to him. Many Labour Members have said that they are unicameralists, but the Government are not making that case any more than the Opposition are doing so. We therefore begin with common ground in that all or most of us take the view that, to perform its role properly, Parliament needs not only this Chamber, but a second Chamber.

It is slightly sad that we then entered more contentious territory, with the ritual—usually ill-founded—denunciations of the Government, based on dubious statistics or none. However, it would be wise not to detain the Committee on that subject, because it was not germane to the debate; I even wondered whether the denunciations had been put in to flesh out a not very long contribution.

In the course of that ritual denunciation, the hon. Member for Woodspring asserted that the Government should have focused from the outset not on the composition of a second Chamber, but on its role and functions. On Second Reading, my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) pointed out that, throughout the decades-long history of discussions on reform of the House of Lords, when proposals were made to reform its role or powers, it was suggested that the composition should be reformed first—and when proposals were made to reform the composition, it was said that we should start with its role and functions, so it seems impossible to satisfy those who are nervous about all reform. We then moved on to the issue of the basic points made—or purported to be made—in the new clauses and the amendment, all of which, as the hon. Member for Woodspring identified, have the same theme, although in slightly different contexts.

Most of us would not disagree with much of what has been said in the debate. The Government are as anxious as Conservative Members to have an effective transitional House and to have a second Chamber of genuine working peers, and I do not believe that anything that has been said from the Labour Benches in these debates or on any other occasion could in any way suggest that the Government do not want an effective second Chamber.

I now make a confession to the Committee that I thought never to make, which may not fall very pleasantly on the ears of the hon. Member for Woodspring. For the first time in my life, I agreed with most of what the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) said. I hope that I do not hurt the right hon. Gentleman's feelings too much by saying so, but I entirely concur with his argument, which I fear is that, however unexceptionable may be some of the basic points made in the context of these new clauses, they are pointless because they are completely ineffectual.

Dr. Fox: I am grateful to the right hon. Lady for giving way. She speaks about an active second Chamber. As guidance to the Committee, can she say whether the Government believe that such a Chamber should be less powerful than the current one, as powerful as the current one, or have more powers than the current second Chamber?

Mrs. Beckett: I think that I referred to an effective second Chamber—although the hon. Gentleman may be right, I may have used the word "active" as well. I do not quarrel with it.

The current situation is anomalous in so many ways that it would take a tedious length of time to delineate them. The anomaly rests not only in the composition, but in the fact that the House of Lords, as it is constituted, has a panoply of powers, which it feels impelled to obey a self-denying ordinance not to exercise. All that seems potentially worthy of reform.

The precise nature of those reforms, as the hon. Gentleman knows, is a matter for another day and for another stage of discussion of these matters. I do not propose to be diverted into them now, even if you allowed me to do so, Mr. Martin, and I am pretty confident that you would not.

Mr. Tyrie: Does the right hon. Lady think that the interim House is more likely to be able to exercise the powers in respect of which she says that peers are exercising a self-denying ordinance, or less likely to exercise those powers than the present Chamber? Specifically, does she think that the introduction of more than 100 new Labour peers at four times the average annual rate of appointment this century is likely to lead that Chamber to be more effective in independent scrutiny of the Government, or less?

Mrs. Beckett: Yet again, we have an example of the nonsense talked by Opposition Members about these matters, although the hon. Gentleman strays even further than most of the debate has done. I do not envisage the transitional Chamber behaving in any particularly different way from the way in which the second Chamber behaves now.

The hon. Gentleman's second point is ludicrous. First, I am sure that as he has clearly spent some time studying these matters, he is extremely conscious of the fact that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has created a number of new peers, only half of whom were creations of our party. The rest were creations on behalf of other parties. Secondly, the hon. Gentleman must be equally aware that, if there were a proposal to make a large number of creations, it would be only in an attempt to remedy the gross imbalance created by decades of Conservative Prime Ministers creating twice as many peers from their own party as from our party, despite their enormous in-built majority among hereditary peers.

Mr. Tyrie rose—

Mrs. Beckett: I do not intend to stray much longer on this point, and I am not sure that you will let us do this, Mr. Martin, but I shall give way again.

Mr. Tyrie: What the right hon. Lady says is factually incorrect. Since the introduction of life peers in 1958, no Prime Minister has ever appointed more than half from his own side. It has always been less than half. The present Prime Minister is the first Prime Minister ever to appoint more than half. The current rate is 53 per cent. Is that not a gross breach of all precedent in the appointment of life peers?

Mrs. Beckett: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is well aware of the facts, and I do not know why he is twisting about to deny them. Of the creations that have been made, 40 to 48 per cent. were creations of his party, and about half that for our party, despite the fact that the Conservatives already have an enormous in-built majority among the hereditary peers.

I am conscious of the demands on the Chamber and of the other brief points that I want to make. The provisions in the new clauses are not unworthy, but it would be pretty pointless to put them into effect as legislation because they are ineffectual and they raise as many questions as they answer.

How is the willingness of a Member to serve to be defined? The hon. Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Fallon) raised that matter. There is no mechanism to check whether the declaration is genuine or just a passport to membership. How would the required standard of involvement be judged on an objective basis? There is nothing in the new clause about that.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Stevenson) said in an intervention and in his remarks, there is in the new clause no sanction for failing to meet that standard, even if one could be devised. Although not unworthy, the clause adds nothing to the Bill.

The key point that we are anxious always to bear in mind is that, with the removal of the hereditary peers, the House of Lords will become a more workmanlike place. That is right and proper. It is an aim that we all share. All the aspects of work singled out in the new clause are perfectly worthy in themselves. We recognised the importance of that work in our White Paper. Nothing in our proposals for the transitional House or for the longer term suggests that the Government envisage that those will not continue to be functions fit for the second Chamber to carry out.

6.30 pm

I remind both the hon. Member for Sevenoaks and the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) that the Government do not propose to change the way in which matters are handled. The right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst asked how we could reflect the substance of the new clause. With respect for the worthy motives that might have lain behind tabling it, we cannot reflect its substance because, to be honest, it does not have any.

I am conscious of the fact that Conservative Members are strongly of the view that unnecessary material should not be put on the statute book. It is a view that I share, and that is why I advise the Committee, should the Opposition press the matter to a Division, to reject the new clause.

Mr. Letwin : I assure the Leader of the House that we shall push new clause 26 to a vote in due course.

The background to this debate, one of the best that we have had in Committee, is clear, and has become clearer during the Committee stage. First, the Bill creates a second Chamber that poses as interim. By denying Opposition amendments and new clauses, the Government have made it perfectly clear, and in confirming their refusal to produce a timetable made it clearer yet, that they have no idea how long that Chamber will last, and that, for all they know or care, it could be permanent.

Secondly, it has become clear during our debates that there are no measures in the Bill and nothing in the Government's plans to increase the ability of the second House, which the Bill re-creates, to check the Executive, despite the fact that the Government have been wholly unable and unwilling to deny that the greatest problem of our constitution today is the Executive's overwhelming power.

Thirdly, and most importantly, throughout our debates, we have made it ever more clear that, by removing half the working Members of the other place, the Bill goes a long way towards weakening rather than strengthening the second Chamber. It weakens not its official role, but its ability to fulfil that role in reality. It makes it consciously and intentionally a less effective Chamber.

[Mr. Letwin]

New clause 9 on salaries and expenses offered the Government another chance to do something to remedy the deficiency that they have brought about by enabling their lordships, reduced in numbers as they will be, to do something about the matter by attending the Chamber more frequently, but the Government rejected that too.

Mrs. Beckett: One reason why none of those points was answered in the debate is that none was germane to the debate. The hon. Gentleman is winding up the previous debates that we have already had.

Mr. Letwin: With respect to the right hon. Lady, they are highly germane because they form the background to the debate.

The debate on new clause 24 and its accompanying new clauses was the Government's final test, which Ministers and Labour Members have fundamentally and utterly failed.

Mr. Stevenson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Letwin: If the hon. Gentleman will forgive me, I shall not, because I am conscious of the time. I shall give way later if I can.

My hon. Friends, who have made many excellent contributions to the debate, have properly castigated their Front-Bench spokesmen for the weakness of the new clauses. They have pointed out that they are less than perfect. My hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Fallon), perhaps most notably my right hon. Friend the Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) have all asked why the new clauses did not have more teeth. I think that the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Stevenson) made the same point.

We accept that the new clauses are by no means as strong as they might have been, but it is extraordinary that the Leader of the House should argue that it is not proper to have this modest, slight addition to the Bill on the grounds that it is incomplete and imperfect. If incompleteness and imperfection were guarantees of not entering law, and a guarantee that the Government would not wish something to enter the law, the Bill would never have come anywhere near the House. The Government, pre-eminently in Britain's history, are engaged in constitutional reform which, on their own admission, is incomplete and imperfect.

It is extraordinary that the right hon. Lady can summon up the gall to come to the Dispatch Box and argue that, with all the resources at her disposal, she is unable to improve on new clauses which she herself says—I fear that I must doubt the sincerity of her utterance—are unobjectionable in their aims. If they are unobjectionable in their aims, but imperfect in their results and effects, she could, perfectly easily, have introduced better versions. In the spirit of consensus, which the White Paper so magnificently offers, we would of course have accepted such additions to our proposals, but this afternoon and this evening—in particular, during the past hour and a half or two hours of this debate—the Government have not shown the slightest intention of establishing an interim Chamber that will work better than the current Chamber.

We said on Second Reading that the Government's intention was to create a twin poodle. They have poodlised this House; they intend to have a second poodle across the way. If they did not so intend, the last thing that they would have done is reject out of hand modest new clauses that sought purely to create a token—a token that would ensure at least that people were not introduced to their lordships' House merely as a matter of honour.

We sought solely an undertaking from the Government—and an undertaking from the people who will sit in the House of Lords—that the people whom they appoint will seek to fulfil a serious role in a serious Chamber, notwithstanding the fact that the number of working peers will have been halved without the slightest amendment to their conditions, which would have enabled them to go on fulfilling the role. That is a modest requirement. By rejecting it, the Government have amply demonstrated their bad faith in introducing a Bill that does nothing to increase the effective check on the Executive and much to belittle it.

I hope that Conservative Members will come willingly into the Lobby to support those points, notwithstanding the fact that, if we or the Government had been so minded, the new clauses could have been greatly strengthened. In this instance, the best is very much the enemy of the good. We shall vote to support the good, because that is much better than what the Government have been able to produce.

Dr. Fox: I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion and clause, by leave, withdrawn.

New Clause 26

CRITERIA FOR CONFERMENT OF LIFE PEERAGE (NO. 3)

'(1) A person shall not be a member of the House of Lords by virtue of a peerage conferred under the Life Peerages Act 1958 unless he has first declared a willingness to serve as a member of the House of Lords.

(2) Any such declaration shall be ineffective at the end of the Parliament in which it is made.

(3) Subsection (2) shall not prevent a further declaration being made at any time.

(4) The declaration shall indicate a willingness to participate in—

(a) the consideration of Bills and draft statutory instruments,

(b) the study of European Community obligations of the United Kingdom,

(c) the scrutiny of Ministers of the Crown, and

(d) the work of select committees.'.—[Dr. Fox.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Motion made, and Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

The Committee divided: Ayes 104, Noes 288.

Points of Order

6.53 pm

Mr. Michael Howard (Folkestone and Hythe): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Have you seen the reply of the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), in which the Foreign Secretary admits that he was sent and saw the report on human rights of the Foreign Affairs Committee before it was published, and that a draft of the Committee's report on enlargement, which has still not been published, was sent to his office in January and seen by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the right hon. Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), but not by him because—I quote from his answer—it "was not controversial"?

Should not the Foreign Secretary be summoned to the House to make a statement about that further astonishing example of his and the Government's contempt for Parliament? Will Madam Speaker widen the scope of her letter of 1 March to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Standards and Privileges to include those latest examples of the Foreign Secretary's ethical foreign policy?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. Those are matters for the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs. [Interruption.]

Mr. Howard rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The last thing that I need is for hon. Members to shout. I hope that the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) will not pursue this matter. I have ruled that the question of these leaks is a matter for the Foreign Affairs Committee. It is within that Committee's domain.

Mr. Tom King (Bridgwater): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. When this matter arose on a previous occasion, I asked Madam Speaker to ensure that it would be looked into so that we could have a ruling about whether it is thought to be proper conduct for a Minister to receive, hold and not return, without apology, a Select Committee report. Madam Speaker gave a prompt answer, for which I am grateful, to say that this was—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. King: May I complete this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Madam Speaker has already made clear her feelings on the matter. It is now before the Committee on Standards and Privileges. In answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe, I have said that this is a matter for the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It might be for the convenience of the House if I explain the decision that has just been taken in the Foreign Affairs Committee. As the House will know, there was a special report of that Committee which will, as I understand it, pass automatically to the Standards and Privileges Committee.

It is that Committee's report which will ultimately be debatable in the Chamber. On the latest developments, the Foreign Affairs Committee has today started the procedure which is set out clearly on page 670 of "Erskine May". That procedure will now be under way and, as you have already ruled, the matter is still with the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I thank the hon. Gentleman. There is nothing more to add.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Grantham and Stamford): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Surely a matter of the honourable or dishonourable conduct of Members of the House and the question of the integrity or otherwise of our Select Committee system must be matters of concern to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has an established procedure for dealing with matters of this sort. I have described that procedure and I can say no more.

I may have interrupted the right hon. Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King). I will allow him to complete his point of order.

Mr. King: My point was not specifically about the Foreign Affairs Committee, but deals with the wider issue of Select Committees. I have raised this matter with Madam Speaker and I simply want to reinforce a point. Madam Speaker has made it clear that she takes seriously the issue of Select Committee reports being given to Ministers who then retain and study them and do not return them to the House, and I believe that she intends to make a ruling. I am asking a simple question. The written answer indicates that two more Select Committee reports have been leaked, and I am simply asking that we follow the same procedure. May I ask you politely, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to refer this matter to Madam Speaker in the hope that she will include this in her ruling?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That will be done because the Foreign Affairs Committee and the Standards and Privileges Committee are looking at this matter.

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Stephen Day and

Question accordingly agreed to.

Mr. Nick St. Aubyn (Guildford): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Last week in this Chamber, the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, the hon. Member for Barking (Ms Hodge), promised that I would receive a written response to my questions about whether the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 (Amendment) Regulations are legal under European Union law as far as they apply to au pairs. As the Government have not bothered to reply, should the House be considering the regulations now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): That is not a point of order for the Chair. The issue is whether the House approves or disapproves the motion.

PETITION

South Downs

7.34 pm

Mr. David Lepper (Brighton, Pavilion): I am pleased to have the opportunity to present a petition initiated by Friends of the Earth, south-east office, which is based in my constituency. The petition has 21,000 signatures.

The petition states:

To the House of Commons.

The Petition of Friends of the Earth (South East Office) and others

Declares that they are concerned about the sustainable long-term future of the South Downs.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons establish a democratically elected National Park style body to succeed the South Downs Conservation Board, with strong planning powers to protect the Downs from damaging new development and to control and manage the huge recreational pressures on the Downs.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Nicholas Duff

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Jamieson.]

7.36 pm

Mr. Stephen Hesford (Wirral, West): May I first say how pleased I am that my application for this debate was successful in the ballot? It is about my constituent, Mr. Nicholas Duff, who is aged 40. He is a registered disabled person who suffers from the disability of light-sensitive atopic eczema. This year, he has already spent three and a half weeks in hospital due to the condition, which is so severe that he takes nine different types of medication—either creams or internal medication—daily or weekly.

Typically, Nicholas Duff has to stay indoors during daylight hours due to his light-sensitive condition. If he comes into contact with any ultraviolet light that is commonly in daylight, his skin burns. The result appears to be severe sunburn, although such a description underplays the disability from which he suffers. For example, if he walked to his local shop—a matter of a few hundred yards—he would have to stay indoors for days to recover.

A local charity was kind enough to pay for a car that has specially tinted windows, which block out the damaging ultraviolet light. That enables Mr. Nicholas Duff to have a normal life and to get out and about in the daytime. Indeed, if he had to be admitted to hospital in an emergency, or needed to see his doctor at a moment's notice, he could make the journey in his car, since he is disabled, not from getting out and about, but from getting out in the daylight.

My constituent was granted disability living allowance at the higher mobility component rate in about 1990. He was re-examined for that benefit in 1993. In September 1993, the then adjudication officer gave this decision:

"I considered the evidence contained in Mr. Duff's claim form and letter. I also considered the letter from Professor Friedmann.

The evidence shows that Mr. Duff was able to walk but due to his condition was unable to walk outside in daylight without considerable discomfort and skin reaction. Having regard to the evidence before me I found that Mr. Duff therefore satisfied the higher rate mobility component".

In March 1997, Mr. Duff's case was reviewed by the Benefits Agency. At that review, the adjudication officer's decision was to withdraw his benefit. My constituent tells me that, in effect, that withdraws from him the money that enables him to use his car.

In reaching that decision, the adjudication officer said:

"This is because he is not suffering from physical disablement such that he is unable to walk or virtually unable to do so".

That refusal by the adjudication officer was not believed by the local social services or by Professor Friedmann, a leading authority on this disease who is now professor of dermatology at Southampton.

In April 1997, on hearing of the refusal, Professor Friedmann immediately wrote the following letter:

"I must protest in the strongest possible terms . . . this" disablement is

"sufficiently severe that he has spent many weeks in hospitals and" requires

"toxic and even dangerous drugs to attempt to get"

"condition under control . . . This requires . . . the correct form of protective film applied to the windows to shut out the harmful wavelengths of the daylight. Mr. Duff is completely dependent upon the continued use of his car which is correctly equipped . . . There is, therefore, a . . . strong medical need for this man to have assistance that enables him to maintain his means of mobility. I therefore ask you to reverse this decision".

Mr. Duff applied to have the decision reviewed. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to examine the process that Mr. Duff then underwent between then and the present day, in early 1999. He had to go through a series of hoops which he should not have gone through, and which only exacerbated his situation.

Mr. Duff applied for a review; it took four months to come about, in September 1997. The refusal was confirmed by an adjudication officer. I became involved at or about that time, and it has taken an average of a month for the Benefits Agency to reply to any of my letters.

One of the delays in the case resulted from the fact that the Duff family were so desperate on refusal of their mobility component that they wrote to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's Office wrote to the Department of Social Security, and the Department lost the correspondence. I have on file a letter from the then junior Minister, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), profusely apologising for that event.

Mr. Duff went for review towards the end of September 1997. The refusal read as follows:

"Medical opinion states there is no physical cause of any mobility difficulties. I can see no reason why Mr. Duff could not walk a reasonable distance outdoors using appropriate clothing and creams for protection . . . I do not accept that Mr. Duff's disability is physical."

Mr. Duff's family cannot understand how anyone could reach that conclusion having seen Mr. Duff in the unfortunate state in which he often is during the day.

I do not want to overplay the disappointment and distress that that refusal causes, but I draw to the attention of the House the fact that the official note of the adjudication officer's decision shows that he placed reliance on the Benefits Agency medical officer's note of his examination at that time. It was wholly inadequate; I shall explain why in a moment.

Not only did the adjudication officer rely on a wholly inadequate medical opinion, but there was no mention of Professor Friedmann's letter, to which I referred a few moments ago. I know that that letter was on file and was before the tribunal. I am at a loss to understand why the adjudication officer failed to refer to Professor Friedmann's letter of that time. It was one of the reasons why the original adjudicating officer granted the disability allowance in the first place.

On hearing that Mr. Duff had again been refused his disability allowance, Professor Friedmann wrote yet another letter, dated 14 October 1997. He stated:

"This letter is to express my concern at the utterly flippant tone and response in the letter declining to grant the mobility component of Disability Living Allowance to this man—my patient. . . . We do not normally ask for Disability Living Allowance for people with normal types of light sensitivity. In Mr. Duff's case the condition is much more severe than usual and in fact, little or no protective benefit is obtained from using sunblock creams"— which were suggested by the medical examiner. The letter goes on to state that is necessary in this case, together with frequent in-patient admissions. Professor Friedmann continues:

"the use of powerful cytotoxic and immunosuppressive drugs"

"This has probably only been successful because he"—

"has managed to avoid exposure to sunlight. . . Rather short exposures to daylight can cause severe exacerbation of the skin disease which may take weeks to subside. . . For the adjudicating officer to make the comment 'why Mr. Duff could not walk a reasonable distance outdoors using the appropriate clothing and creams for protection' shows a complete misunderstanding of the nature of the condition."

Mr. Duff appealed that decision to the social security disability appeals tribunal. That brings me to another part of my complaint about the system. He lodged his appeal in December 1997, but it was not heard until November 1998—he had to wait almost a year. That is not satisfactory. I bring the matter to the attention of my hon. Friend.

The appeal tribunal confirmed the decisions refusing the benefit. On hearing of the new refusal, Professor Friedmann wrote a third letter, dated 30 November 1998. He wrote:

"I understand that his most recent appeal before the Tribunal was rejected on the grounds that 'he is able to walk'! I feel somehow that an almost wilful refusal to acknowledge the nature of the disability on behalf of people assessing this case has been demonstrated."

I ask my hon. Friend to reflect on that. I understand from speaking to other hon. Members that it is not uncommon for people with disabilities, on being examined, to be wholly dissatisfied with the way in which they are treated at tribunals. They cannot believe that the doctors are unable to understand their condition.

In Mr. Duff's case, the formula of words found by the doctor and repeated by the adjudication officer is inadequate in medical terms, but it is no surprise to Mr. Duff and his family that it refuses disability on the ground that the claimant "is able to walk".

Professor Friedmann's letter goes on:

"The whole point about Nick's case is that he can move about only if he is encased in a capsule that filters the sunlight to prevent the harmful ultra-violet rays reaching his skin. The genuineness of his case is exemplified by the fact that, even as I write, he is now in hospital with a severe relapse of his condition."

He concludes:

"I feel that Nick is one of the genuinely deserving cases."

My hon. Friend the Minister will understand that I do not speak only of Nick Duff's case. Not only did Mr. Duff's father write in desperation to the Prime Minister—my hon. Friend will understand that not just Mr. Duff junior is affected; the whole family is placed under tremendous strain when dealing with such cases—but he wrote to every hon. Member about the case. I am pleased that hon. Members have stayed tonight to show support. I know from seeing their replies that they gave that support to Mr. Duff, and knowing that the House is willing to listen to their complaint and the wider issues has been of tremendous value to the family. Nearly 50 hon. Members replied in a supportive way, and some took the trouble to mention like cases among their own constituents.

Mr. Duff senior wrote to me about an incident which occurred at the end of November, which encapsulates how the strain impinges on the family. Mr. Duff junior was again housebound and Mr. and Mrs. Duff, having been called round, found the carpet around his chair literally covered in skin. He could not stand the complaint and could not stop scratching. When the doctor saw the skin that had been cleaned up, he was amazed at how much had exfoliated. That shows the severity of the condition, if that needed underlining.

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to reflect on whether the refusal was proper. Looking at some of the cases involved, there seems to be a potential confusion between section 73 of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, setting out the conditions for eligibility for the disability living allowance, and the regulation made thereunder—regulation 12 of the Social Security (Disability and Living Allowance) Regulations 1991. That sets out a slightly different approach for deciding whether a claimant is entitled to the mobility component of the disability living allowance. I do not ask for a definitive answer tonight, but I have told my hon. Friend where I see a potential difference. I do not intend to detain the House tonight by going through those regulations, but I do ask my hon. Friend to reflect on that and look again at the potential difference, particularly as it affects Mr. Duff's case, if not more generally.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. Hugh Bayley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, West (Mr. Hesford) on securing this Adjournment debate on an important matter concerning his constituent. My hon. Friend has made a solid reputation for himself as a powerful advocate here for his constituency and his constituents, and his speech this evening will enhance his reputation. I am glad to have the opportunity to respond to his points.

I have read the files on Mr. Duff's applications for disability living allowance, including the letters submitted by his consultant dermatologist, Professor Friedmann. I recognise that he suffers from a severe condition and, naturally, I sympathise with the difficulties that that causes him and his family.

Before speaking about Mr. Duff's case, it would be helpful to the House if I explained the reasons why disability living allowance is awarded. It is not, and has never been, awarded as compensation for disability. Nor is it awarded because an individual has a particular disabling condition. The level of the award is determined by the effect of a person's condition on his daily life—the level of care that the person needs and the effect of the condition on his mobility.

DLA has two components. One is paid in relation to the need for help with personal care. The other, which concerns us in this case, is paid in relation to mobility needs. The mobility component is paid at two rates. The higher rate, which we are discussing, is paid when an individual is unable, or virtually unable, to walk; or has had both legs amputated at, or above, the ankle; or was born without legs or feet; or is deaf and blind; or is severely mentally impaired and has severe behavioural problems. The lower rate is paid when an individual can walk, but needs someone with him to do so.

Decisions on awards are made by adjudication officers, who are statutory office holders and are required to make impartial decisions by applying the law to the facts of the individual case, based on the evidence before them. The primary source of evidence, in all cases, will always be the evidence provided by the claimant. However, evidence is collected from other sources such as the claimant's personal carer, a school, a physiotherapist or specialists and consultants involved in the claimant's care, as well as the claimant's general practitioner.

When adjudication officers consider an application for DLA, help and guidance are available from a variety of sources—for example, the "Disability Handbook", which is produced by doctors from my Department's medical policy group in close consultation with the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board. It explains the effects of a wide range of medical conditions on a person's everyday life and often suggests where the best corroborative evidence could be sought.

All entitlement decisions carry the right of independent review—my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, West raised that point—and, under review, a claim can be looked at afresh by a second adjudication officer, who can request additional evidence if necessary. If, following a review decision, the claimant remains unhappy, he has the right of appeal to an independent appeal tribunal. As the name suggests, that tribunal is entirely independent of the Department of Social Security. It provides a means of redress for people who feel that their case has been decided incorrectly by the Department. The tribunals are independent of the Government, so it is not open to Ministers to interfere with their decisions.

To summarise the benefit generally, DLA is paid not as compensation, but in accordance with the law, which sets out detailed conditions for entitlement. Claimants are provided with every opportunity to support their claim and to challenge decisions that they believe to be incorrect.

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire): On the general point, and before my hon. Friend the Minister moves on to Mr. Duff's case, he said that one category to which severe disability allowance automatically applies is double amputees; but it did not apply to double amputees a few years ago. I brought to the House the case of one of my constituents, which had many similarities to that of Mr. Duff. My constituent was in severe trouble and was a double amputee. A number of other cases were pressed by hon. Members and an adjustment was made to the law so that it applied to those cases. Mr. Duff may be in a category concerning an unusual area which has not been considered previously. There may need to be an adjustment in the law.

Mr. Bayley: My hon. Friend makes a useful intervention and, if I have time, I will refer to it later in my speech. The law states that the higher rate mobility component of DLA is paid to people who cannot or virtually cannot walk. Double amputees are covered for that reason.

I now turn to Mr. Duff's case. Mr. Duff had an award of disability living allowance higher rate mobility component, which was due to expire on 15 August 1997, and he asked for his claim to be renewed. Once the evidence had been studied, the adjudication officer determined that Mr. Duff was no longer entitled to DLA. From the information provided, it looks now as though a mistake was made when Mr. Duff was awarded DLA, and we had to correct that. I recognise that it has caused my hon. Friend's constituent considerable inconvenience and upset, and I apologise for that on behalf of my Department.

I appreciate that the withdrawal of Mr. Duff's DLA has been distressing for him and for his family. I also recognise my hon. Friend's very real concern that the decision in Mr. Duff's case was wrong. I have to say, however, that Mr. Duff's benefit was not withdrawn without proper consideration by the adjudication authorities.

Mr. Hesford: Will the Minister consider whether some of these adjudication officers are up to the job? Are they fully qualified to recognise what is in front of them?

Mr. Bayley: The adjudication officers are trained to work according to the law. They and the doctors employed by my Department often anger the people whose cases they consider, particularly when they turn down their applications for benefit. Sometimes, that is a natural reaction, but I accept that, on occasions, the way in which adjudication officers conduct their business, although strictly in accordance with the instructions they have been provided, gives rise to offence. My Department is seeking to improve the position. In consultation with bodies that represent disabled people, we are drawing up new programmes for further and additional training, so that those who deal with claims from disabled people are sensitive to the disability on which they are adjudicating.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): May I make a quick suggestion?

Mr. Bayley: I have only a few minutes left and, in fairness to our hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, West, who raised this case, I should reply to his points. If there is time later, I shall certainly give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Mr. Duff took full advantage of the system of review and appeal which I have just outlined. Two separate adjudication officers and an independent appeal tribunal have agreed that Mr. Duff is not entitled to the mobility component of DLA because he can walk.

There is case law from the Court of Appeal. In 1996, in the case of Diment and Hewitt—two individuals with serious skin conditions in which the ultraviolet rays in sunlight caused blistering, lesions and irritation—the Court of Appeal agreed that the conditions of entitlement relating to the higher rate of the DLA mobility component were not satisfied because the reaction to sunlight was not related to the act of walking. In addition, it found that entitlement arose only when the severe discomfort was as a result of the physical act of walking.

As to the eligibility criteria for DLA, it has long been accepted that the current tests of the need for help with care and mobility reflect the effect of a disability and the associated extra costs. The criteria are based on the findings of research undertaken by the Office for Population, Censuses and Surveys in the 1980s, which led to the development of DLA.

My hon. Friend referred to a possible discrepancy between the 1992 Act and the regulations. I have looked into that, and I do not think that there is a discrepancy. However, he has asked me to review the matter, and I shall do so. I shall write to him on that point.

My hon. Friend expressed concern about the delay that claimants often face between appealing against a decision on benefit entitlement and getting that appeal heard. He is right to do so. Average waiting times are currently running at around seven months, which is clearly unacceptable. In fact, it is one of the main reasons for the Government's root-and-branch overhaul of the adjudication system, which is well on the way to implementation. The Social Security Act 1998 laid the foundations for a new system, and regulations implementing that will soon be presented to the House.

My hon. Friend mentioned the loss of his constituent's letter to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. I accept that that happened, and it should not have happened. I also accept that Mr. Duff's case has not been dealt with well by my Department. Mr. Duff has experienced both delay and mismanagement, and I apologise to him for that. I hope that my hon. Friend will pass on my apologies.

This is not the service that a member of the public is entitled to expect—

Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.34 am

Maria Eagle (Liverpool, Garston): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Before making my introductory remarks, I should make a declaration of interest. Since 1 January 1999, I have received staff assistance from the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and Respect for Animals in preparing the Bill and dealing with issues arising directly from my choice of subject for my private Member's Bill.

I am grateful for my good fortune—at least, many say that it is good fortune, although over the past few days I have been wondering quite how good it is—in coming so high in the private Members' ballot and so having a chance to present my Bill to the House. Like all those who have had the same opportunity, I spent many difficult hours deciding how to use it. Finally, I decided to deal with a small matter. Fur farming is no longer a massive industry in this country, but it is one that is controversial in many ways: many object to it and believe that it perpetrates cruelty to the animals involved. My Bill would prohibit fur farming in this country.

Fur farming has been going on in Great Britain for 70 years. It began in this country in 1929 and still exists here, albeit in a small way. There are now 11 fur farmers and 13 fur farms remaining, all in England. That represents a precipitate decline in numbers over the past 30 years or so, as, back in the 1960s, there were 700 fur farms. As far as the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I are aware, the only animal still farmed in this country is mink. Mink are not indigenous to this country, but are natives of north America.

Fur farming is the intensive breeding of essentially wild animals, mink in this country and other animals elsewhere, although until recently fox, too, was farmed in this country. Because the animals have to be kept and bred intensively, they are kept in relatively small cages and are unable to exhibit their natural behaviour. They live relatively short lives in some distress prior to being slaughtered for their fur.

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): I am sure that the House will be keen to learn when the hon. Lady last visited a mink farm, how many times she has visited mink farms and how much time she has spent studying mink.

Maria Eagle: I have arranged to visit two farms. Since I decided to take up the Bill, I have had some difficulty in arranging to visit a farm.

Mr. Gray: None?

Maria Eagle: If the hon. Gentleman will allow me, I shall complete my answer. Then, if he wants to intervene again, he can.

Mr. John Austin (Erith and Thamesmead): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Maria Eagle: I shall finish answering the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) and then give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Thamesmead (Mr. Austin).

I had an arrangement to visit one farm, although it took me some time to get through the obstruction of the British Fur Trade Association, which controls access to mink farms. Since taking up the Bill, I have attempted to visit mink farms and I asked the BFTA to allow me to visit two. It offered a visit to only one farm—a farm in the west country, to which visitors are always taken—and I made it clear that I should be happy to visit that farm. However, the association would not allow me to visit any other farm. I said that I would visit the farm that the trade association wanted me to visit, but only if I was allowed to visit another.

I am happy to say that an arrangement has, at last, been made. I was due to visit one of the farms on Tuesday, but, because of the sudden onset of what I assure the hon. Gentleman was a rather painful medical condition, I had to cancel the trip. However, I hope to rearrange it as soon as possible, and I have every intention of visiting at least two of the remaining farms. That is not a bad percentage, given that there are only 13 fur farms left. Now, I give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Thamesmead.

Mr. Austin: I was merely going to make the point that, although I had never been to South Africa, that did not make it impossible for me to conclude that apartheid was an obscene evil. Has my hon. Friend, like me, never seen bear baiting, but would agree that it is an obscene spectacle?

Maria Eagle: My hon. Friend makes a valid point. I want to be reasonable: I recognise that my Bill would make unlawful something that until now has been lawful in this country, and I realise that that, in itself, is draconian. I recognise that I have an obligation to visit fur farms, so I have done my utmost to do so. However, I agree with my hon. Friend that it is perfectly possible to conclude, without having seen it, that that sort of rearing of wild animals is not acceptable. I believe that, but I assure the hon. Member for North Wiltshire that I shall visit fur farms.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): I do not believe that my hon. Friend will be invited to the Swalesmoor fur farm in my constituency, which prosecuted Lynx in 1989. The farm was described as a hell-hole, and from what I saw of the conditions there for mink, that description was absolutely correct. The mink were living in their own filth and were self-mutilating. Unfortunately, Lynx lost the court case because, I understand, the judge had a fondness for hunting. The fur farm is a hell-hole, and it still exists. Because of the violent methods that are used at the fur farm, I am sure that my hon. Friend would not be welcome if she tried to visit.

Maria Eagle: In view of what my hon. Friend says, I may attempt to visit that fur farm, and I should be happy if she could facilitate a visit. Certainly, the British Fur Trade Association, which represents the farmers, has been unable to facilitate that visit, although I have been attempting for some time to go there.

Mr. Desmond Swayne (New Forest, West): May I warn the hon. Lady to strengthen her stomach—indeed, to go with an empty stomach—when she visits a mink farm? I have visited such places.

In respect of what was said by the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), it is worth noting that many convictions have been secured against the keepers of mink. However, no matter how far access to fur farms for the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) has been restricted by the British Fur Trade Association, access to the mink farm in my constituency has not been restricted far enough, and disastrous consequences have followed for the natural fauna surrounding it.

Maria Eagle: The hon. Gentleman is referring to the fur farm in his constituency that was one of those that suffered from the release of mink, however it was perpetrated. I appreciate his concern, and I shall refer further to the effect of the release of mink.

First, however, I come to the long title of the Bill, which explains as fully as possible precisely what is to be prohibited if the Bill becomes law. The Bill's purpose is:

"To prohibit the keeping of animals with a view to their slaughter solely or primarily for the commercial value of their fur, and for related purposes."

The question of whether the animals are being kept solely or primarily for the commercial value of their fur would be a matter for the courts, and it could be dealt with on the basis of evidence before the courts. I do not seek to define what is kept primarily for that purpose; it is a matter for the courts to decide.

Clause 1 establishes the offence. Clauses 2 to 4 bestow necessary powers on the courts so that they may make the legislation effective. The main purpose of my Bill is to allow the Minister, should he so wish, to establish a scheme under which compensation could be paid to existing fur farm businesses that would have to close if the Bill were enacted.

We are speaking of small numbers of fur farms. As I have said, only 13 remain, and there are only 11 farmers. However, my Bill provides for compensation, as I hope its opponents will note. I do not believe that it is legally necessary to compensate, but it would be preferable to do so. That is why the provision is in the Bill, and I am grateful that the Government have been persuadable on compensation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg (Sleaford and North Hykeham): The hon. Lady touches on compensation, saying that it is preferable that it should be paid. Would she answer two points? First, if that is her view, why is the obligation to pay compensation not mandatory? Secondly, losses are defined so as to exclude loss of income. In other words, businesses may receive some compensation, but the main loss that they will suffer—revenue—is put outside the compensation regime.

Maria Eagle: I understand those points. There are arguments on both sides of them. They are suitable points for the Committee stage, should the Bill succeed in obtaining a Second Reading. I am sure that those points will be raised in Committee by the Bill's opponents.

As a more newish Back Bencher, I found that obtaining the Government's agreement to having a money order for a private Member's Bill was a sufficiently difficult task without my laying down the law about figures. As the Member promoting the Bill, it is not for me to decide on the precise compensation. The right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) can see that the clause sets out a methodology by which to work it out. The Bill also allows for negotiation between the parties over what should be compensated for, and allows for an independent appeals process so that farmers who are dissatisfied about the final determination may appeal to an independent body—the Lands Tribunal. An independent decision can therefore be made on what compensation they should be paid.

I thank the Government for their support in introducing the Bill. It is unusual to allow private Members' Bills to spend Government money, and it was not easy to get the Government to agree to that. I am glad to have their agreement, as compensation is a vital part of the Bill. In due course, when orders are laid, if the Bill becomes law, I trust that the matter will be dealt with amicably and that farmers who lose their businesses will be satisfied. I have every expectation that that will be the case.

In order to define what the Bill is about, I should say something of what it is not about. There has been hysteria among some opponents of the Bill who have sought to suggest that it is the thin end of a wedge that will affect a much wider range of farming. That is not my intention. The Bill is not about banning fur as a by-product. It is not intended to bring about, and nor will it, the banning of the use of fur where fur is a by-product of, for example, food production. Where rabbits, for example, are produced for food, the Bill will not prohibit that.

The Bill is not about banning the production of skins as a by-product of food production. It has been suggested that cattle hide and leather might be banned as a result of the Bill, but that is simply nonsensical. Where animals are produced primarily for food, nothing in the Bill will prevent the use of their skins or fur as a by-product. The Bill is not about prohibiting the wearing, purchase, sale or trade of fur. It will not prohibit other elements of the fur trade.

What the Bill does seek to prohibit is the cruel exploitation of what are essentially wild animals for an unessential luxury item—their fur. Opponents of the Bill will doubtless tell me that others would go further than I do, and that is true. Many supporters of the Bill would like other elements of animal husbandry to be changed. They may wish to see fur banned. Those are matters for them—the Bill is not intended to go along that path.

The Bill is not the thin end of a dangerous wedge. It is narrow in its scope and application. It is a simple, straightforward Bill with simple and obvious objectives. That makes it suitable for the private Member's Bill procedure. I should be foolish indeed to seek to ban the entire fur trade by way of a private Member's Bill. It would require far too many clauses, and opponents would be able to stop me in my tracks.

I aim simply to end a barbaric practice that is already in severe decline. Public opinion is with me, and it has been so for some time. In the latest opinion poll commissioned by the RSPCA, 74 per cent. of those questioned thought that fur farming should be banned. Opposition Members who are disinclined to support my Bill may think that I am pursuing a populist measure, but they should note that 86 per cent. of those questioned thought that the wearing of fur was unacceptable, and I do not seek to ban that.

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): Is the hon. Lady saying that legislation can, or should, be justified by opinion poll ratings? Is she prepared to allow that principle to be extrapolated to other issues? If she is, we may explore the idea further later this morning.

Maria Eagle: I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for his intervention, even if no one else is, and I understand his point. I do not seek to justify the Bill on the basis of opinion polling; I am merely calling to my aid, as one point in my speech, the latest opinion polling.

My overwhelming concerns in introducing the Bill, which I am about to discuss in more detail if hon. Members will forgive me, are animal welfare considerations. Mink, which are farmed in this country, are still essentially wild, not domesticated. They prefer to live alone in the wild and are territorial, ranging over territories between 1 to 3 km wide. They are known to keep a number of dens on their territories and to move between them. They are semi-aquatic animals with semi-webbed feet and therefore like to spend much of their time playing and hunting in water.

It is impossible, in farm conditions in this country or any other, for mink to display their natural behaviour while being kept in small, barren cages. I remind the House that the cages in which mink are typically kept measure merely 90 cm by 30 cm by 30 to 40 cm. Those cages often hold more than one mink. Being kept in that way makes it impossible for mink display their natural behaviour. They react by being stressed.

Mr. Hogg: Will the hon. Lady accept that to call mink a wild creature is to overlook the time that they have been held in those conditions? Many generations have been held in captivity and the genetic pool has changed between the existing generation and the wild creature.

Will the hon. Lady further accept that her point about creatures exercising their natural tendencies also applies to chickens, which are kept in battery cages, and many of us find that as objectionable as anything that she has described?

Maria Eagle: The right hon. and learned Gentleman makes a point that I had anticipated. Those who do not object to the fur trade argue that mink in captivity are no longer wild. However, there is evidence on both sides of the argument. Mink have been farmed in this country for only 70 years. While there may have been 70 generations of mink in that time, the right hon. and learned Gentleman should consider how long other animals in this country have been domesticated. It has taken thousands of years to breed the typical domesticated animals that we see on farms.

Mr. Hogg: The domesticated pig is very different from the wild hog.

Maria Eagle: I am interested in the fact that the right hon. and learned Gentleman is able to joke about himself—that is a very endearing feature.

It is not possible to be certain that animals that have been farmed for only 70 years are domesticated. One need only consider what occurs when they escape or are released. They become feral extremely quickly and are perfectly able to survive in the wild. They immediately revert to their natural behaviour. Some of the mink that have been released in the past couple of years have been found, within a day or two, three or four miles away from the farms. They have attacked and killed, as is their nature, local wildlife. There is a great deal of evidence that mink kept in captivity are still wild.

There is clear evidence also that mink in captivity display a far higher level of stereotypical distressed behaviour than other animals—including chickens, which the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham mentioned—that are kept in confined conditions. That is why I say that mink are still effectively wild.

Until recently in this country, we farmed fox. Most people would not argue that the fox is domesticated, and when foxes were kept in captivity they displayed an even greater incidence of stereotypical behaviour associated with stress and distress.

Dr. Nick Palmer (Broxtowe): Does my hon. Friend agree that most geneticists believe that it is not possible to change an animal's genetic make-up and instinctive behaviour by imposing on particular generations a certain behaviour pattern or even physical changes? Under Stalin, Lysenko tried to propagate the belief that it was possible, and it was very widely discredited after that.

Maria Eagle: My hon. Friend's point is interesting, but if he will forgive me I will stick to the subject of breeding animals.

The animals are bred for their fur and its different colours rather than to try to make them more docile. In any event, if it is possible to domesticate an animal, I do not believe that it can be done in only 70 generations.

[Maria Eagle]

I am not alone in suggesting that mink kept on farms suffer worse welfare problems than other, domesticated animals. The Farm Animal Welfare Council, which advises the Government on technical and welfare issues, said in 1989:

"Mink (and fox) have been bred in captivity for only about 50-60 generations"—

as I said, it is now about 70 generations—

"and the Council is particularly concerned about the keeping of what are essentially wild animals in small barren cages. The Council believes that the systems employed in the farming of mink and fox do not satisfy some of the most basic criteria which it has identified for protecting the welfare of farm animals. The current cages used for fur farming do not appear to provide appropriate comfort or shelter, and do not allow the animals freedom to display most normal patterns of behaviour."

In my view, it would not be possible to provide sufficiently improved conditions on farms to justify retaining fur farming in this country.

The industry has been declining precipitately, perhaps even more so since the Farm Animal Welfare Council made that statement in 1989. Since then, the number of farms has fallen from 61 to 13. Since 1980, the UK market for fur has declined by 99 per cent. Many owners of fur farms have already gone out of business. Now is the time to deal with the remaining 13 farms, pay proper compensation to those farmers and end the practice.

Mr. Gray: The hon. Lady is right to say that fur farming in the United Kingdom has declined hugely in recent years, but is she not aware that the use of fur and its farming around the world has significantly increased in that time? As recently as this morning, The Daily Telegraph reports that fur, particularly mink, is the latest fashion accessory. Is not the hon. Lady concerned that her Bill might drive fur farming offshore and thereby reduce the standards in which mink are kept in overseas fur farms?

Maria Eagle: I do not know how my measure would reduce existing standards anywhere else. I recognise the hon. Gentleman's implication that I cannot legislate across the world or even across Europe, but only in this country, as I seek to do.

In addition to the statement by the Farm Animal Welfare Council, I have a letter dated 8 February from Professor Broom, referring to his study called, "The welfare of farmed mink and foxes in relation to housing and management." He said:

"Based on all the research to date I conclude that the welfare of mink and foxes is always poor in the cages at present in use on fur farms in the UK. Many of the needs of the animals are not met. I have presented such scientific information on several occasions at the Council of Europe Standing Committee on the Convention for the Protection of Animals Kept for Farming Purposes. The fur farmers show no signs of making significant changes to their cages."

They could not afford to do so in the current economic climate. That is why my Bill will end the practice and compensate farmers. It would be most unfair to require much higher standards of welfare when it is evident that farmers are unable to invest in the industry because of its precipitate decline.

Mrs. Ann Winterton (Congleton) rose—

Maria Eagle: I must get on, but I will give way.

Mrs. Winterton: I am most grateful. Before the hon. Lady leaves the issue of animal welfare, will she say whether she has consulted, in any way, shape or form, the veterinary profession which is the profession most interested in and responsible for animal welfare? For example, has she consulted the British Veterinary Association or the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons?

Maria Eagle: I have had letters from veterinary organisations, but I am afraid that I do not have them with me. I shall have to drop the hon. Lady a line to give her details of what those letters said. I have also had discussions with vets who regularly visit fur farms, especially vets attached to the RSPCA. I know that they have concerns similar to the ones that I have expressed, but I accept that some vets might not. I have no problem with that; I realise that there are arguments on both sides. I accept that some vets may believe that the current situation is acceptable; I do not, and there are many vets who do not. I must now get on with my speech so that others have a chance to speak in this debate.

Several minor arguments have been put to me to as to why the Bill should not proceed. One is that it would have a severe effect on employment. I have been trying, through the British Fur Trade Association, to find out how many people are employed on the remaining fur farms, but I have not had a satisfactory answer. I have been sent some figures which suggest that, across Europe, there is an average of four employees per farm. I do not believe that there are that many per farm in this country. However, even if there were four per farm, we would be talking about 44 jobs. It is always regrettable when people lose their livelihood, but, in this case, I believe that it is acceptable to lose a small number of jobs in order to put an end to this cruel practice.

I have also been told that the Bill would have a major economic impact on the areas around the farms. A figure of £1 million has been quoted to me by the British Fur Trade Association in respect of a particular farm in the west country. I was told in a letter that that figure is based on the cost of a blue iris pelt being £47. My information is that at the latest auction at the Copenhagen fur centre in February this year, the price of a female blue iris pelt was not £47 but US$24.5, or £15.30; and male pelts sold for US$33, or £21. I therefore take the figures that I have been given in respect of the Bill's general economic impact as unproven. I shall not be ungenerous. I accept that there will be an economic impact on the farmers, which is why the Bill contains provisions for compensation.

Farms have other impacts on their local areas. My hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) referred to the experience in her local area. I shall read to the House a letter from Brigadier Tynan in support of the Bill. He is the chairman of the Crow Hill and district residents association and has a fur farm very close to his own property. He states:

"Apart from the main thrust relating to cruelty there is a secondary aspect which may be helpful in discussion. My house is about 400 yards from a mink farm and there are several other properties in this residential area which are very much nearer. May I tell you that an abominable fetid stench emanates from the farm, especially when the mink population is at its peak as the slaughtering time approaches. Believe me, this disgusting smell is unique and quite different from the 'honest farmyard smell' which we all know."

Brigadier Tynan goes on to say that the discarded food and other by-products—I am being polite—on the site are

"breeding grounds generating myriads of flies which infest the area in the late Spring and Summer. To my certain knowledge, this considerable nuisance and potential health hazard has been the subject of complaint for many years. It has been pursued regularly and energetically by the District Council with limited and unenduring success. This official activity, resulting in the imposition of fines in the Magistrates Court on no fewer than three occasions, has not had any significant lasting effect."

One assumes that the local council prosecuted under the nuisance provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990—a different kind of prosecution. In other words, these farms are not universally liked by people who have the dubious pleasure of living nearby.

I shall read from a letter sent by Professor Harris, chairman of the Mammal Society. He also supports the Bill. He writes:

"The Mammal Society works to protect British mammals, halt the decline of threatened species, and advises on all issues affecting British mammals. We promote conservation and other policies based on sound science.

The Mammal Society is very concerned about mink farming in Britain. Mink are wild animals, not domesticated, and the welfare argument against the continued farming of this species are clear. We are further concerned about the potential impact of this species on British wildlife. Mink have played a major contributory role in the dramatic decline of the water vole (the population has declined by approximately 95 per cent. this century), and their impact on breeding populations of birds, especially sea-birds on off-shore islands which previously had no terrestrial predator."

He concludes:

"Without an end to mink farming, further escapes . . . are inevitable, and this will compound the problems already posed by free-living mink."

There are environmental impacts when mink are released deliberately or when they escape. They establish feral populations and threaten our indigenous wildlife, something which should concern the House.

Because I have taken several interventions, I have detained the House for long enough. I do not wish to use up all the time allocated for this debate, but want to leave enough time for other to speak.

As we approach the new millennium, it is up to the House to set the standards that we want for the next one, and to set the parameters within which society should operate—that applies equally to ourselves and to animals. I hope that the House will take this opportunity to say, as the Farm Animal Welfare Council did some 10 years ago, that keeping wild animals in small barren cages simply to obtain an unessential luxury product is unacceptable. It is not necessary to believe that animals have rights in order to believe that human beings have obligations towards them. Let us put an end to the cruel barbaric practice of fur farming and take this opportunity to do it. I commend the Bill to the House.

10.7 am

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): Given the interest that the Bill clearly generates and the desire of many hon. Members to speak, it may be helpful if at this stage I make a few remarks on behalf of the official Opposition. First—this will unite hon. Members on both sides of the House—I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) for the way in which she introduced the Bill. Anyone who has steered a Bill through the House knows that, even for Ministers, who benefit from help from the civil service, it is a daunting experience. For the hon. Lady to put everything together as she has is a remarkable achievement.

It seems to me that the main consideration today has to be the welfare of the mink—that is the beginning and end of the argument. If mink could not be farmed humanely, mink farming would have to go—despite the devastating effect that that would have on the livelihood of those engaged in it. It is as simple as that.

At one end of the spectrum are the people who say that all farming is ultimately immoral. That notion will probably appeal even to some hon. Members, but I do not think it will appeal to the majority. I certainly reject it.

The Bill is predicated on two assumptions. First, it assumes that, under the present law, even if properly enforced and observed, mink cannot be farmed humanely. Secondly, it assumes that it would be impossible to devise any system whereby mink could be farmed humanely.

I claim no special expertise in this matter. I come to the subject with a long-standing interest in animal welfare. I have read widely; I have received many letters; and I have made a point of visiting one of the country's leading fur farms to test at first hand what I have been told about the industry. I express my thanks to Michael Cobbledick for allowing me to visit him at his fur farm in Cornwall, for answering straightforwardly and unequivocally the questions that I put to him, and for allowing me free access to his farm. I understand the problems that the hon. Member for Garston may have had, given the demands on her time in putting the Bill together, but I wish that she had been able to visit as many fur farms as she wanted.

While I commend the hon. Member for Garston for the fact that she is still prepared to visit fur farms, that is a bit like saying that one is prepared to consider the possibility of a reprieve after the execution. That approach has a certain theoretical charm, but the hon. Lady will have missed an opportunity—whether or not fur farming should be abolished—of seeing for herself that to describe all fur farming and fur farmers as indulging in a barbaric practice may not be the way forward.

Mr. Gray: Is my hon. Friend aware that the Minister was invited to visit a fur farm this time last year? He declined because he felt that it would not make much difference, as he knew what conditions on a fur farm were like already. Does that not stand in stark contrast to the approach of my hon. Friend, who has visited fur farms to find out what happens?

Mr. Nicholls: Yes, it does. I had assumed that the Minister had visited fur farms, and we will find in due course whether that is the position. It will be surprising if he has not. I always enjoy debating with the Minister, and he will say in due course how he has been able to reach a conclusion—if he has reached one—without seeing one particular part of the evidence.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Elliot Morley): I have looked at the issue for many years and have visited fur farms privately. I was invited by Mr. Cobbledick and the Fur Breeders Association, who wanted to offer me an all expenses paid trip to Denmark. I thought that it would be inappropriate to accept that invitation.

Mr. Nicholls: Not only would it have been inappropriate: the Minister would have been unable to accept under the rules of the House. I am sure that he would be able to see fur farms in this country, and that it would not take all expenses paid trips to do so. However, we may find ourselves being diverted into discussing who takes expenses-paid trips in helicopters. I am not quite sure that the Minister would want to do that.

On the evidence that I have seen, I have not been able to conclude that it would be impossible to conduct fur farming humanely. I was helped in considering the evidence by a Library paper produced by Stephen McGinness and Patsy Hughes, which many hon. Members will have seen. The paper says:

"The scientific evidence for animal welfare and fur farms remains in its infancy. There is, however, little support for the claim that it would be impossible to provide good welfare for captive mink."

I telephoned Mr. McGinness, and he was content that I should relay his response to the House. He told me that, in its first draft, the paper said that there was no support for the claim that it would be impossible to provide good welfare for captive mink. On reflection, however, he took the view that, as he could not logically prove that no evidence existed at all, it would be more accurate to say that there was little evidence.

Mr. Andrew Dismore (Hendon): Will the hon. Gentleman read another quote from the Library briefing, which says:

"There is solid evidence of shortcomings in the current standards of welfare and that some methods of killing fur-bearing animals are inhumane"?

Mr. Nicholls: Of course there is some evidence of people falling short of the present law, and I shall deal with that in a moment. If the hon. Gentleman—who is, as I recall from previous exchanges, a distinguished lawyer—is going to turn round and say that because some people may fall short of the standards of a profession, that profession should be abolished, he will not have a profession to return to after the next election, when he will need one. That was not quite as good a point as the hon. Gentleman may have thought.

That conclusion from two impartial House of Commons researchers will surprise many people in the country. By the looks of it, it has surprised many Labour Members. Facts are sometimes surprising and, in this House, we should be guided by the facts.

Angela Smith (Basildon): If the hon. Gentleman is so convinced that there are far more humane ways to rear mink for their fur, why have they not been adopted already?

Mr. Nicholls: If the Bill is to succeed, it will be necessary to show not only that it is impossible to farm mink humanely under present conditions, but that mink cannot be farmed humanely in any circumstances.

I want the Minister to address the fundamental proposition that mink cannot be farmed humanely. I do not know whether this is a hand-out Bill from the Government or not. [Interruption.] There would be nothing wrong if it were. The Government have made perfectly clear in opposition and in government that it is their intention to outlaw fur farming. I do not know whether they intend to back the Bill today. I see the Minister nodding his assent. This is a reasonable opportunity for the Government to address the fundamental proposition—can mink be farmed humanely or not?

There are those who will justify on an almost theological basis their desire for abolition: the sort of people who believe that their genuine and sincere conviction is sufficient justification to use this Parliament to impose that conviction on others, and who believe that any reference to science—unless, of course, that science supports their predetermined conviction—is heartless equivocation. I reject that approach—as, I hope, does the Minister.

We have an existing framework of law. Again, that surprises many of those who have written to me, who believe that, in some curious way, fur farming is outside the ambit of present law. There is a substantial body of European and domestic law dealing with fur farming. There is the European Union directive on farm animal welfare, adopted in 1998; the Mink Keeping Order 1997; the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1999; the European convention on the protection of animals kept for farming purposes of 1991; the Mink Keeping Regulations 1975; the Mink Keeping (Amendment) Regulations 1998; and the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Regulations 1968.

Fur farmers already have a substantial body of law with which to comply. Clearly, that does not mean that the law cannot be reformed. However, it does mean that fur farming cannot legally be carried out in the cruel and capricious way that many of those who have written to me clearly believe it is.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas (Harrow, West): Will the hon. Gentleman respond to the comments of the Farm Animal Welfare Council in 1989, as referred to by my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle)? The council said that fur farming does not meet all the basic welfare needs of what are essentially wild animals. Will he say why there has been no reform to drive up welfare standards?

Mr. Nicholls: There has indeed, and I will come to that perfectly fair point in my speech.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): We hear allegations that mink farms are hell-holes. Does my hon. Friend agree that if that were the case, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—which inspects such farms regularly—would have been failing in its duties?

Mr. Nicholls: Yes, and it would mean that the system was breaking down. This picks up on the point made by the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), who suggested that, because the law had been broken, abolition should automatically take place. There is no doubt—it is evident to anyone who has visited a fur farm—that if the law were properly observed and enforced, as it should be, it would be quite impossible in law for hell-holes to exist. If the present law were observed, I see no reason why barbaric practices should be able to take place. The Minister may wish to address that matter. If it is the Government's contention that the present law is not adequate to deal with some of the outrages about which we have heard, one wonders why it has taken so long for action to take place.

What are the arguments for the proposition that mink cannot be farmed humanely? There are two, and the hon. Member for Garston, to her credit, addressed both. First, it is said that mink are essentially wild. Secondly, it is said that mink are aquatic animals, condemned to live out their existence in a water-free environment. I will address both, briefly. Clearly, mink were once wild—indeed, all farm animals were at one time wild. However, the proposition is whether they can be considered wild now.

There is some authority for that view, albeit from the continent—although I see nothing particularly wrong with that. The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is twitching a bit, but this is not a day for him and me to share our European prejudices.

In his paper, "Re the zoological status of farmed fur animals", written in June 1993, Professor Knud Erik Heller of the Institute of Population Biology in Denmark said:

"From a scientific point of view, fur animals that have been domesticated for more than ten generations must be considered as so far genetically removed from their ancestors that they have to be treated as fully domesticated species."

In a paper entitled "Production conditions, behaviour and welfare of farmed mink", Dr. Steffen Hanson of the National Institute of Animal Science in Denmark says:

"Significant behaviour and physiological changes achieved through domestication therefore make it unreasonable to make direct comparisons between farmed mink and their relations in the wild, when considering their welfare."

I note in passing the reference to 10 generations. I understand that, in this country, we are into the 80th generation.

Perhaps most interesting of all was the report by Professor P.R. Wiepkema who, in a submission to the Dutch Government at their request on the implications of fur farming, said:

"Mink have unmistakably gone down the path of domestication. They display the majority of characteristics of domestic animals: they are not shy. They are inquisitive, sometimes even hand tame, and they grow and reproduce without any great problems."

In summary, he says:

"Mink kept on the farm can be considered as domestic animals."

I have handled mink and ferrets, and I must tell the hon. Member for Garston that she would be safer handling mink than ferrets.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend has quoted studies undertaken in Denmark and Holland. Does he accept that, for many years, the Governments and Parliaments of Denmark and Holland have shown themselves to be as sensitive to animal welfare issues as has this House?

Mr. Nicholls: That is my understanding.

It is interesting and informative to refer to academic studies. There is nothing wrong with being a campaigning organisation, be it the Farm Animal Welfare Council or any other, but when we are trying to reach a conclusion it is more relevant to consider academic evidence on both sides of the argument than simply to say that a campaigning organisation, with great sincerity, happens to believe that something is wrong.

Maria Eagle: The hon. Gentleman is making an interesting speech, which inclines me to think that the official Opposition may oppose the Bill. Do they intend to do so?

Mr. Nicholls: The official Opposition will not oppose the Bill, but we believe that fundamental questions must be answered before the Bill is passed. I am presenting the arguments in this way because, given the rational way in which the hon. Lady has introduced the measure—in contrast to some of those who purportedly support her—I believe that the assertion that there is a case to be made will appeal to her. Ultimately, whether the Bill is successful will depend on Ministers' attitude, so I believe that Ministers must answer some questions.

Mr. Swayne: My hon. Friend will appreciate that some of us are sceptical of academic studies, as we were of a certain Bateson report. Does he accept that it is incredible to expect a chicken or cow to escape and live in the wild as mink populations do? We now have feral mink populations in the countryside.

Mr. Nicholls: My hon. Friend may have more experience than I do about what happens to cows and chickens when they escape into the wild; I do not know. Certainly if their wings and beaks—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. I thank the hon. Member for returning to address the Chair.

Mr. Nicholls: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Obviously, some animals are better equipped for returning to the wild than others, but today we are discussing mink, not whether we should release or prevent the husbandry of chickens and cows.

Academic evidence exists that casts doubt on whether mink are wild. My hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) approaches academic evidence with scepticism, as he should, but academic evidence cannot simply be dismissed if it does not fit one's predetermined views.

Mr. Dismore: The hon. Gentleman quoted some of the academic ideas that support the keeping of mink. Perhaps he would comment on whether there has been academic research on killing methods. The Library research paper suggests that there is no humane method of killing mink. It deals with gassing and the possible stresses and traumas that that causes mink. It deals with the possibility of drugging the animals before they are killed and refers to the significant stresses, difficulties and cruelty that that may cause. Have any of the academic studies addressed the final solution for mink—the way that they are killed and the cruelty involved?

Mr. Nicholls: The hon. Gentleman has obviously reached a conclusion. He is entitled to do so, and doubtless he will argue in his speech that it is impossible to kill mink humanely. I have not read the evidence that supports that proposition. If there is evidence that supports that proposition conclusively, that will be an end of the matter. The hon. Gentleman's remarks would be better made to the Minister because if, uniquely among farm animals, it is impossible to kill mink humanely, one wonders how they can be killed at all under the present law.

I believe that the hon. Gentleman comes from an urban background. If he thinks that the killing of animals, for food or fur, is an attractive process whereby animals can be laid to sleep in a way that is completely undistressing for them or for those who must take part in that process, he should visit a slaughterhouse.

Mr. Dismore: I grew up in east Yorkshire, which is not known for its great urban sprawl; it is the heart of farming country. However, may I quote to the hon. Gentleman the Library research paper on the need to kill the animals without spoiling their pelts?

"This means that killing methods have be employed other than those accepted as humane for food animals such as cattle and sheep."

Mr. Nicholls: If the hon. Gentleman takes the view that it is impossible to kill mink humanely, he will support the Bill. However, he should ask the Minister why, if it is impossible to kill mink humanely, the process is taking place at the moment.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Nicholls: I give way to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock).

Mr. Mike Hancock (Portsmouth, South): On the hon. Gentleman's many visits to mink farms, did he witness the mink being killed? If so, I should be grateful if he would describe to the House what he saw.

Mr. Nicholls: I have visited only one mink farm and I was not there when the mink were harvested, so I cannot give any information about that. However, the fact that I made that one visit probably distinguishes me from many of the hon. Members who are now seeking to intervene.

Mr. Ian Cawsey (Brigg and Goole): It does the hon. Gentleman credit that he visited a farm. Many of his arguments are about whether mink are domesticated, and he seems to have concluded, "mink—not as bad as you think." He says that academic research might back up that claim, but does he accept that when mink escaped—and there were mink escapes last year—there was not much evidence that they had become domesticated? I believe that the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) would agree that when mink returned to the wild, they showed all their natural wild tendencies.

Mr. Nicholls: They certainly showed some of their vicious tendencies, because that is in their nature. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman goes ferreting very often, but it is commonly accepted that ferrets are domesticated animals, and they are difficult and can be vicious.

I said that the two arguments that are advanced for the proposition that mink cannot be farmed humanely are first, that they are wild—I have pointed out such evidence as is available to support that proposition—and secondly, that they are aquatic and that therefore they cannot be suitable to be held in captivity.

In his report, Professor Wiepkema said, on the question whether mink should be provided with swimming water:

"In close connection with their supposed wild nature it is often postulated that farmed mink need swimming water. It should be apparent from point 2.2 that feral mink intensively use the waterside (and the water) as a foraging area, but also may leave it at their own initiative. This opportunistic foraging behaviour leads me to the conclusion that swimming and fishing water is agreeable to the mink, but presumably not crucial. There are also no indications from the limited research done so far that mink, outside of their foraging behaviour, need water."

He summarises:

"On the farm swimming or fishing water is not an absolute necessity for mink."

Angela Smith: Given the hon. Gentleman's remarks about mink swimming, will he comment on the point made by Robert Morgan of the British Fur Trade Association, who said:

"If mink"—

"had access to swimming water, then they would get wet and probably get cold and die."

Mr. Nicholls: I am not here for the British Fur Trade Association. I am here to put the proposition to the House—I think that it is a fair one—that the Bill deserves to succeed if it can be shown that mink cannot be farmed humanely under present conditions and that it is impossible to devise humane conditions in which they could be. I have set out the evidence for those two propositions.

Having said that, could the position of mink be improved? Of course, the answer to that is yes. The conditions of any farm animals can certainly be improved. Professor Wiepkema's report to the Dutch Government now forms the basis of new progressive standards being introduced in Holland in line with the revised Council of Europe recommendation on fur farming.

Mr. Thomas: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Nicholls: I have given way at least once to the hon. Gentleman and I must make some progress before I do so again.

I want to hear how the Minister answers this aspect of the debate. It seems that a number of points are emerging. First, such scientific evidence as there is specifically rejects the proposition that mink cannot be farmed humanely. Secondly, there are already pan-European measures in place to secure the welfare of mink. Thirdly, the British fur trade has apparently committed itself to raising standards. Fourthly, following the Dutch initiative, those improvements are in hand.

In November 1997, when talking in the House about fur farming and mink farming in Europe, the Minister said that the Government would be working with the Council of Europe to ensure the adoption of the highest possible standards consistent with scientific evidence and expert opinion. I think the Minister was right to say that. We will need to know whether he believes that Holland and virtually the whole of the European Union are wrong and are conniving at an inherently cruel practice that cannot take place except in certain circumstances of cruelty.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that specific point?

Mr. Nicholls: I give way for a third time to the hon. Gentleman, but that is it.

Mr. Thomas: To help the hon. Gentleman, this is the second time that he has given way to me.

The hon. Gentleman has made much of Professor Wiepkema's advice to the Dutch Government. Will he acknowledge that that advice has been criticised by many international scientists already on the basis of the conclusions at which Professor Wiepkema arrived?

Mr. Nicholls: That may or may not be. I am saying that we need to examine the scientific evidence and to take it into account. If we in this place are to do our job properly, we should consider the available evidence and not legislate by assertion. If the hon. Gentleman has examined the evidence both for and against and has come to a certain conclusion, that is a matter for him.

I do not think that the Minister could convincingly say that the evidence does not matter because the public are against mink farming. Politicians have a duty to inform debate as well as to follow it. The proposition, "I am their leader, I must follow them," is no more attractive now as a basis for legislation than it was when that remark was first made.

Given the Minister's commitment in November 1997 to examine the evidence, we would like to know what he has made of the farms that he has visited. He has said that he has visited them in his private capacity, and I commend him for so doing. Perhaps he can draw on that experience and tell us what he found when he visited the farms. If the Minister can establish that only abolition and not reform can secure the welfare of mink, clearly the Bill should succeed. If he has come to that conclusion, that has certain implications.

If the Minister has concluded that mink farming is inherently and inevitably cruel, what representations has he made to the rest of the European Union? Given that Andrew Turnbull, the outgoing chairman of the Standing Veterinary Committee, which effectively oversees fur farming in the European Union, is himself a senior vet in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what does Mr. Turnbull feel about these matters? If the Minister simply ignores the weight of the evidence because it is popular to do so, the interests of animal welfare will not be served. If we abolished fur farming in this country against the evidence, what credibility would the Minister have in the European Union when he wanted to argue for an increase in standards for mink in the EU? The Minister will lose his ability to make that case from a position of principle.

Mr. Alan Clark (Kensington and Chelsea): As my hon. Friend knows, I hold him in high esteem, particularly on account of his often pungent comments on conformity with the European Union. I am a little surprised to find him taking the position that we must be extremely cautious in case we in any way deviate from what is European practice, and inviting the Minister to try to conform with what is being established in Brussels.

Mr. Nicholls: The Minister will be in a far harder position than I am when he has to talk about speaking to his friends in Europe. That is not something that would cause me any hardship. However, Europe does have some uses. I have put a perfectly fair proposition to the Minister. The cause of animal welfare goes wider than national boundaries and there is a case to be made in Europe.

To re-establish my credibility with my right hon. Friend the Member for Kensington and Chelsea (Mr. Clark), let me make it clear that I believe that the House should settle this issue for better or for worse. I believe that we will hear from the Minister in due course that he cannot go as far as many of his hon. Friends would like, because the House has lost the ability to deal with these matters—but I shall return to that.

How will the Minister explain to the public that although fur farming could become illegal in the United Kingdom, fur trading and the manufacture of items out of fur will not—I shall cheer my right hon. Friend the Member for Kensington and Chelsea up—because our present relationship with Europe will make that impossible? How will the Minister justify the argument that there is a moral difference between farming for food and farming for fur and leather, when neither is essential for human life? Does the Minister not realise that, queueing up behind this measure, will be those who, in relation to animal husbandry in general, have an altogether darker and more sinister agenda?

I have asked questions and I hope that I have dealt with these matters in some detail. I have taken interventions because it is clearly a serious issue and because I commend the hon. Member for Garston on the way in which she has introduced the Bill. Again, let me make it absolutely clear that the official Opposition have no intention of impeding the Bill's passage. However, whether the Bill is entitled to become law—not on a wave of assertion or on a wave of sincere emotion—depends on the answering of a central proposition, which is whether mink can be farmed humanely. It is my responsibility to ask that question from the Opposition Dispatch Box and it is the Minister's responsibility, in due course, to satisfy the House as to the reply.

Angela Smith (Basildon): First, on behalf of many hon. Members on both sides of the House, I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) for bringing the Bill forward. I am grateful to have the opportunity to debate the matter in the House.

Society changes, and attitudes to animal welfare have changed substantially over the years. We have far more information on, and knowledge about, wildlife and animals than we had 50 or 100 years ago. Attitudes to fashion also change. Most of us would regard it as considerable progress that we have moved on from when, within the Palace of Westminster, Henry IV boasted of wearing a fur robe made from the skins of 12,000 squirrels and 80 ermine. Perhaps the mink would regard it as progress that, today, it takes about 60 mink to make a fur coat.

Mink may also regard it as progress that, as my hon. Friend said, because demand for pelts is falling, the price paid for them is falling drastically. At last month's Copenhagen fur centre, the price of most mink skins had fallen to $21 from $30 last year. The industry is dependent on the whim of fashion and the fluctuations of the marketplace.

The lives and conditions that mink live in are dependent on the whims of the fashion market. The Bill is not about the wearing of fur. Instead, it is a challenge to the cruelty of the farming of wild animals for their fur. It is those wild animals that are ultimately fashion victims. Public and political awareness has been heightened by the tireless work of campaigners, who have exposed the conditions in mink farming through video footage and photographs, and we should pay tribute to them. Many of us do not have the strong stomach of my hon. Friend the Member for Garston and other hon. Members who have visited fur farms to see the conditions at first hand. I make no apology, and no excuses, for not wanting to visit a fur farm. That video footage and those photographs clearly illustrated how awful fur farming is. They brought into sharp focus the secret side of a business that many of us had not seen, and that is a discredit to Britain.

I recently saw film of mink being caught in their cages, having their heads bashed, and then being stuffed into a box to be gassed. I am well aware that emotional and ethical questions arise. I am sure that any hon. Member would feel emotional, having witnessed such scenes. Few people could fail to be moved by the sight of mink panicking in tiny wire cages.

However, as the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) argued, my views and those of other hon. Members are not enough to justify the banning of fur farming. Therefore, perhaps on this issue only, I endorse the advice of the British Fur Trade Association, which stated:

"science, not emotions, should take the lead in setting animal welfare standards".

We should examine the scientific reasons why mink should not be farmed for their fur.

Mrs. Mahon: Does my hon. Friend agree that some farms operate in a state of secrecy? Last year, at one such farm in my constituency, a Channel 4 team was prevented from filming from outside—two of the crew members were beaten up, the video was taken away and the camera was wrecked. It is sometimes difficult to get into the real hell-holes.

Angela Smith: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. One wonders why mink farmers are so averse to such publicity and to having their farms filmed.

If we compare conditions in the wild and those in captivity, we can see why fur farming is so inappropriate. In the wild, mink swim for about 60 per cent. of their waking hours, hunt live quarry, climb and dive, and travel between two to five dens, which are sometimes as much as 2 km apart. Male territories never overlap, and they will fight to the death to defend their territories.

Compare that with conditions in a fur farm, where, in rows of small wire cages—often just 38 cm wide, 30.5 cm high and 61 cm long—the mink are entirely deprived of opportunities to engage in their natural behaviour. In fur farms, mink may spend a quarter of their waking hours performing endless repetitive motions, going round and round in their tiny cages. They mutilate themselves through pelt and tail biting, they cannibalise other mink, and the mortality rate among young mink—kits—is extremely high. They are confined, in the words of a leading mink expert, Dr. Nigel Dunstone, to a life of "sedentary torture".

Is all that an exaggeration? Are the facts hyped up by those who oppose mink farming? Not according to a Cambridge university report, which stated that stereotypical behaviour is "an ever present feature of farm mink behaviour."

As we have heard from several hon. Members, the Government's Farm Animal Welfare Council announced under the previous Government:

"mink (and fox) have been bred in captivity for only about 50-60 generations and the Council is particularly concerned about the keeping of what are essentially wild animals in small barren cages."

The council's chairman made clear his views and those of the committee. He stated:

"We have decided against drawing up a Welfare Code for mink and fox farming to avoid giving it the stamp of approval which a Government-backed Welfare Code would imply."

We should take those comments seriously.

The conditions in which mink are kept would be illegal if they were in a zoo, but at least if they were in a zoo, that would expose the animals' conditions to intense public scrutiny. The Zoo Licensing Act 1981 specifies that mink be "provided with space and furniture sufficient to allow such exercise as is needed for the welfare of the particular species."

Where in a fur farm do we see nesting boxes, pools and branch-work to aid natural behaviour? Where is the recommended 40 sq m pool? Where are the natural soil, sand and gravel, and the hollow logs and rocks that would at least represent an attempt to create a natural environment? Nowhere in a mink farm do we see such facilities.

The opponents of the Bill have failed to mention the inhumane conditions in which mink are transported within the United Kingdom. We hear little about that, so I shall give the House an example. On 21 December last year, mink were transferred from Coneyheugh farm in Northumberland to Woodview farm in Devon—a journey of more than 10 hours. The 800 mink were left on the lorry overnight before being unloaded. Another batch of mink was delivered just last Sunday, 29 February. Overseeing the arrival of the mink was a MAFF vet. He stayed for just seven minutes. We should remember that the mink is a wild animal and is not used to captivity.

Mr. Gray: All animal lovers would be concerned if the conditions that the hon. Lady describes occurred normally. Does she agree that one of the good things about mink farming, in this country and elsewhere, is that the mink are bred and farmed in the same place as they are slaughtered—in other words, there is no transportation of mink to slaughterhouses, as is the case for all other farm animals?

Angela Smith: I am sure the hon. Gentleman will not be surprised to hear that I do not agree that it is better for mink to be kept in small cages and slaughtered on site. I have not dreamed up the events that I described. That transportation of mink happened. Does it matter whether it happens every day of the week or not? It happened, it is wrong and it should not be allowed to happen, but the law allows it to happen.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: The owner of Coneyheugh farm is a constituent of mine. When he moved those mink, they were moved with the full approval of MAFF. As the hon. Lady rightly said, a MAFF vet was present. My constituent cannot be blamed if the vet left after seven minutes. He did everything exactly by the rule book.

Angela Smith: The hon. Gentleman makes my point. The rules allowed that to happen. Many Labour Members and some of the hon. Gentleman's colleagues find that wrong. Humane conditions should be provided.

Some people treat mink simply as a product. They are farmed for maximum profit for a frivolous reason—for fashion. The term "fur farm" is totally misleading. Livestock farms give the impression of animals roaming over open spaces and fields and the production of food. A better term for mink farms would be "fur factories". That is the one group of factories that I want to see closed down for ever.

Mr. Douglas Hogg (Sleaford and North Hykeham): May I congratulate the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on the way in which she introduced the Bill. I have come to a conclusion that is quite different from hers, but I recognise that she has produced arguments that are rational and moderate in their tone, and I congratulate the hon. Lady on the approach that she adopted.

I oppose the Bill, both in general terms and for particular reasons. I shall start from two general propositions, which the House would do well to acknowledge. The first is that one should be very slow to use the criminal law to impose one's own moral views on the community as a whole. In many other contexts, hon. Members would largely agree with that proposition. It is certainly a view that permeates the debate on abortion, and it was manifest in the debate on homosexuality on Monday. One should be slow to use the criminal law to impose one's own moral standards.

The second point is a related one, but is also important. The House needs to be cautious about trampling on the rights of minorities. In a constitution such as ours, the rights of minorities are not firmly entrenched. It may well be that the European convention incorporated into the United Kingdom's domestic law will have a beneficial effect in that respect, but the defence of minority rights depends on the restraint of right hon. and hon. Members in this place.

Therefore we have an obligation, when we are considering the criminal law, to look strictly at the consequences of what we are about. We must ask ourselves whether we are unduly constraining the rights of minorities. I accept that neither of those propositions is absolute, but they are a guide as to how right hon. and hon. Members should legislate.

The first question that I have asked myself—I hope that other right hon. and hon. Members will also do so—is whether fur farming is in principle wrong. I stress "in principle". Let us not for the moment discuss whether it is humane. That is a different but extremely important issue. Is it in principle wrong? The hon. Member for Garston raised a number of arguments that depended on the inhumane method of husbandry. One of her principal contentions, which is also to be seen in the early-day motion, is that fur farming is, in principle, wrong. She argued, for example, that fur is not an essential requirement, implying that if it is not essential, it is right to prohibit fur farming. That is the question which we must consider.

It is important to remind ourselves that, although many people in this country may believe that wearing fur is wrong, that is not the conventional view in many countries whose standards in this regard are no different from our own. If one goes to the countries of central Europe—or, indeed, many of the countries of western Europe in winter—one finds that many people, and often the majority in richer areas, wear fur coats. One has only to go to Scandinavia, Switzerland, Germany or Austria to find that wearing fur is a common practice.

That is relevant to the debate because if it be true that in many civilised countries many, if not most, people think that wearing fur is a perfectly acceptable practice, one should be cautious about concluding that it is so unacceptable in principle that we should make it criminal.

Mr. Forth rose—

Mr. Hogg: Not the wearing of fur, but the breeding.

Angela Smith: I offer assistance to the right hon. and learned Gentleman; he seems to be under a misapprehension. The Bill would not stop the wearing of fur, but it would stop mink fur farming in this country.

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Lady does not do justice to my case. It flows from the assertion being made that fur farming is an unessential luxury business.

Mr. Forth: I hope that my right hon. and learned Friend does not rest his argument entirely on the proposition that, if people on the continental mainland wear and approve of fur, that is okay. I hope that he does not accept that, even if most people in this country disapprove of fur farming, that would justify prohibiting it. He is not saying that, is he?

Mr. Hogg: No. My right hon. Friend is entirely right about this. I pointed to the different views which one finds abroad to reinforce my real caution about seeking to impose one's moral standards by the criminal law. Millions of people in countries no different from our own take a profoundly different view on this issue. That should make one cautious about having a sense of confidence in one's own moral standards.

My right hon. Friend made another important point, which relates to the second issue that I mentioned—minority rights. It also relates to fox hunting. I do not mind if 95 per cent. of the population are against fox hunting; I am in favour of preserving people's right to hunt foxes, because that is the nature of democracy.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hogg: No. I will make a little progress, but I will give way if the hon. Gentleman wants to intervene later.

[Mr. Hogg]

That is the proposition from which I started. I then asked myself, as all hon. Members need to do, "What is the difference in principle between farming creatures for fur and farming animals for leather?" Looking around the Chamber, I see that hon. Members, in large numbers, are wearing leather shoes, have leather handbags or are wearing leather braces. I also see a briefcase or two and leather watch straps.

Mr. Gray: Leather seats.

Mr. Hogg: We are all sitting on leather seats; you look particularly elegant on yours, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We could pop you on nylon and you would look just as nice. We could sit on velvet and we would be just as comfortable. We do not need leather, so we need to ask ourselves at this juncture, what is the difference in principle between rearing animals when the primary purpose is to enable us to wear belts and rearing animals to enable us to put fur scarves around our necks?

Maria Eagle: I am grateful to the right hon. and learned Gentleman for giving way. As ever, he is making a well argued contribution. I attempted to address his point in my remarks; my Bill is aimed at the keeping of animals where the primary purpose is farming for fur. Most hon. Members have no objection to fur or skins as by-products of food production, and nor do I. That is the difference.

Mr. Hogg: There is a difference, but it is not conclusive. Many animals are reared where the primary purpose is the use of what the hon. Lady refers to as by-products. Skins are a by-product of many animals reared for food, and that involves the tanning process and so on. However, the primary purpose in respect of a range of other animals is provision of leather of a specialist kind for a variety of luxury, or even non-luxury, goods. Man-made fibre could be substituted for all those goods.

Standing back from all this, my conclusion is that there is no difference in principle between farming animals for fur and farming animals for the provision of leather, for example. That takes me to a much more difficult question: what is the proper approach to adopt? The proper approach is that which is advocated by my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls). We should be asking ourselves whether it is possible to breed those animals in humane conditions. If it were impossible to do so, and the evidence was conclusive on that point, I would favour prohibition, but we must ask whether the systems of husbandry are acceptably humane. That approach has been taken to veal calves, to sows and, increasingly, to chickens.

We concluded that the use of veal crates was an unacceptable practice. We do not need to eat veal—there are plenty of alternatives to it—but we did not conclude that we should ban the keeping of veal calves. We decided that the loose pen system was the proper way to rear veal calves. The same is true of sows. The House decided many years ago that the proper approach was not to prohibit pig keeping—that would be monstrous—but to prohibit the use of close tethering and close stalls.

I am deeply concerned about battery cages for chickens. I have visited many battery cage farms and found those visits deeply distasteful. I say, en passant, to the hon. Member for Garston that much of what she said about the frustration of natural instincts could be said, with equal force, in respect of chickens in battery cages. Chickens go in for all the practices that she referred to in respect of mink. My conclusion is, not that we stop rearing chickens, but that we set about asking the question whether they ought to be reared in a wholly different way. That is the proper approach.

Maria Eagle: I am grateful to the right hon. and learned Gentleman for giving way a second time. Is he aware that improved animal welfare, such as he suggests, has been introduced in Hessen in Germany? The result is that there are no fur farms. Such improvements are not economically viable. He would put people out of business by stealth whereas my Bill accepts that improving standards is not economic and that compensation should be paid to those who would lose their business.

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Lady makes a fair and an unfair point, and I believe that what she describes has happened in one of the lander. She is right that such standards can be required of fur farmers so that the process is made uneconomic.

Mr. Nicholls: Tough.

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend says tough; I was going to say, "Hard cheese," but it is the same thing. If we conclude that the requirements are necessary, but the consequence of those requirements is that the farmer goes out of business, I say, "Hard cheese," and my hon. Friend says, "Tough." We agree with those consequences, but we approach the matter in a different way. We have not decided that such farming is wrong in principle, but that, in order to make it tolerable, the farmer has to comply with a range of standards. If that cannot be done, he goes out of business.

Mr. Gray: My right hon. and learned Friend mentioned pig farmers. Is he aware that a number of pig farmers in my constituency have gone out of business because of the abolition of tethers and stalls, and that they received no compensation of any kind because they were unable to live up to the welfare standards that the Government demanded? Precisely the same would apply to mink farmers: if they were unable to live up to those standards, they would go out of business. Hard cheese, as he says.

Mr. Hogg: I shall come to the matter of compensation, because it is one of the specific points that I want to address. To round up what I have been saying on this point, I believe that this practice should not be prohibited because of principle. We should ask ourselves whether it is intolerably inhumane or whether we can impose requirements that would make it acceptable. If we could make it acceptable, that would be the way forward.

There is much evidence to suggest that it may be possible to impose acceptable standards. It is interesting that the Farm Animal Welfare Council in its 1988–89 report, although it identified shortcomings, did not say that the practice was inherently so inhumane that it should be prohibited. In Holland, the report of Professor Wiepkema—I apologise if I have mispronounced his name—made a number of recommendations that have been implemented, especially regarding the size and nature of cages. It is important to remind ourselves—as I did in an intervention on my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge—that Holland and the Scandinavian countries have high animal welfare standards and are sensitive to these issues. We must not disregard what they think is proper, because they are alert to these matters.

Mr. Swayne: My fear is that my right hon. and learned Friend, in his pursuit of a more humane way of fur farming, will create another, quite different, danger. I contend that a more humane form of fur farming would be less secure, and would give rise to a larger feral population that would be a greater danger to our ecology.

Mr. Hogg: That is a perfectly proper concern. My hon. Friend is a good advocate for the New Forest, and he is right to raise that issue. If the requirements of animal husbandry and ensuring a sufficiently humane regime were such that the animals could not be securely kept, the licence would not be issued. As my hon. Friend knows, the licensing regime takes account of security. If the consequences of improving animal welfare were such that the creatures could not be kept securely, the practice would have to stop. I would live with that, as I would regard it as a proper conclusion.

Mr. Phil Sawford (Kettering): The right hon. and learned Gentleman is trying to make serious points about whether fur farming is correct in principle. I am not sure whether the issue of minority rights—very few people run fur farms—or the fact that many people wear fur necessarily establishes the principle. One of his key points is that there is no difference between leather by-products used for clothing and seats and the fur-farming industry. For me a significant difference is the cosmetic nature of what is essentially a fashion accessory. Is there not a key difference between leather and fur products?

Mr. Hogg: I disagree in principle. The hon. Gentleman is making a value judgment. He is entitled to live up to his moral judgment: I am not asking him to wear crocodile skin. It is his moral judgment, and it may be perfectly proper. I am not criticising it. However, he should not use the criminal law to impose his value judgment on others. The Bill does not prohibit the wearing of fur, but in a sense it is the same principle, because it prohibits the breeding of fur creatures based on a moral judgment such as the hon. Gentleman is making. That is why I think it is wrong.

Mr. Drew: Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hogg: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman, and then I shall make progress.

Mr. Drew: If we took the right hon. and learned Gentleman's logic on minority rights to its natural conclusion, we would allow people to arrange dog fights or bull fights. Why do we not have an opinion on that?

Mr. Hogg: The hon. Gentleman has forgotten what I said when I began my speech. I said that there were two important propositions: that we should not impose our own moral standards by the criminal law, and that we should have regard for minorities. However, I said that they were not absolutes: they were an important guide to legislation. If I were a Spaniard, I would not prohibit bull fighting. I would, however, prohibit dog fighting. Although this point is slightly at a tangent, there is a difference, because the bull fighter—by which I mean the human—stands a considerable risk.

Mr. Alan Clark: No he does not.

Mr. Hogg: I should like to see my right hon. Friend in the ring. I know what the bull would do to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Tempting though some of those images may be, we should return to mink farming.

Mr. Hogg: All I can say is that if my right hon. Friend were too close to the bull's horns, he might have cause to regret it.

The central issue is that the proper approach is not to prohibit on grounds of principle, but to ask ourselves whether the methods are inhumane, and if they are to make them more humane. If that cannot be done, it is proper to accept the consequences.

Mr. Hancock: When the right hon. and learned Gentleman was the head of the service that is responsible for this matter, did he visit fur farms, and if so, what was his opinion of them? Were they run properly and were the animals looked after humanely? If they were not, his comments today beg the question why was not more done by fur farmers to achieve the improvements that the right hon. and learned Gentleman now suggests should be made?

Mr. Hogg: That is a perfectly fair criticism of my regime. I focused on that question when I was thinking about the Bill. I asked myself whether, when I was Minister, I directed my attention to the matter of welfare in fur farming. The honest answer is that I do not think that I did. I accept that criticism, but it does not go against the principle. It merely means that I did not do that which I now think I ought to have done, and that is a different point.

Mr. Hancock: Why have the fur farmers not done it?

Mr. Hogg: They may now make improvements as a consequence of the hon. Lady's Bill, but that does not go to the main issue. The hon. Gentleman is merely arguing that the people who should have addressed the problem previously did not do so, and not that the problem cannot be addressed, which is a difference issue.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: Perhaps I can help my right hon. and learned Friend. The fur farmer in my constituency would have been delighted to make such improvements, but the difficulty was that the Labour Opposition had a commitment to abolish fur farms. As my constituents could read the political runes fairly well, they did not think it wise to spend many hundreds of thousands of pounds on modernising their farm, but they are prepared to do so.

Mr. Hogg: I am glad to hear that the runes were disproved to the extent that my hon. Friend was returned.

[Mr. Hogg]

I want to move away from that point, although I accept that criticism can be directed at me as the then Minister. I did not address this issue, and I rather regret that I did not.

Compensation is an important issue, and it is raised in the hon. Lady's Bill. The extent to which compensation should be paid when a person's business is totally destroyed or prohibited as a consequence of legislation is an important principle. It arises much more frequently than we think, because many bits of legislation either impose intolerable costs—my hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) referred to pig farming—or prohibit an activity. Governments and the House have been ambivalent towards compensation because of the substantial cost implications. For example, the trading profits of gun dealers were excluded, and my hon. Friend was wholly right when he said that the substantial costs of improving standards imposed on pig farmers have not been allowed for in any direct payment. On balance, I believe that compensation should be paid, but that we should not be discussing a governing principle of this kind in the context of a Back-Bench Bill.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend may recall that the same issue arose in a recent debate about the possible replacement of the long-standing quarantine arrangements. If my memory serves me correctly, the Government resisted any suggestion that owners of quarantine kennels should be compensated if they lost their livelihoods as a result of a Government decision. In that context, does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that if the Government support today's Bill, that will mark a distinct shift of direction and may establish an interesting precedent?

Mr. Hogg: My right hon. Friend raises an important issue. I should like to have taken action on quarantine when I was Minister and I broadly agree with the Government's present position. However, I remain of the view that compensation should not be paid in those circumstances, or at least it is not self-evident that it should be paid as the kennel farmers had been on notice for a long time that there might be a change in the regime. I find compensation an extremely difficult issue. It is so important that it is undesirable that it should be addressed in the context of today's Bill or any other Back-Bench measure.

Mr. Nicholls: Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that there is a distinction between compensation in respect of the owners of quarantine kennels and firearms dealers—and this point will endear me to neither—in that at least there is a possibility of further, albeit restricted activity, whereas if the Bill becomes law fur farming will be illegal and it will be impossible to diversify and use the facilities for anything else?

Mr. Hogg: Yes. There will be a limited use for the kennels even if we substantially change the quarantine laws. The same does not apply to gun dealers, however—at least not to the same extent—as they were primarily hand gun dealers. Some were also supplying other guns, but broadly speaking they were hand gun dealers so their businesses went out of the window. Today's Bill would impose total prohibition. If it is right in principle that compensation should be paid, it is far from evident that it should not extend to loss of income, which is after all the major loss. However, the Bill excludes loss of income from any compensation that is payable. That worries me a great deal, albeit from a different side of the argument.

We should also bear in mind some important parliamentary points. The ability to pay compensation is not an obligation; it is within the discretion of the Minister. Therefore, the Minister would be able to pay out public money without any authority from the House. He or she would be able to make payments under a scheme that had not been positively ratified by the House. The hon. Member for Garston is shaking her head, but she is wrong. She will be aware that statutory instruments that are subject to negative procedure are seldom debated in the House. So we are talking about compensation in a context about which I have real doubts, which excludes as a subject for compensation the main head of loss, namely loss of income, which would be paid entirely at the discretion of the Minister and which in all probability would never be considered by the House. That strikes me as a pretty offensive procedure and I am against it.

In conclusion, having spoken for longer than I had intended, I congratulate the hon. Lady on the way in which she presented her Bill. She has done it well; she deserves applause from the House and I hope that she will get it. However, I hope that she will not get our votes as I do not believe that the principle that underlies her argument is a sound one. We should be asking whether or not the standards under which the animals are kept are sufficiently high. If they are not, we should seek to improve them and if the consequence of that proper process is that fur farmers go out of business, so be it. However, that is a different approach and I commend it to the House.

11.14 am

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas (Harrow, West): I join the House in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on her good fortune in the ballot and on her excellent presentation of the Bill. In the spirit of today's debate, I also pay tribute to the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg). Although I disagreed entirely with his views, I found his speech interesting and thoughtful.

For many years, fur was a popular accessory for those who sought to portray themselves as sophisticated and fashionable. Indeed, the fur of dead mink was a regular raw material for the fashion collections paraded on the catwalk. Harrods, Selfridges and the Hudson Bay Company would all religiously advertise, promote and joyously count the sales of expensive fur clothes. We owe a considerable debt to the work of the RSPCA, the World Society for the Protection of Animals and other animal welfare organisations, together with some of the more enlightened members of the fashion industry, for the fact that fur has become a much less economically rewarding product. Only 4 per cent. of the population in Britain wear fur and the number of mink factory farms has substantially reduced. Specialist fur retailers are in decline—the Hudson Bay Company has left Britain and Harrods, Selfridges and many other retailers no longer stock fur.

The Bill is extremely welcome as it will finally kill off the remnants of a sick and discredited domestic industry in Britain. It will also send important signals to the international fur trade that there is simply no place in decent, modern society for fur farming—an unnecessary industry that is completely indifferent to the animals that it exploits.

Mink farming is cruel and vicious at many levels. As we have heard many times already in this debate, mink are essentially wild animals. They defend semi-aquatic territories of up to 22 acres in the wild. They hunt, swim, explore and patrol their territories using aggression and scent marking. According to recent research, they sometimes make journeys of up to 4.3 km, yet on fur farms a typical cage is no longer than a person's arm. It does not allow access to water and is designed purely for the benefit and ease of the fur farmer.

Recent studies of mink have highlighted their natural and instinctive response to water and to a stimulating, extensive and diverse environment. One cannot help wondering what quality of life such lively and intelligent animals can possibly enjoy by being forced to spend their short lives in small wire cages. The conditions in which mink are kept lead to stereotypical behaviour which includes tail biting, self-mutilation, running to and fro along the floor of the cage, sometimes on two legs, rising up and down on their hind legs, moving their heads and forelegs, circling, sham feeding, rising up and head circling. Scientists at Cambridge university recently concluded that such stereotypical behaviour by mink is an indication of stress. Indeed, certain forms of stereotypical behaviour are likely to derive from attempts by the mink to escape their cages—evidence that their physical conditions are completely inadequate. While the levels of such behaviour vary—one study shows 70 per cent. of animals demonstrating such behaviour and 10 to 20 per cent. showing signs of self-mutilation—all scientific evidence has concluded that it is an ever-present feature among farm mink.

In 1979, the Farm Animal Welfare Council—the Government's scientific and technical advisers—stated that

"fur farming does not meet all the basic welfare needs of"

what are "essentially wild animals".

My hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Angela Smith), in an extremely helpful intervention, pointed out that, as a Government body, the Farm Animal Welfare Council has refused to draw up a new code of conduct for fur farming precisely to avoid it being seen to be given any form of Government approval. Fortunately for the fur trade, its appalling treatment of those animals has not impacted on the individual value of a mink pelt. Mink are killed after the winter moult when the fur is in prime condition and does not reflect the animals physical condition.

The hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) travelled fairly widely in looking for research to suggest the contrary of what I have outlined. He made much reference to Professor Wiepkema's advice on mink to the Dutch Government. I re-emphasise the point that his advice on mink has been heavily criticised, not least by a number of international scientists in a report that was compiled by Frank Wassenberg, a member of a leading Dutch animal protection organisation. In that report, Dr. Georgia Mason criticised Professor Wiepkema's statement that there were no indications that swimming water was necessary for mink, because there was no data on how hard mink would work for access to water. Recently, she has published further research demonstrating the importance of water to mink.

What clinched my support for a ban on fur farming was the way in which the animals were killed. The main method for killing mink in Britain is by gassing. However, gassing with carbon dioxide or carbon monoxide does not prevent considerable distress and discomfort. Death requires the mink handler to place the mink individually in a killing box, which, as they are not tame and may struggle, requires the handler to grip each mink extremely firmly. That in turn leads to most of the animals demonstrating the behavioural signs that come with fear and terror: screeching, defecation and urination. One account of the death of mink by gassing described the mink running so fast up and down its death cage that it was impossible to keep track of where in the cage it was—proof of the terrible distress that it was suffering in death.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am following the hon. Gentleman's speech with great attention and I agree with practically everything that he has said. In describing the killing process, will he also express his contempt, which is widely shared, for the euphemism that was deployed by my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) when the mask slipped for one minute and he referred to "harvesting," which is an ad man's euphemism for the process that the hon. Gentleman has described? What is interesting is that that term conceals the innate guilt and distaste that is felt by everyone who is associated with the process.

Mr. Thomas: The right hon. Gentleman makes a powerful point. I join him in his condemnation of that term.

Because mink are semi-aquatic, they are capable of holding their breath for lengthy periods, extending the distress that they experience during the death period. Other forms of killing mink that have been used include neck breaking and electrocution. Perhaps I should describe that process. Electrodes are clamped to the animal's mouth and inserted into its rectum. An alternative method is by lethal injection.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: Which mink farm in the United Kingdom uses the method of execution that the hon. Gentleman has just described?

Mr. Thomas: When the Bill is passed, no mink farm will be able to use such methods because there will be no mink farms about.

Mr. Gray: Will the hon. Member give way?

Mr. Thomas: I am coming to the end of my remarks, so I will not.

On the method of death, we do not require anyone in this country to have any training for that grisly task. The fur farming industry in Britain cannot say that it has not been warned that a ban on fur farming is coming. The 1989 view by the Farm Animal Welfare Council gave a strong hint that action would be forthcoming. Ministers have been clear on the issue, too. In opposition, our intention to ban fur farming could not have been clearer.

[Mr. Thomas]

Written questions since the general election from hon. Members have produced ministerial responses that have reconfirmed the Government's intent to support a ban on fur farming. Indeed, when the new Mink Keeping Order was approved in November 1997, the Government confirmed again in writing the intention to ban fur farms.

The Bill allows time for fur farms to wind down their activity. It gives time for employees to find new work and allows compensation to be paid. Ample notice has been given of our intent to ban fur farming. The overwhelming majority of public opinion expects and wants a ban on fur farming. Now is the time for the House to deliver exactly that.

Mr. Mike Hancock (Portsmouth, South): I join other hon. Members in congratulating the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on the successful way in which she has presented the Bill and her success in coming so high in the ballot. She now has a good chance of getting the Bill through the House. She is undoubtedly doing a great service for a number of people in this country—me included—who have long held the view that legislation was long overdue and in the public interest.

I hope that the House will get behind the hon. Lady. I hope that the official Opposition will join in supporting the Bill. A number of their obvious concerns over the matter have been allayed by hon. Members, not least the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas), who eloquently and positively explained the reasons why the overwhelming majority of the British public are against those farming practices and the way in which the animals are killed.

I share with other Members the distaste for the suggestion that "harvesting" mink in that way was something of a corn-keeping exercise. That was completely distasteful. I am sure that the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) will live to regret the use of that word, as I am sure many people in the fur-farming industry will.

Mr. Gray: In giving way, the hon. Gentleman is braver than the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas), who refused to give way on that point. The hon. Member for Harrow, West, whom the hon. Gentleman is now praising, used emotive language in talking about electrocution of mink. He made some highly charged remarks, but he should know that, of the 15 mink farms that were surveyed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food some years ago, 14 used gassing and one used barbiturates. There is no evidence that electrocution of the type described, or breaking of necks, is used in the UK.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. Gentleman is wrong. I have seen film taken in mink farms in this country and documentary evidence that proves that the practice has been carried out. He has made a number of interventions on that and other issues affecting mink. He made the point when he attacked the hon. Member for Garston just minutes into her speech, criticising the fact that she appeared not to have been to a mink farm. He has not been to another planet, but on animal-related issues he talks as though he has. Hon. Members should bear that in mind when considering his interventions. [Interruption.] You are laughing. The hon. Member needs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. First, the hon. Gentleman should remember that he is addressing the Chair; secondly, it might be helpful if the debate did not descend into personal criticisms. We should concentrate on the subject matter.

Mr. Hancock: When someone puts himself above the parapet like the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) has and says some outlandish things to other hon. Members, he should be able to take it a bit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. My strictures were not directed simply to the hon. Gentleman; I was speaking to the House as a whole. It is best that we deal with the subject matter rather than personalities.

Mr. Gray rose—

Mr. Hancock: I will allow the hon. Gentleman to get the point off his chest.

Mr. Gray: Perhaps I can clarify my position as the hon. Gentleman has made some strange remarks about it. I strongly support the Bill, will not seek to divide the House and will vote in favour of it if the House divides, but I will do so because, in Committee, we will be able to examine some of the welfare issues about which I am still concerned. For the hon. Gentleman to suggest that I am against the Bill is incorrect.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. Gentleman could have given a clearer indication of that by not pursuing some of the points that he has, but I welcome the suggestion that he is wholeheartedly behind the Bill and will do all he can—

Mr. Gray: Not wholeheartedly.

Mr. Hancock: Not wholeheartedly, but the hon. Gentleman supports the Bill.

The information that we have been sent shows that the lobby advocating fur farming has come up with four key issues. Those of us who have followed the issue with great interest over the past 20 years have heard them before. The first argument is that the measure is an infringement of the individual's right to conduct business and that fur farmers are law-abiding. The response to that is that people do not have the right to do lots of things that are considered inhumane. For that reason alone, there is reason—it is time—for the decision to be taken.

We have progressed as a society and become more intolerant of many inhumane practices, which are legion. Over the past 100 years or so, we have successfully passed laws to end many of those practices. Our attempt to ban fur farming, once and for all, is the latest example of the progress that we are trying to make.

The second argument—which was made by the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg)—is that fur farming is no different from normal legal farming. The rebuttal to that argument is that, in most cases, other animals are farmed for food to be used for the common good, not for something that is regarded as a luxury item. When that fact was pointed out earlier in the debate, the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) said, "Here we have the class battle." It is no such thing, and it was nonsense for her to have said that. I am sorry that she is not in the Chamber to hear my reply.

Farm animals are domesticated, not wild. I cannot believe that anyone could reasonably suggest that a mink is anything other than a wild animal. Generally, all parts of farm animals are used. Very little of animals that are reasonably described as farm animals and that are used for food is not used in one way or another. Perhaps, in time, our society will evolve out of meat farming, although that is probably a long way off. Undoubtedly, however, that evolution will eventually come.

The third argument is on the rights of fur breeders. The hon. Member for Garston has more than justified her position by providing in her Bill for fur farmers to be compensated for the loss of their business. In all conscience, surely we must admit that loss of those businesses is a small price for the United Kingdom, as a community, to pay in ending a practice that undoubtedly unnecessarily tortures and kills animals.

The fourth argument against the Bill pursued by those who advocate continuing the trade is that the Government should regulate the industry, to prevent animal abuse, rather than ban it. We have already had that opportunity, have we not? The right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham himself told us that he felt that, when he led on the issue for the previous Government, he had neglected addressing the issue. He chose not to do so. The farmers have had the opportunity to deal with the issue, but they have neglected to do so. Therefore, there cannot be any reasonable excuse for us not now to take on the issue.

The four key arguments levelled against the Bill are easily and remarkably quickly despatched. Sadly, it is a lot quicker to dispose of them than it is to dispose of the animals that those people continue to torture.

The dimensions of the cages in which the animals are held are not much larger than the Dispatch Box. Do advocates of fur farming honestly believe that those are proper conditions in which to keep any animal—especially an animal that should develop and flourish—for any longer than a few minutes? It cannot be right to keep animals in such conditions.

I cannot believe that even the most hardhearted hon. Member would want to go home and tell his or her children that he or she is in favour of animals—100,000 of them every year in the United Kingdom—being caged in such conditions for long periods, simply so that they can be put to death and more than 1,000 fur coats made, so that people can prance around feeling that they look a little more attractive than they might in a man-made alternative. It is not reasonable for the House to allow the trade to continue.

The consequences of our vanity is around for us all to see. For centuries, we have used and abused animals to satisfy our own vanity. But there is no excuse for us to continue exercising that right, if it is a right. I am disappointed that the Council of Europe did not take a much harder line on the issue. I represent the United Kingdom Parliament in the Council of Europe, and I am disappointed that the United Kingdom did not fight harder to ensure that the community of Europe took a more forceful line on the issue.

Many of the arguments that hon. Members made today on the scientific evidence can easily be rebutted. For every argument in favour of continuing fur farming, there are many more arguments against it. We have to consider carefully payments supporting some of the research programmes, especially the exercise in Scandinavia and in Denmark. The scientific evidence in that exercise was produced not without solicitation, but often at the specific request of those whose only interest was to ensure continuation and justification of the trade.

It cannot be right, and must not be thought to be right, to allow animals to be so mistreated and abused. I am disappointed that 13 fur farms are still operating in the United Kingdom. I only wish that we had been able, long ago, to force those farmers to reconsider their futures. Like many people, I was hoping that the campaigns against wearing and farming fur that have been fought in the past 20 or 30 years would have been sufficient for farmers to realise that they should change to alternative ways of making a living.

I share the view expressed by the hon. Member for Garston that fur farming creates nowhere near the number of jobs that the industry claims. I agree with her appraisal that the industry provides about 50 jobs. Hon. Members who have, like me, visited fur farms will know that that employment figure is realistic. I am glad to say that both the farms that I visited closed long ago. I have also stood outside other farms, which are still operating, and never saw anywhere near the number of employees that has been suggested coming out of them.

We have to be extremely careful, of course, about how we use legislation. Nevertheless, the hon. Member for Garston was right to promote the Bill and to use the public opinion statistics on the matter. On issues such as fur farming and fox hunting, the public have made their feelings known, and they expect the House, for a change, to respect and respond to those demands.

I am disappointed that the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) has left the Chamber. At least I do not think that he is here. Today, he has moved his seat three times already—I had better ensure that he is not here, as I should not comment on him in his absence—[Interruption.] He is a man who many hon. Members have found it very difficult to avoid, although those who have done so have found their effort well rewarded. It is very disappointing for some of us that he has chosen to exercise his rights in the House to frustrate many good pieces of private legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think that the hon. Gentleman has remembered what I said in my previous ruling.

Mr. Hancock: I had a slight lapse there, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and apologise to you and to the House for it. I feel that those points should occasionally be made, but I shall vigilantly remember your ruling.

I should hope that the House will today give the Bill a fair wind and wish it well. I hope that there will not be a vote, and that the Bill will move uncontroversially to its next stage. In Committee, I hope that hon. Members who are concerned about the Bill will vent their concerns. I am sure that, in his reply, the Minister will give a very steady steer in telling us how the Government might respond to some of the points. I am sure also that the Government will take on board all the very interesting and well-made arguments on the issue. Nevertheless, I believe that the Bill very precisely identifies, clarifies and answers many of the concerns.

For those reasons alone, I believe that the Bill is worthy of support. I believe that it is worth supporting also because it is about time that the United Kingdom rid itself of a trade that does so much harm to the nation's character and causes so much distress and inhumane treatment to the animals concerned.

Jane Griffiths (Reading, East): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on her success today in introducing the Bill. Like many other hon. Members on both sides of the House, I find it incredible that, this year—the final year of a century in which we have seen unparalled acceleration in development of science, technology, civil rights and animal welfare, which are all vital ingredients of a civilised society—the House should have to draw its attention to a practice that is more congruent with an uncivilised society lacking development in those spheres.

Nevertheless, the House is no stranger to debating the merits of practices—or traditions, as their apologists weakly claim them to be—that belong to the dustbin of history. One has only to look at the fine Bill promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) in the previous Session. Like that Bill, today's Bill commands the support of the majority of our fellow citizens: the people whom we are here to represent and in whose name we legislate.

The Bills are similar, in that they recognise that our attitudes towards animal welfare reflect on the integrity of our society, but I hope that is where the similarity ends, because, in the previous Session, the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill fell, at the hands of a small number of hon. Members who employed some of the more outdated procedures of the House in their hell bent pursuit of thwarting the wishes of the majority.

Now is not the time to discuss the merits of some of our parliamentary procedures, but perhaps it is the time, as we stand on the eve of a new millennium, to suggest to last year's culprits a new millennium experience: the experience of accepting the overwhelming arguments against fur farming and recognising the overwhelming support that those arguments enjoy. Perhaps I may be called democratically naive for accepting the will of the people.

Mr. Swayne: The hon. Lady does not help her cause by drawing a parallel between the Bill and the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, for they are entirely different.

Jane Griffiths: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his remarks.

The millennium has generated many problems in computing and information technology—problems that may touch all our lives—but I believe that it also presents us with another set of challenges, some symbolic and some more tangible. The Government are making great progress in meeting the tangible challenge of modernising Britain, transforming it into a country equipped for the 21st century, with improvements in the economy, the health service, education and other aspects of our national life. The symbolic challenge is for Britain to enter the 21st century as a country with moral integrity, and that integrity is at least partly based on the humane treatment of animals.

The Bill would take us one step closer to achieving that integrity. At present, thousands of mink are kept in unacceptable conditions for the sake of a luxury product. Those conditions severely limit the extent to which the animals can behave naturally, and that is cruelty.

The Bill is supported by the RSPCA, the country's defenders of animal welfare, yet the British Fur Council is foolish enough to have published in the national press disingenuous photographs purporting to show the hands of an RSPCA inspector holding a healthy mink from a fur farm. People will not be conned by that. Even if the pictures told a true story, it is worth noting that the RSPCA has no powers of entry to fur farms; inspectors can visit them only with permission and view only what they are shown.

The majority of people in this country want an end to fur farming. Last Saturday in Woodley, a part of my constituency that I cherish greatly, as it is always a reliable barometer of public opinion, more than 600 people in three hours approached me to express support for such a ban. I believe that the Government are minded to support the Bill. I give it my unreserved support and call on last year's democratic bandits to vote with the people.

Mr. Tim Loughton (East Worthing and Shoreham): I congratulate the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on promoting the Bill and I pay tribute to the animal welfare organisations, and the RSPCA in particular, that have given freely of their services to back it. I am delighted to be one of its sponsors. It has wide cross-party support, as it should.

I am not naturally one to advocate banning things, be it as an emotional kneejerk reaction to furry animals or as a pandering to populist opinion polls. I am certainly not in favour of banning foods or supplements that individuals choose to consume, or of the nanny-state attitude that is so much a hallmark of the Government, trying to tell us how to run every aspect of our lives every hour of the day—

Mr. Forth: But—

Mr. Loughton:—but—I am pre-empted—in the case of fur farming in the United Kingdom, we have the last vestiges of an industry that has virtually banned itself. There are 13 farms run by only 11 licensed farmers, producing 100,000 pelts a year from 130,000 mink, accounting for less than 1 per cent. of world production. As the hon. Member for Garston said, the number is down from 600 farms early in the century, and 68 in 1982, to almost nothing.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough): My hon. Friend and I are fellow Conservatives and share many values. Does he agree that one of the finest attributes of Conservative thinking is that we always protect minorities from oppression, however small they may be, because they have a right to state their view and carry out what up to now has been a perfectly legitimate activity?

Mr. Loughton: That is a perfectly legitimate point, but there is a minority of child killers, and we do not necessarily support them. There must be a cut-off point for common sense to come into the argument.

Mr. Leigh: Child killers break the criminal law, the civilised common law that has been established for centuries to protect other human beings. Fur farmers do not kill or oppress human beings and, as Conservatives, we should surely protect their minority interest.

Mr. Loughton: There must be a cut-off point. There is a wide choice of perfectly legitimate pursuits for people to follow. The majority of people engaged in the industry favour the Bill, because they want to get out of the business, and the Bill is rather a good way of affording them an opportunity to do so. My hon. Friend is advocating protecting a minority who do not want protection.

We often hear that the Labour party is the party of the many, not the few. I agree with my hon. Friend that it has been up to Conservative Members to stand up for the minorities whom the Government are unduly attacking, but this is a different matter.

I am not pandering to a populist issue, but neither am I taking a primarily moral stance, although there may be a valid moral case. I believe that the current practice is just plain unacceptable, and that making it remotely acceptable in the United Kingdom would prove wholly unviable economically, for practical and sensible reasons.

I am hard pressed to see how rearing mink or other animals in cages can possibly conform to the terms of the European convention on protection of animals, although I concur with my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), in that is not the sanctuary that I would normally seek in matters European.

The convention says:

"Freedom to display most normal patterns of behaviour" is a requirement in animal welfare.

[illegible] hon. Friend agree that it is up to [illegible] European Commission and the [illegible] to ensure that something [illegible] convention? How does he make [illegible] compliance with a convention or directive to an outright ban?

Mr. Loughton: I am not recognising a European recommendation or directive as an overriding source, but merely using it as an example of how the practice does not fit with what is considered appropriate. As my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge said, animal welfare standards, like pollution, do not respect national boundaries. If we can set precedents, as we did on the use of veal crates, we should do so, to encourage better animal husbandry on the continent. We can take a stance and press for better practices among our European neighbours.

The semi-aquatic mink, which is accustomed to roaming and defending areas of river bank up to 2.5 miles long, is not encouraged to exhibit its natural behaviour on a fur farm, where it is not in its natural habitat. On farms, mink are typically kept in long rows of barren cages in open-sided sheds and fed with dollops of paste. A typical cage is 70 cm by 45 cm by 40 cm—I use the metric unit purely because I did not have time to convert into proper imperial measures. It is not surprising that there are so many reports of disturbed behaviour among farmed animals.

The Government's scientific advisers have said that fur farming does not meet all the basic needs of those animals. They say that it is impossible to recreate a mink's natural free-roaming environment in fur farms, where those wild animals have no opportunity to express natural behaviour such as swimming, diving and climbing, and that results in serious welfare problems. The Farm Animal Welfare Council was set up by the Conservative Government in 1979 to advise on welfare of farm animals—another successful animal welfare measure for which, most unfairly, the Conservative Government gained little credit. The council reported on fur farming on several occasions and stated:

"The Council believes that the systems employed in the farming of mink do not satisfy some of the most basic criteria which it has identified for protecting the welfare of farm animals."

As the hon. Member for Garston said, the German state of Hessen prohibited the use of cages in 1996 and required climbing facilities, access to water and other measures. Now, there are no fur farms in Hessen, because it is not economically viable to breed the animals for fur in acceptable conditions—the farmer cannot make a living from it. If it were economically viable, farms in this country would have adjusted years ago—they certainly cannot deny having seen the writing on wall. For many years, it has been clear that animal welfare measures should be taken, but the industry has done nothing. Now—especially given the current slump in auction prices for fur—most fur farmers favour the Bill because it would allow them to get out of the business altogether.

Maria Eagle: The hon. Gentleman is probably not aware that, this morning, I did an interview on BBC Radio Stoke with the chairman of the Fur Breeders Association of the United Kingdom, who spoke overtly for all the farmers. He said that neither he nor they opposed the passage of the Bill: although they regretted it, they saw the writing on the wall and wanted to co-operate in implementing the legislation. They were more concerned about proper compensation, which is fair enough.

Mr. Loughton: I am not at all surprised by those comments. I fear that I am not a regular listener to Radio Stoke, but I am sure that the many people who are benefit greatly from it.

I support the Bill because it is simple: it has only seven clauses and seeks solely to end the farming of fur in the UK after a realistic winding-down period. It includes mechanisms to pay due compensation, which is a matter that should be closely examined in Committee, because it might prove to be a major bone of contention which will need thrashing out. The Bill does not in any way pass judgment or impose restrictions on the wearing of fur or on the trading of fur. It does not make provision regarding the capture of animals for fur in the wild; nor does it make any attempt to restrict the import of fur. It is not an attempt to further some sort of ideological class-war terrorism against fur-wearing fat cats, who will be entitled to continue to wear fur, if they so choose.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): I have a fur coat.

Mr. Loughton: That may be so, but I would never describe my hon. Friend as a fur-wearing fat cat.

Any of the features or omissions that I have described would be creditable and credible in current or future legislation. The hon. Member for Garston has gone out of her way to make the Bill acceptable, practical and simple, so as to allay the fears and concerns of many hon. Members.

It could be said that one may not object to the Bill because it was a Labour election commitment to ban fur farming. In that case, it is a shame that, yet again, as with so many of the animal welfare pledges that Labour made before the general election, the Government have not produced the goods, but have instead relied on a Back Bencher to bring the measure before the House. I have received a great deal of post on the subject, almost all of it in favour of backing the Bill. I was happy to be able to write back saying, "Not only am I backing the Bill, but I am sponsoring it, hope to speak on it and will vote for it, if I am given the opportunity to do so." However, a number of people have said that they feel that they have been let down by the Government on animal welfare issues, because the Government have not delivered and their promises turned out to be hot air.

There might be a modicum of justification for fur farming if it produced some sort of essential foodstuff that provided sustenance, but it does not. Fur farming exists purely to produce a luxury item for which there are many artificial alternatives, or for which the buyer should be prepared to pay a higher market price, if that enabled animals to be reared in conditions that take proper account of their welfare during their lifetime, rather than in the current conditions, which have been described as a fate worse than death. As the RSPCA has said, its opposition to fur farming is based on the knowledge that it causes considerable suffering to produce an unnecessary luxury product.

Even if, as one of the bullet points being touted by the British fur industry states, there is a law in Russia requiring people to wear fur hats in temperatures below minus 20 deg C, that law should be changed to allow a different sort of hat to be worn by the good burghers of Russia, Siberia or anywhere else. In any case, even the Labour Government have not become nanny enough to introduce the compulsory wearing of headgear in this country—at least, not yet, but there is plenty of time for them to do so.

Last week, I took part in a radio programme with a representative of the British fur industry, who described in detail, with great relish and glee, his recent visit to a fur farm. He said that he had found mink that were "relaxed, inquisitive, lively, even cheerful".

I think that one of the rather fairyland phrases he used was:

"Mink all lined up in their little cages."

I do not know which mink farm he visited, but it struck me that, when he drove up the M1, he must have taken the turning marked "Fantasy Island", because his is not the sort of description that one readily associates with a mink farm, on which animals live in wire cages.

Maria Eagle: Is that gentleman Mr. Robert Morgan, who in the Daily Mail the other morning described the Bill as a threat to the bacon butty?

Mr. Loughton: I cannot remember the name; it was not Mr. Robert Morgan, but it appears that he has bedfellows who also make seriously fatuous statements.

The man I met went on to challenge the case made by those who support the Bill, that fur is an unnecessary luxury item, by asking what the difference was between farming for a luxury item and buying an expensive luxury steak derived from an animal reared solely for its meat. For a start, I would not expect to buy a steak produced from a steer kept in a wire cage 70 cm by 45 cm by 40 cm; and when I pay up for the best sort of steak, it is because it typically comes from an animal reared in conditions that are as natural as possible, and if the meat bears the RSPCA "freedom foods" badge—which we should all look out for in our supermarkets—I can be certain that the animal had been so reared.

Mrs. Gorman: The phrase "luxury item" has come up more than once in the debate. Does my hon. Friend agree that, if people are determined to own fur—we all crave some luxury, whether it is a fur, a Porsche or a Ferrari—they will attain it by shooting animals in the wild? People who want mink will still have it. The humane raising of animals for which there is a demand and a market is a sensible alternative that conservationists advocate for animals threatened by extinction because of hunting. The corollary is that, if we provided humane conditions, the rest of the Bill would be negated.

Mr. Loughton: I got a little lost during my hon. Friend's intervention. The point is that the Bill would in no way ban people who legitimately hold licences from shooting mink in the wild. It is purely about mink and other animals that are kept in small cages on fur farms.

While we are on the subject of luxury items, my hon. Friend may be interested to know that a well-known underwear retail store is currently advertising fake-fur-trimmed knickers that she can buy quite cheaply. My point is that there are alternatives to fur, but I shall give my hon. Friend the details of the store, the prices and the available colours after the debate.

Mr. Forth: Lend her yours.

Mr. Loughton: Indeed, I could lend her my own.

Let me return to food labelling. Following the excellent action taken by the then Conservative Government, who received little credit for it, British veal no longer comes from wholly unacceptable veal crates.

There are many practical reasons to end fur farming in the United Kingdom. My hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) is understandably obsessed with the New Forest and the havoc wreaked there by the disgraceful actions of some lunatic so-called animal liberationists who released mink from a farm in his constituency; those actions have annoyed the brigadier who writes prolifically to my hon. Friend, and we have heard from the brigadier many times this morning.

When mink escape or are released, they wreak havoc in the wild. They are not native to this country, and in Hampshire they have attacked wild and domestic animals and birds. They can spread diseases such as Aleution disease and distemper. An Oxford university study has blamed mink for the virtual disappearance of water voles from most English rivers over the past 15 years. The animals that we seek to support through the Bill are not really very nice.

Serious questions have been raised about killing practices, and I shall not repeat what other hon. Members have said. However, no qualifications or training are required in the United Kingdom for those who carry out the killing, and that may require consideration.

Compensation costs will not be considerable because the remaining industry is minimal, and the Treasury will not pay much attention to the costs. In 1997, legal opinion from a counsel used by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food concluded that no legal bar existed to banning mink farming immediately without compensation. As with many other matters, I should much prefer to use properly scrutinised primary legislation to bring that about rather than relying on the secondary regulations that the Government use all too often, even in matters of taxation. The Bill could end up helping to bail out a dying industry.

Some 60 per cent. of world trade in fur pelts is done through London. Fur traders do not believe that they will be negatively affected by the ban proposed in the Bill. The fur farming industry cannot legitimately be described as a traditional country pursuit, although that case has been put forward by opponents of the Bill. Mink were introduced here only 70 years ago; they are not native to this country. The demise of fur farms, and the affect that it would have on unemployment, would have no serious impact on rural economies; it is unlike the serious case that I could make on the impact that the end of fox hunting would have.

There is a conflict between welfare and profit. Quasi-genetic modification practices currently produce rare colours on the fur of mink that can fetch higher prices and that can be manipulated through careful breeding. Such breeding programmes concentrate on the colour of the pelt regardless of all else, and rare colours may be linked to poor physical conditions experienced by the animals. For example, the white pelt is produced by a line of congenitally blind mink.

"Made in Britain" is not a phrase of which I feel proud when it is applied to fur. It would be hypocritical to legislate merely to tinker with welfare standards when, to all intents and purposes, the fur industry is crying to be put out of its misery from a long, slow, uncomfortable and lingering death. As long as we can get right the compensation packages, the Bill will benefit everyone, not to mention the animals that are forced to exist—they do little more than that—in wholly unacceptable conditions. This is a good little Bill; it is straightforward, realistic, centrally focused and achievable. It deserves our support.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) on the way in which he weaved a course between supporting the Bill and being rude about the Government. Apart from that, I disagree entirely with his remarks, because, like so many other hon. Members who have spoken in favour of the Bill, he confuses a personal moral issue with one of welfare.

It is all very well for people to say that they want to ban this practice because they disapprove of people wearing unessential luxury fur coats—a view reflected by my hon. Friend and Labour Members who are in favour of the Bill—but that is not necessarily my judgment or that of other hon. Members. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) said, it is wrong to use criminal law to impose one's views on other people.

It is utterly wrong to call fur farmers a minority in a dying trade and cite that as a reason to use the Bill to kick them and wipe them out. They are indulging in what, up to now, has been a perfectly legal operation and the Conservative party should therefore support their minority interests. That is why I am a Conservative and why I fundamentally disagree with my hon. Friend the Member for East Worthing and Shoreham.

The hon. Member for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths), who has just left the Chamber, spoke of moral integrity in terms that I translate as moral tyranny. The difficulty with opinion polls is that they produce many figures. The fact that they may say that 74 or 84 per cent. of the public are against fur farming is not a reason to impose moral tyranny on people who are practising a trade that is perfectly legal. Those people should look to this House to defend them in their activities.

The hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas) made an inordinate number of utterly wrong and untrue allegations about the conditions in mink farms. He said that mink were executed with electrodes. That is completely illegal. The killing of mink in this country is covered by the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995, which were introduced by a Conservative Government and which specifically forbid the use of any methods other than the legal ones. When mink are killed on fur farms, vets from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have to be present to ensure that it is done properly.

When the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) intervened very early in the debate and mentioned hell-holes, she was referring to institutions that are regularly visited by MAFF inspectors. Those inspectors are involved when mink are transported around the country and when they are killed. Mink farms in this country are carrying out their duties according to existing law.

The mink farm at Coneyheugh in my constituency has been run by the Harrison family for nearly 30 years. I have visited their 5-acre site and I have spoken to Mr. Harrison several times. Some of my hon. Friends might find the smell of the farm a little unpleasant but the husbandry satisfies current rules and regulations.

I declare an interest—perhaps I should have done so earlier—in that I am a consultant to the Countryside Alliance and a member of the National Farmers Union and the Country Landowners Association. I believe that some mink farmers are members of the NFU.

The family who run the farm in my constituency have been subjected to a campaign of terrorism for many years. I am surprised that no one has yet mentioned what the farmers have had to put up with from the animal rights activists, who make their lives an absolute misery. As my hon. Friend the Member for East Worthing and Shoreham said, that is one reason why some mink farmers want out. My constituents have had their house burgled and their children spat on. They have had pickets outside their property day and night, on weekends and weekdays. People have broken into their premises and threatened the family's security.

Maria Eagle: I take this opportunity utterly to condemn such activity, which is completely unacceptable. However, does the hon. Gentleman accept that there have been prosecutions for violent offences on both sides of the issue and that it is not only animal rights activists—or animal liberation activists, as they are known—who perpetrate unlawful acts, but mink farmers and their employees? There has been wrongdoing on both sides.

Mr. Atkinson: I am grateful to the hon. Lady for that intervention. I did not wish to imply that she was in favour of such action, and I am glad that she joins me in condemning it. Some people engaged in mink farming have been involved, but I am talking about those who have been subjected to a campaign of terrorism and harassment for several years. It is no wonder that sometimes their patience snaps and they attempt to protect themselves and their property. That is not an excuse for what they have done but, having seen at first hand the conditions in which they are forced to live, I can begin to understand it.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham holed the Bill below the waterline when he rightly identified that this should not be an issue of moral principle—it is a welfare issue. He cited a great deal of evidence, which I shall not repeat, to the effect that if we introduced the standards imposed in Holland, Denmark and other mink-farming countries, we should then have the conditions that would satisfy most experts.

The Farm Animal Welfare Council has been prayed in aid by several hon. Members who support the Bill. The council disapproves of the way in which mink are currently kept, but has also said that, with more research, it would be possible for mink to be kept in confinement. We should be moving in that direction. My constituent, who, as I said, is a serious mink farmer with a 5-acre site, made it perfectly clear that he would have invested the money necessary to bring his farm up to the Dutch standard, but when he heard the Labour party, then in opposition, say that it would ban mink hunting in its entirety—I mean mink farming, but, sadly, mink hunting, too—he was naturally reluctant to invest. At the time at which he would have been prepared to make that investment, the price of mink pelts was extremely high and the trade extremely profitable, so he would have had the necessary money.

Mr. Leigh: It is said that mink cannot be farmed humanely because they are naturally wild animals. On the other hand, the National Farmers Union says that they have been farmed for more than 80 generations, and the mink now being farmed are therefore domesticated. Will my hon. Friend explain how it is possible to ensure that mink are farmed humanely, just as we have done with pigs and veal?

Mr. Atkinson: It is perfectly possible. As my hon. Friend says, mink have been bred in captivity for more than 80 years. One of the techniques of breeding is always to breed from the most docile animals. During those 80 generations, we have therefore encouraged a docility in the breed, which would not be there in the wild. When mink escaped or were released by animal rights activists, it was noticeable that at feeding time many went back to where they knew they belonged because they were domesticated and, apart from a few lucky ones, incapable of surviving out there in the wild.

Mr. Swayne: It is a mistake to believe that mink are bred for docility. They are bred for their pelts, not their docility. Last summer, our experience in the New Forest was that a voracious wild animal had been let loose on our natural fauna. One might as well expect a mink to inherit a wooden leg as to inherit docility.

Mr. Atkinson: I see that docility is not something that was bred into my hon. Friend. I do not accept his point. I was talking about a particular strain in mink as well as their pelts. My hon. Friend is being disingenuous.

Mr. Loughton: If my hon. Friend is saying that mink can be so Pavlovian in their behaviour that they come back at feeding time, why have fur farmers not seized upon the opportunity for free-range mink to encourage better welfare standards?

Mr. Atkinson: This point is in danger of descending into farce. Larger cages that allow greater movement would satisfy the concerns of many of the opponents of mink farming. It would be possible, no doubt, to provide those if farmers invested. If they cannot invest, hard cheese—as my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham said.

A similar Bill, passed in Austria, illustrates the futility of what we are trying to achieve today. There was one fur farm in Austria, which the Austrian Government decided they wanted to close. They compensated the farmer at a rate, which the Minister will recall, of £380 per breeding female; a lot more than he proposes. The farmer in Austria said, "Thank you very much" and closed down his fur farm, then moved 30 miles across the Czech border and opened another.

Effectively, we are proposing to close 13 fur farms in this country—businesses which should be run to strict MAFF standards. We will replace the 100,000 mink pelts a year from English fur farms with pelts from other fur farms. Some will come from Holland and Denmark, where the mink are well brought up, but many will come from countries in eastern Europe such as Lithuania, where conditions are intolerable by comparison. We are giving comfort to those who rear mink in a poor environment at the expense of those who provide a better environment—which, in future, could be improved still further. That is illogical.

The same happened when the previous Conservative Government decided to ban tethers and stalls in the pig industry. I was one of the few Conservative Members—my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) may have been another—who did not agree. That was not because I did not want to see higher welfare standards in the pig industry, but because I wanted those standards on at least a Europe-wide basis. As a result, the cost of our pork has gone up, and all the people who said in the opinion polls that they wanted to abolish tethers and stalls are now choosing to buy cheaper pork from Denmark, which still uses tethers and stalls.

If we are to improve the welfare standards of mink by making sure that the conditions are right, we want our Minister to go to Europe to campaign for better conditions for fur farming. He cannot do that—he would be going there naked—if fur farming were abolished.

The explanatory note states that, overall, the compensation will be £400,000—an average of something under £40,000 per farm. I know that that will not be the figure per farm, as the amount will change according to the size of the farm. However, my constituent, who has a 5-acre site, will have costs of £20,000 or more to remove and clear the site. He will lose all his income, and he will have to pay redundancy costs for the three full-time staff he employs in addition to the members of his family who work on the farm. He will have no money left out of the compensation. He will be lucky to sell his property.

This is a bad Bill, and it does not address the question of welfare. That is why I agree entirely with my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls). In passing, I believe that it is wrong for Ministers and Governments to take over private Members' Bills which attack the liberties of our citizens and involve the expenditure of public money. That has happened before—it happened when the Conservatives were in power, and it is happening now. However, I wish to place on record that I think it is wrong. This is not the right forum in which to propose such legislation.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Elliot Morley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on the way in which she moved the Bill, and on the detailed way in which she has addressed the issue. We have had discussions during the preparation of the Bill, and I and my officials have been most impressed by the way in which she grasped the issues, made proposals and understood the points. Hon. Members will not be aware that my hon. Friend has been unwell this week, and it is a great tribute to her commitment that she was able to speak as she did.

The Government have made a pledge to end fur farming as soon as practicable, and we have been seeking the most appropriate way to do so. We shall support the Bill, and we wish it every success in its passage.

The majority of the points that hon. Members have made are fair and reasonable, and they deserve an answer. I shall try to answer them.

I was disappointed in the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton), who made some good points but could not resist a partisan attack on the Government. We, as a Government, are proud of our commitment to animal welfare and proud of what we have achieved in 18 months. I challenge the hon. Gentleman to name a Government who, in 18 months, have done as much to improve animal welfare.

Some people want us to do more and to work faster. We must work within the restraints of Government. We cannot deliver everything that we want in the first year; we must act within the parliamentary process, and that takes time. We would have delivered more were it not for the activities of some Conservative Members, who have delayed and frustrated a range of animal welfare measures introduced by hon. Members. If the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham wants to make political points, that is my response.

The history of fur farming is not a happy one. Over the years, a variety of animals bred for their fur have escaped. Mink is the well known one and has become established; coypu is another. Other exotic species have escaped from fur farms and become established in the wild, with undesirable results for our country's biodiversity and ecology. It is not just fur animals; the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) mentioned wild boar. We have wild boar living in the wild, and they are causing problems in Kent. The Government are addressing that issue.

The hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) vividly described the devastation that arises when mink escape or are released from whatever source, and the resulting costs—which fall on the Government, because in all the recent escapes the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has made staff available to try to round up mink, to trap them and to try to minimise the damage to the environment. That cost falls on the taxpayer.

Mr. Alan Clark: I do not want the Minister to slide on past and ignore the accusation that he made at the start of his speech—that some of my hon. Friends had frustrated measures that he has brought to this place and has now, presumably, abandoned. It is notorious in the animal welfare world that many of the manifesto pledges that the Labour party made have so far been ignored, and yet, on the basis of those pledges, they derived much support—traditional support—at the general election. Which measures were frustrated, and why did the Minister not use the very substantial majority—

Mr. Loughton: Government measures.

Mr. Clark: Which Government measures were frustrated, and why did not the Minister use the substantial majority that he commands in the House to push them through?

Mr. Morley: One measure that springs to mind is the Bill to regulate puppy farming introduced by one of my hon. Friends, which was frustrated by Opposition Members. The other, of course, was the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, which was also frustrated by Opposition Members. It is no use hon. Members saying that they were not Government Bills. There is the process of finding Government time, and we must live within the restraints of time that is made available.

Mr. Loughton rose—

Mr. Morley: I do not want to be diverted. People will judge for themselves in due course.

Mr. Loughton: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The Minister specifically mentioned Government animal welfare measures that had been frustrated by my Conservative colleagues. He has so far failed to list a single Government measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order but a point of argument, and I hope that it is a point of argument that will be confined, because we are dealing with this particular Bill.

Mr. Morley: I understand that, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The measures which were frustrated to which I referred were ones that we supported as a Government. Perhaps I should make that clear if Conservative Members want to be absolutely accurate. The Government will be judged in due course on what we have done and achieved in relation to animal welfare, as will those hon. Members who have opposed what the Government had been trying to do. Other Members on both sides of the House will also be judged accordingly.

Public consultation on mink farming was started in August 1997. The response was overwhelming opposition to fur farming and an overwhelming desire to see it ended. As part of the consultation, it became clear that the way to end fur farming would have to be through primary legislation. It cannot be done through secondary legislation, contrary to what the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham suggested. It is our advice that that is not the position.

We announced as a Government on 30 July 1998 that primary legislation would be required and that that process would be adopted. All fur farms have been informed of that in writing, and particularly when the Mink Keeping Order was renewed.

There are heavy demands on the Government programme. Many Bills are due to go through Parliament. It takes a while before Government time is made available for any Bill. In that respect, we are very grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Garston for introducing the Bill. It means that we can make some progress, and there are many people who want to see that progress made.

The Bill's provisions have been well outlined by my hon. Friend the Member for Garston. One of the key issues is that of compensation, which has been mentioned by several hon. Members. We take the issue seriously and we understand the arguments. We accept that there is a case for compensation. We have listened to the points that have been made by hon. Members, including the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson), on how that compensation should be paid. When I had a meeting with hon. Members who represent mink farmers in their constituencies, I made it clear that I would reflect on what they had said about such things as buildings and the effect on those who work for mink farms if mink farming comes to an end. I repeat that I will reflect on the points that have been made. They certainly could be addressed in Committee.

Mr. Hogg: There are two points about compensation on which I think the House would like the Minister's views. First, why is he excluding compensation for loss of revenue, profit or income? Secondly, are we not as a House facing the problem that the Bill provides only the opportunity for compensation? It does not provide for the certainty of compensation. Consequently, the House is not being asked to approve or disapprove a particular compensation regime. In reality, we never will be, so we are giving the Minister a discretionary power that can be exercised without any subsequent parliamentary procedure because the negative procedure is very uncertain.

Mr. Morley: It is fair to say that the details of compensation would be put before the House after the Bill went through its passage successfully. It is true that the present proposal is to use the negative statutory instrument procedure. However, I am prepared to reflect again on the point made by the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham on scrutiny of the details of the compensation arrangements. I do not want to be unreasonable and I shall give some thought to the matter.

I say to the right hon. and learned Gentleman—in my notes I have included his point on income—that no Government Bill for any sort of compensation could provide any open-ended commitment on income that could or could not be forgone in future. That is just not possible and it is not done. It is not the way in which any sort of Government compensation scheme would operate.

Mr. Hogg: Of course. No hon. Member could ask the Minister to give a blank cheque. However, the Minister will know that, for example, in personal injury cases the courts have a mechanism for formulating or calculating damages to be awarded for loss of income. There are procedures that can readily be adapted to the situation that we are discussing if the principle of future revenue loss is to be accepted as right.

Mr. Morley: To a certain extent, we have accepted the principle of income loss. Generally, mink breeding is on a three-year cycle and given the phase-out date that is proposed in the Bill, it may be that one year's cycle in relation to the sale of pelts will be denied to the mink farmers. We are prepared to deal with that. I hope that that goes some way towards meeting the right hon. and learned Gentleman's point. The details will be addressed after the Bill has been passed.

Mr. Owen Paterson (North Shropshire): The Minister has obviously worked closely with the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on the preparation of the Bill. I note that there is no statement in the Bill to the effect that it is compatible with recent European human rights legislation. Has he calculated the potential cost to the British taxpayer if one of the fur farmers took his case right to the top in the European courts?

Mr. Morley: The explanatory notes state that the Bill is compatible with legislation under the European convention on human rights. That point has been taken into account in the drafting of the Bill and in the Government's attitude to it. I can reassure the hon. Gentleman that we are confident that the Bill addresses the matter.

The right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham knows that as a strict legal principle, the Government are not obliged to give compensation for the effects of any measure that they introduce. This is a private Member's Bill. In the past, private Member's Bills have contained enabling powers to make compensation. They do not usually specify figures.

To be fair, we have accepted the principle of compensation in this case. That was not the case when the right hon. and learned Gentleman was the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. He closed down the head-deboning industry without offering any compensation whatever. Legally, he was well within his rights, which I accept. The Bill addresses the issue in a way that it is not strictly obliged to do.

Mrs. Gorman: On compensation, is it not a fact that the Government argue that they could not take back into national ownership industries such as British Rail because of the cost of compensation, which would be too expensive? The Government therefore accept the principle.

Mr. Morley: The hon. Lady is confusing the acquisition of assets with the Bill's impact on people's livings. Those are two different issues.

It is proposed in the Bill that the ban will take effect from 1 January 2002. That is to allow a reasonable winding-down period so that the companies concerned can make arrangements. When the Mink Keeping Order was last renewed, it was renewed for three rather than five years, in recognition of the fact that the Government intended to take steps to phase out fur farming. If some farmers choose to go to the end of the phase-out date, the order may have to be extended to that date. That action will be taken to ensure that mink farms are still regulated.

Perhaps I should explain to the House the purpose of the Mink Keeping Order. Some groups are badly informed and think that if the order was not renewed, fur farming in the United Kingdom would end. That is not so. If we had not renewed the order, mink keeping in this country would simply have been deregulated.

The order deals with the security of the mink farms. It does not cover welfare issues. If the order had not been renewed, we would not have the power to stop new mink farms being set up in areas where they may have had enormous environmental consequences, such as offshore islands, which are covered by the order.

I wanted to clarify the position. Some people think that by renewing the Mink Keeping Order, we were going back on our pledges. That misunderstanding was shared by some of those who wrote to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham. We will keep the order in place as long as mink farms exist in the UK.

The Government wholeheartedly condemn attacks on mink farms, people who release mink into the wild and people who abuse and intimidate those who are going about a legal trade. We may have our concerns and our disagreements about it, but the trade is legal. There is no justification for such irresponsible behaviour as releasing mink into the wild, whoever is behind it. The consequences for the mink and for wildlife are enormous. Such actions abuse the welfare of those animals and are based on anarchy and ignorance. We certainly have no truck whatever with that.

Time and attitudes in respect of all kinds of farming—not only mink farming—have moved on. Although I absolutely accept the point made by some hon. Members that public opinion should not in itself dictate policy or policy making, by the same standard none of us, as elected Members and representatives of the people, can ignore public opinion and the different trends within society.

Mr. Leigh: The Minister will remember the great campaign, fuelled by public opinion, to ban stalling and tethering. He has earned some credit with the farming community because he has told it that he has learned the lesson, in respect of battery hens, about acting unilaterally. My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) has mentioned the impact on that industry.

There are only 13 mink farms in this country and 8,000 in Europe. If we ban those farms, and if we attack the industry in the same way that we have attacked the pig industry, will not they simply move to Europe? What is the Minister's response to that?

Mr. Morley: I shall come to those points in a moment; I intend to address them.

The wearing of fur was mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Garston and others. The Bill is not about banning the wearing of fur. That is a moral choice for people to make. People increasingly decide not to wear fur, which is one reason why the fur industry is declining in this country.

It is perfectly reasonable to argue about justification in respect of phasing out fur farming, and the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham and the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) raised that matter from the Opposition Benches. I have met and consulted the Fur Breeders Association on a number of occasions, in opposition and as a Minister, and I have visited fur farms in Denmark privately, when on holiday. I did not go in and was not shown around, but I had a look at the farms, which are at the top end of the scale in terms of modernity and being well run. However, I noticed that, even on those farms, many of the animals displayed stereotypical behaviour, which suggested that they were under stress—an issue that has been mentioned by many academic reports on fur farming.

As I said in opposition, the Fur Breeders Association offered to fly me out, at its expense, to look at those farms. I would rather not do that. There are difficulties with taking support from different lobbying organisations; I have never done that, and I will not. I would much rather act privately. I have stood watching hunts in the crowd, with the hunt supporters and with the hare coursing supporters, so that I can see what goes on and can gain knowledge of the arguments. Those matters are not for this debate, but, in many cases, my concerns about and disgust with some of these activities have been reinforced.

I have also looked at different farming systems—officially as a Minister and unofficially as an individual—even to the extent of making sure that the French sheep had ear tags, in compliance with European Union regulations, while I was on holiday in France, although my family think that that is taking it a bit far. I am not convinced that fur farms in this country benefit the animals, but the argument concerns whether fur farming is acceptable or whether it could be made acceptable by changing the law and the regulations. I shall address those points.

The question whether any kind of animal rearing system is acceptable to the Government relates to the advice that we receive from our independent advisers.

[Mr. Morley]

Our principal independent adviser is the Farm Animal Welfare Council, which laid down five absolutely basic criteria with which any kind of animal rearing system must comply—the five freedoms, as they are called. For the information of the House, the five freedoms are freedom from hunger and thirst; freedom from discomfort; freedom from pain, injury and disease; freedom to express normal behaviour; and freedom from fear and distress.

Fur farming could comply with some of those basic freedoms. Animals could certainly be kept free from hunger and thirst, and there are regulations in respect of that. Other issues, such as discomfort, pain and injury, and fear and distress, are debatable from both sides of the argument. However, one of the crucial basic freedoms that is not debatable is freedom to express normal behaviour. That key issue should be addressed, and there have been some detailed studies.

Some hon. Members asked about the attitude of other countries. It is true that, although we may take steps to ban fur farming in the United Kingdom, it would not be banned in other countries. Austria has taken measures to ban fur farming there, and I do not doubt that other countries will follow suit. That problem should not deflect us from dealing with this moral and welfare issue.

There is also a practical matter to be considered. This country is an island, and the problems of animals escaping into the wild could have been avoided if such farms had not been established. As long as fur farming goes on, there will be the risk of animals escaping. As an island, it is to this country's advantage to ban such practice. I accept that that should have been done a long time ago, because some of these species are now well-established in the wild. Unlike coypu, which was eradicated, although it was difficult and expensive, it would probably be all but impossible to eradicate mink.

The Council of Europe has discussed the issue of improving cage standards on mink farms. Everyone agrees that current standards, which are applied in this country, are not acceptable. We took part in those discussions, and we made it clear that we believed that fur farming is unacceptable. I can tell the hon. Member for Hexham that Austria took part in those discussions even though it has taken steps to ban fur farming. Banning fur farming in this country would not preclude us from giving our opinion on standards, because we are entitled to do so as part of the democratic process. Even with the Dutch standards, which are an improvement on those applied in this country, despite the use of the new cages there is still a problem of animals expressing stereotypical behaviour.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: I thank the hon. Gentleman for meeting my colleagues and I the other day. I was churlish to forget to thank him for the hour that he gave us, and for promising to consider compensation in more detail.

Austria banned fur farming, but with the money that they were given some farmers set up shop 30 miles away in Czechoslovakia, which has far lower standards of supervision than those in Austria, so where is the benefit?

Mr. Morley: We are applying new standards in the Council of Europe, which goes beyond the countries of the European Union and covers eastern Europe. What happens in other countries should not deter us from taking decisions about what we and the people whom we represent want.

My hon. Friends the Members for Basildon (Angela Smith) and for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas), the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths) and the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham referred to the impact on mink. They are right and I agree with their analysis. Many detailed studies have been carried out in support of both sides of the argument. The question is whether fur farming can be made acceptable for the future.

Mink are solitary animals, and in the wild they have wide ranges and have access to water. Many scientists believe that they should have access to water, although some hon. Members argued the contrary. It is difficult to provide that access in a system of commercial rearing. No system so far proposed can meet those standards. If we went for higher standards, it would undoubtedly squeeze most, if not all, fur farmers out of business. It is strange that some Conservative Members were arguing that we should follow that path, and that, instead of taking a clear decision with a phase-out period and a compensation package, we should raise standards and bankrupt the people involved without paying any compensation. That does not seem a fair way in which to deal with this problem compared with the proposals in the Bill.

As has been said, the chairman of the Fur Breeders Association and the fur farmers with whom I discussed the Bill want to be clear about the future. If fur farming is to end, they want a phase-out date and compensation arrangements. They want to know what is happening so that they can plan for the future. The Bill meets all their concerns, so it came as no surprise to me that although the Fur Breeders Association would prefer not to have such a Bill, it is prepared to accept it.

Many scientific studies argued against fur farming and cast doubts over the conditions in which the animals are kept. Other vets and scientists put alternative views and suggested that the cages could be redesigned and made acceptable. Some of those arguments were also disputed by the scientific and veterinary profession.

The right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham was inconsistent in his argument as he said that battery cages were unacceptable and created animal welfare problems. Hens have been bred from jungle fowl for a very long time—no creatures are more domesticated—yet they still exhibit natural behaviour such as scratching and dust bathing. However, the five freedoms do not apply to battery cages. The Government have adopted a consistent approach. That is why we are arguing in Europe for the phasing out of battery cages in the long term.

Mr. Hogg: The Minister is quite right. However, in the short term he and many of his hon. Friends are eating eggs produced by the battery system. Therefore, I find his disparaging approach difficult to understand.

Mr. Morley: Consumers can choose whether they buy free-range or battery-produced eggs. There is no such choice in respect of fur—people cannot buy free-range mink fur. We are taking a consistent approach to the criteria. Although there are issues to be addressed in respect of welfare standards and alternative conditions, other European countries support our proposal and the European Parliament has voted for a 10-year phasing-out of battery cages.

Some scientists argued against the abolition of veal crates, sow stalls and tethers. There will always be arguments about the pros and cons of phasing out certain practices, however the right decision was taken. The European scientific and veterinary committee reached similar conclusions in respect of veal crates, sow stalls and tethers and in due course those practices will be phased out in Europe.

Mr. Paterson: Following my earlier intervention, my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Blunt) and I have gone through the Bill and the explanatory notes very carefully, but we can find no reference to any European human rights legislation, so the Bill may be committing the British taxpayer to substantial legal expenses in Europe. Is it not a futile gesture? The total sum of mink happiness will not be increased as the same number of mink will be farmed. The industry will simply move abroad to Czechoslovakia or the Slovak Republic where conditions will be worse than they are here.

Mr. Morley: I assure the hon. Gentleman that his point about the European Court of Human Rights is certainly being addressed. If it is not mentioned in the explanatory notes to the Bill, I am happy to write to him to confirm that the issue is being addressed. We are not committing the Government to such challenges. Any Bill that the Government support and that ultimately may become Government legislation has to bear that in mind. I have dealt with the point on other countries. What other countries do should not dictate what we do in this country.

The Government have been consistent in applying the same standards to any animal-rearing system. In Committee, we will examine the issues that have been raised in the debate to find out whether they are being dealt with, but the important thing is that there is a clear case against fur farming on welfare and moral grounds. It is a dying industry. The trends are against it. The Bill is a fair package that reflects overwhelming public concerns and the legitimate concerns of fur farmers.

It would not be in the interests of fur farmers to oppose the Bill, which would lead to further uncertainty and fly in the face of the overwhelming concern of the people whom we represent. The Government support the Bill. We are prepared in Committee to address the reasonable and fair points that hon. Members have raised, but, as we approach the next millennium, such rearing systems are no longer acceptable in a modern and compassionate society.

Mr. Alan Clark (Kensington and Chelsea): The House of Commons has a long, remarkable and honourable tradition of debating animal welfare issues, usually at the behest of Back Benchers. Indeed, many years ago, I made my maiden speech in this place in support a private Member's Bill, introduced by the hon. Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara), which would have outlawed hare coursing.

I am glad to be a sponsor of the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill and to congratulate the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on its concise and lucid quality, which is in marked contrast—I see him sitting beside her—to the Bill in the name of the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster). That was so ludicrously ill-drafted, penal and repressive that I spoke against it, although I had looked forward to it with high expectation.

If Back Benchers draft their measures properly and get the sympathy and support of the House, much good can come of them. I say in parenthesis that I am somewhat apprehensive, although I support the principle, of the Right to Roam Bill because it is in the name of the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice), who, whenever I hear him, is usually recommending to the House that one or other Tory Member should go to prison, and whose general attitude to social issues is down-market Leninist, as far as I can make out. He is the worst possible person to promote a Bill that has, in principle, much to be said for it and that should enjoy the support of the whole House. However, it remains to be seen what happens to that Bill.

I will not repeat many of the arguments that we have heard already; I do not want to take the House's time on that. I say simply that I, many hon. Members and many of the people who have written to us on the topic hold the view that man has a duty of care to all living creatures, consistent only with his own survival on the planet.

For example, where it is necessary for man to survive by eating animals, we have a duty to control and to regulate as far as we can, and to make as humane as possible the process by which they are put to death. Where man is advised, or believes, that medical science will be advanced by experimentation—a precept about which I am exceedingly doubtful—it is equally necessary for proper regulation to surround the process. But, here we have a case where animals are being bred simply for adornment. It is purely a commercial and profit-oriented activity.

Mr. Forth: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Clark: I recognise the voice of my right hon. Friend, who is not in his usual place—I do not know why; he usually sits next to me. I will tell him what is wrong with that. It is gratuitous cruelty, inflicted on other living creatures for a purpose that is totally unconnected with man's survival on the planet. It is thus in breach of a feeling that I hold in conscience—I know that I am not alone in that. We should do our best to eliminate such cruelty.

Mr. Crispin Blunt (Reigate): I have not been able to follow the argument being made by my right hon. Friend on the equivalence—or lack of it—of breeding for meat and farming for fur. He is a vegetarian and takes all sorts of funny supplements to make up for the absence of meat in his diet, and he has survived perfectly well to whatever age he is. If he does not have to eat meat, meat must not be required for man to survive. His argument could therefore be used to advocate banning not only fur farming but meat farming.

Mr. Clark: It could not. My hon. Friend—whose forensic skills are usually at a high level—makes a ridiculous and inconsistent argument. He knows perfectly well what I am saying. However, he did mystify me by saying that my diet includes all sorts of strange supplements. I am not aware of them. I should like to put it on record that—unless people are lacing my food and drink—I am not "on" anything at all. [HON. MEMBERS: "Viagra?"] I thought that there might be some reference to that, and have literally lost count of the number of times that I have been asked that question. The answer is no, because I am far too cowardly, not for any other reason.

I do not know what my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Blunt) meant in his assertion, but am very happy to deny it. I have not taken even an aspirin for at least seven years.

Mr. Paterson: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Clark: Is it on diet?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. Perhaps we can now return to the subject of fur farming.

Mr. Clark: I hope that we can. Mr. Deputy Speaker, but my hon. Friend the Member for North Shropshire (Mr. Paterson) seems keen to question me on my argument. I am delighted to give way to him.

Mr. Paterson: My right hon. Friend is taking the line that fur is a luxury, perhaps recalling the old jingle:

"Would you prefer to sin with Eleanor Glyn on a tiger skin or would you prefer to err with her on some other fur?"

However, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) said, in the northern countries, fur is a vital product. If there were a cheaper and more suitable product for keeping out temperatures of minus 20 or 30 deg, surely people in Scandinavia, northern Russia and northern China-Mongolia would have found it. Fur is the only serious option.

Mr. Clark: That may very well be the case in those countries. Nevertheless, fur is farmed in the United Kingdom not to keep out the cold, but for the adornment of various fashionable people.

The belief that fur farming should be stopped is very widely held, and I have heard very little to destabilise that belief. The arguments against it can be grouped broadly under two headings. The first is that the activity will move to another country if we ban it here. My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) gave the examples of Austria and Czechoslovakia. He asked what would be the benefit of banning it here if farming moves some miles away. The benefit will be to our own consciences. We legislate for this country, not for other countries. If we believe that a practice is inhumane and repellent, it is our duty to see that it does not occur within our own frontiers. If the practice is moved and practised elsewhere, it is not our business.

The second group of arguments can be grouped under the broad heading of self-regulation. My hon. Friend said, "Farmers are very keen to sort out the matter and to do the right thing. Let's leave it to them and it will all, ultimately, be smoothed out. Be patient."

Self-regulation never works: one cannot self-regulate greed. As we know, the system of self-regulation established by the Press Council is a paper tiger and a laughing stock. Self-regulation in the City of London never operates effectively, and scandal proliferates. I have absolutely no confidence in self-regulation by a body whose profits depend on finding ways round those regulations, whether anyone pays lip service to them or not.

All those objections may have some substance, but they are not central to the Bill; they are matters of detail that should be discussed in Committee. I was very glad to hear the Minister say that the Government want the Bill to go to Committee. I strongly urge that it should receive its Second Reading.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): One or two of the points that have been made today seem to me to be specious. No one has said that we should not have humane conditions for mink or any other animal in captivity, although captivity, even for cows and sheep, is essentially unnatural. All herbivores roam over large distances, but we keep them confined to a certain extent, and all carnivores go hunting, so they probably travel even further, but we still do not say that we are treating them unnaturally when we keep them confined. If we did, we would close down all zoos and circuses. Some hon. Members may favour that, but that is not what we are debating.

The hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) adduced the argument of popular support. Her case would have been stronger if she had voted against the lowering of the age of consent in the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Bill, because the great majority would have favoured the status quo, so that is hardly an argument that she should pray in aid for the Bill.

Maria Eagle: As I said in response to an intervention by the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth), I was merely praying that argument in aid and not making it central to my case. Given that public opinion is so strong, it was worth mentioning it.

Mrs. Gorman: Many hon. Members, and my right hon. Friend the Member for Kensington and Chelsea (Mr. Clark), said that fur is a luxury. That is classism, if anything is. Primitive man used furs and many people rely on sheepskins to keep them warm. The fur people wear need not be mink, but to condemn the wearing of fur for classist reasons is nonsense.

One does not have to get fur from animals bred in this country, as it is available worldwide, and if it does not come from bred animals it may well come from animals trapped in the wild, a practice that is a danger to the survival of many species. Many conservationists advocate the keeping of animals in some form of captivity in order to preserve them. Wild animals such as tigers and lions can cause havoc in rural communities and are being hunted to extinction because people see them as a threat. It has been pointed out that mink, in the wild, are a threat.

Angela Smith: Will the hon. Lady name the conservationists who advocate keeping wild animals in small wire cages in which they cannot follow their natural behaviour?

Mrs. Gorman: That is a perfectly valid point, but it has often been said that, if animals are kept in captivity, there is a strong case for humane treatment, and we would all support that.

The point about compensation has been dealt with rather poorly. I know that it is in the Bill. When I spoke about the Labour party's record of arguing against renationalising certain industries because of the cost of compensation, the Minister pooh-poohed my argument, saying that it was simply a matter of paying for the cost of the assets of the business, and the Government were prepared to do that—but a business is the sum not only of its assets but of the goodwill, know-how, jobs and livelihoods involved.

If the Government close the businesses down, people should be compensated properly. The assets often lack face value because they are old and have been in use for some time—that is the principle when there is a takeover bid in the City—but the value to the individual fur farmer would be much greater. Most of the farms are small businesses and, when their assets are destroyed, the families involved can no longer support themselves.

Internationally, the arguments for compensation are extremely strong. Almost weekly, we read of demands for proper compensation for assets seized as long ago as the second world war. Most hon. Members would support proper compensation at today's values being paid to those whose assets were taken from them. The case for international action against the confiscation of assets is also well established: for example, Castro, who confiscated many American assets, still suffers sanctions. Those principles are well established, and I urge the Government, if they support the Bill and the payment of compensation, not to address only the odds and ends that go to make up the farms themselves.

The Minister advances the concept of basic freedoms, but it is absurd to suggest that those freedoms are natural rights—a natural part of an animal's existence—for, in the wild, animals do not enjoy those basic freedoms. Unlike the Minister, I cannot reel them all off, but let me cite the freedom from disease, pain and distress. Most animals in the wild die as a result of disease; many, having been attacked by other animals, die in pain; and I am sure that both those causes of death cause them some distress. To lay down acceptable standards and call them basic freedoms is nonsense.

The case for the Bill should be argued, and has been well argued today, on the basis of humane conditions and, if the Government are to proceed, of proper and thorough compensation. On those grounds, most people would support the Bill. However, the underlying arguments, which are based on envy of people who can, who want to, or who dare to, wear fur, are discreditable. As for popular support, if that is to be used to support the Bill, let me remind hon. Members that there are many examples of the House voting contrary to popular feeling, and I pray in aid last week's vote on the age of consent.

1.7 pm

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): I wonder where the Bill really comes from. When a Bill is a private Member's Bill, a clear understanding of its provenance is important because it enables the House to make its own judgment on how to react. The Minister was characteristically open in acknowledging that the measure is one that the Government had said they wanted to introduce, and he claimed popular support for it. He then said—I think these are his exact words—that the Government are most grateful to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle), who is the promoter of the Bill. I bet they are.

Anyone with a suspicious mind—I have occasionally been accused of being such a person—might think that the Bill is a Government Bill that is being slipped through the private Members' Bill procedure on the QT. Perhaps there is nothing wrong with that—it is entirely a matter for right hon. and hon. Members to decide for themselves. However, if the private Members' Bill procedure is being used as a sort of conduit for Government Bills for which the Government cannot or will not find the time, we should be informed of that, so that we can judge the Bill in that light.

Maria Eagle: May I satisfy the right hon. Gentleman on that point? The Bill is not a Government Bill that is being slipped quietly through under the private Members' Bill procedure. It is a Bill which I decided to promote and which I subsequently discussed with the Government. I can reassure him on that point.

Mr. Forth: I would not impute anything but the highest motives to the hon. Lady—that is not the point that I am trying to make. My point is that the Minister said that the Bill is one which the Government wanted which has now popped up, thanks to the hon. Lady and her desire to take such a Bill through the private Members' Bill procedure. That is all I am saying. However, on Fridays, when we discuss private Members' Bills, the House might want to know whether it is helping the Government by giving or not giving fair passage to a particular Bill. That is a relevant consideration for the House to take into account when considering private Members' Bills. That is the background point.

My approach is similar to that of my right hon. and learned friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg). I support the thrust of the argument that he made with typical elegance. The word that caught my eye immediately when I looked at the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill was "prohibition". The word reveals the attitude of mind that lies behind measures such as the Bill. It is assumed that it is legitimate and valid for a majority in the free society on which we pride ourselves to say to others, "If I disapprove of something, I believe that it is legitimate for me to legislate to make sure that you do not do it."

There is a profound matter of principle here on which I must take issue with the hon. Member for Garston, who said as she introduced the Bill, that it was a small matter. It is not.

Mr. Swayne: Will my right hon. Friend reflect that this is not a matter of principle, but one of degree and judgment? I am sure that he would agree that it would be quite improper for him to eat his grandmother simply because he had bought the carcase on a free and open market.

Mr. Forth: My hon. Friend may wish me to make some comparison between my grandmother and a mink, and I may do so if he waits for a while. I thought that someone—although I did not expect it of my hon. Friend—would attempt to draw parallels between laws designed to protect one human being from the behaviour of another and laws relating to the activities of humans regarding animals. There is an important distinction, and I cannot share the view—although I respect the honesty and integrity of those who hold it—that places animals in the same category as humans. I hold a view about the hierarchical nature of nature itself that precludes my accepting that analysis.

For the moment, however, I am more concerned about prohibition. We must face up to what we, as legislators, feel about the important principle of whether we are entitled to legislate to prevent other people from behaving in ways of which we disapprove. I accept the point made by the hon. Member for Garston and the Minister that we are not talking—not yet—about people's right to wear fur. We are discussing whether people have a right to conduct a business in the production of fur.

I am worried by the Bill's implications. The hon. Member for Garston talked about thin ends of wedges, denying that the little measure that she is promoting for limited reasons should in any way be seen as the start of a process that might lead to further prohibitions. I accept totally that she does not see it that way, but others may. They may say that a start has been made and a bridgehead established. They may say that they have established that the law can be used to prohibit the production of fur in ways of which they disapprove, and that that could provide a basis on which to take further steps.

Mr. Vernon Coaker (Gedling): I am trying to follow the right hon. Gentleman's argument. Is he suggesting that because it would infringe individual liberty, it would be wrong to enact any legislation that stopped someone mistreating a dog or any other animal? Is he saying that it is an infringement of individual liberty if the law prevents a human being from acting cruelly towards an animal? If so, I totally disagree with him. The Bill is simply saying that it is wrong to be cruel to animals.

Mr. Forth: The hon. Gentleman makes a fair point, and I shall take it head on. I regard myself as a libertarian, and I have always striven to be one. It is a difficult posture to take in modern-day politics, but I strive towards it. I accept none the less that in a civilised society, albeit one that likes to think that it is free, there is of course a legitimate role for the law in seeking to limit behaviour that is harmful to other people and other species. I shall return later to the animal welfare point, which has arisen many times during the debate, because there is a danger of confusing the need to make sure that the welfare of animals is protected and promoted as far as possible, which is a well-established principle, and the need to ban an activity because welfare measures are insufficient or are not sufficiently policed or enforced. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) for raising that issue.

Opinions polls, which were mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman), have limitations, and we must deal with those. The hon. Member for Garston has been honest about such polls and said that she is not using them as a principal argument, but she said that she was confident that the majority view in this country is that fur farming should be banned, and prayed in aid that view. That is a dangerous argument.

My hon. Friend the Member for Billericay mentioned homosexuality. The House recently acted in defiance of what appeared to be the majority opinion because some hon. Members, principally Labour Members, believed it was right to do so, and said so again and again. The example that I always give in this case is capital punishment. If established majority opinion were the main determinant of what we did in the House, we would have restored capital punishment a long time ago, but I am sure that Labour Members would not find that argument attractive.

Mr. Swayne: Will my right hon. Friend agree that it is important, when examining opinion poll evidence, to ask to what extent the person being polled was informed about the subject on which he was polled and how many times in the previous days it had exercised his mind? It is therefore much more important to take account of the opinions of Brigadier Tynan and the people of Crow Hill, which were quoted by the hon. Member for Garston, who have informed themselves about the issue.

Mr. Forth: I am sure that the brigadier's views will greatly influence the House and I hope that my hon. Friend will shortly have an opportunity to expand on his own views and those of the brigadier.

My hon. Friend makes an important point about the distinction, of which I am sure all hon. Members are well aware, between the pre-printed postcard and the carefully handwritten letter, which is one of the aspects of modern politics and MPs' postbags. What relative weight do we place on a letter that is carefully composed and handwritten by someone who is worried about an issue and wants us to think about it, and a mass-produced, pre-printed postcard, on which people simply write their name and address before sending it to their MP? Some hon. Members may give them equal weight, but I have always thought that if someone takes the trouble to express a view, we should pay close attention. I confess that the pre-printed postcard does not carry nearly as much weight with me. That is rather analogous to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne). That is an aspect of opinion polls of which we should be aware.

We all know that it is easy to fashion a question to which the first 100 or 1,000 people whom one meets in the street will almost certainly give a positive response. I suspect that if one asked people, "Do you believe that the cruel techniques of fur farming should be banned in this country?", most people would say yes. I am not sure how one would fashion the question if one wanted them to answer no.

I now move on to the next part of my argument. My right hon. Friend the Member for Kensington and Chelsea (Mr. Clark) touched on this point in a typically impassioned intervention. We all know and respect my right hon. Friend's sincere and long-held views on this matter. One can adopt one of two positions, at either end of the spectrum. One can either say that human beings and all other animals, or species, are broadly equivalent and that we must not use or abuse animals in any way for food, shelter, clothing or anything else. Alternatively, one can say that all other species are subordinate to human beings and therefore available for our reasonable use. My right hon. Friend probably tends to the first view, whereas I tend to the second.

Mr. Alan Clark: Surely there is a third position. Other species, as my right hon. Friend calls them, have less fully developed central nervous systems and, most significant in this context, do not have the power of speech. They may be inferior to the extent that they are subordinate—I use his word—but it is precisely that which imposes a duty of care on the human race, consistent only with their own survival. One does not have to regard other animals as having parity with human beings, but nor should we fall into the trap of regarding them as inferior and to be exploited because they cannot communicate with each other as we do. Surely, they are part of the miracle of creation of which man, as the highest form of life, has a duty of custody.

Mr. Forth: I accept that argument. Having identified the two extreme positions, so to speak, I was about to go on to say that most people occupy a position somewhere in between. Very few people—not even, I think, my right hon. Friend—would eschew all products from other species. I am glancing at his feet—unless he is, unusually, wearing plastic shoes today, that would make the point adequately. However, that is not the issue. The issue is what sort of reasonable use or exploitation with care do we find acceptable?

Today's debate is about whether one makes a distinction between the reasonable use of chickens, pigs and so on and the use of animals raised for fur. Whether they regard that as an important distinction is, I suspect, what will motivate most hon. Members to support or disagree with the Bill. Personally, I do not discern a distinction between the proper raising or breeding of animals for eating and for wearing that is sufficient to drive me to support the Bill. Support for the Bill rests on whether one feels able to make that distinction.

Mr. David Maclean (Penrith and The Border): In a similar vein, has my right hon. Friend reflected that if the proponents of the Bill argue that it is unethical to keep animals in small cages simply to provide titillation for those people who wear fur, surely the same is true for those who, for purely aesthetic reasons, keep budgerigars, rabbits and various other creatures, not for eating or to keep the human race alive but solely for their own enjoyment?

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is correct. Like me, he has probably received many postcards about circus animals. I have taken this matter up with Ministers and received several ministerial replies, which I have of course passed on to my constituents. This is similar territory. One has to ask how comfortable we feel about the use of animals for domestic or public entertainment, and the conditions in which they should be kept. We all have different views. Some hon. Members may easily make the leap to saying that we should ban animals in circuses because such use and abuse of animals is unacceptable. Others may have views on domestic pets—be they goldfish, birds in cages, rabbits in hutches, or whatever. These are all legitimate areas of concern, which serve to illustrate that the absolute argument used by some today about mink is not as absolute as it might seem.

Mr. Dismore: There may be concerns about all sorts of aspects of animal welfare, and I personally am concerned about circus animals. However, the fact that there is a series of other issues does not mean that we should not tackle this very important issue, on which many people have sent me handwritten letters. I should say also that I have not had a single letter opposing the Bill.

Mr. Forth: One rarely does—that is not as conclusive an argument as the hon. Gentleman suggests. After years and years of receiving such letters, he will find that most people who are content with the status quo tend not to write to their Member of Parliament saying, "Please maintain the status quo." It is almost invariably those who want change who take the trouble to write. I do not know how many letters the hon. Gentleman has received. I imagine that, like me, he has about 72,000 voters. I do not know what proportion of them have taken the trouble to write to him on the matter. I invite him to divide the number of voters by the number of letters he has received to find the level of concern among his constituents.

There has not been too much discussion about the Bill. I have always thought that Second Reading was the appropriate opportunity for hon. Members to give some thought to a Bill, if only to guide themselves and others as to how the Bill could be looked at in Committee and beyond. Unusually—especially for a Bill with Government input—clause 1(4) refers to a person guilty of an offence being "liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £20,000."

In my experience, it is most unusual for a specific figure to appear in the Bill in this context. The reason is straightforward. I can remember years ago when I used to argue for such penalties to be included in Bills. I was persuaded—I still am—that that was not wise, because if one ever wanted to vary the penalty—if, for example, it was decided that the penalty was insufficient—one would require primary legislation to amend the Act to alter the figure.

That is why nearly all Acts involving a penalty refer to a scale. As scales can be dealt with by regulation and statutory instrument, flexibility is provided. I am trying to be helpful to the supporters of the Bill by saying that putting a figure of £20,000 in the Bill is unwise. Suppose we had a period of rampant inflation.

Mr. Keith Hill (Streatham): Not under Labour.

Mr. Forth: The hon. Gentleman—the Whip on duty—would say that, wouldn't he? Knowing him, he will probably produce a press release on the back of that comment.

I was asking whether it was wise to have a fixed, explicit penalty figure in the Bill. I was puzzled by its inclusion. On reflection, I realise that the Government may not have played as large a part in the Bill's drafting as I had supposed, because they surely would not have allowed that provision to appear in the Bill if they had drafted it. My initial suspicions may have been unfounded.

[Mr. Forth]

The subject of forfeiture orders bothered me because, unless the process of forfeiture is defined much more closely than it is in the Bill, there is a distinct possibility that the welfare of animals may be prejudiced, rather than improved. I say that because, as I read the Bill—I may be wrong—the assumption appears to be that, if it is found that the animals concerned are being abused or are suffering, their forfeiture will end that. The Bill reveals that a forfeited animal may be killed. That strikes me as an odd way to go about things; it is as though one were saying to the animal, "To spare you the problems of being raised in inhumane conditions, we shall take you away and quietly kill you."

Clause 3 concerns the effect of forfeiture orders. Unusually, it says:

"Any person claiming to have an interest in the animals concerned may appeal against a forfeiture order", and it says how he may do so. I should have thought that that was a matter of rights under common law, but the Bill insists on saying that, and in so doing it raises the usual problems about access to justice and the likelihood that a person who had been involved in such farming and who wanted to appeal against a forfeiture order could take his case to court and pursue it effectively against the powers that be—the bureaucracy. It is a time-honoured but real problem. It is pointless to talk about forfeiture in a Bill when there is no means of ensuring access to justice.

The question that I want to ask—I am really asking these questions so that the Bill's promoter may deal with them when she winds up the debate—is whether such people are likely to have access to legal aid when pursuing the matter of forfeiture through the courts. There is no point in our saying in the Bill that people may appeal such an order in court if, realistically, such people will be unable to do so.

Clause 3(4)(c) says:

"Where the court makes a forfeiture order, it may order the offender to pay such sum as the court may determine".

It then says that the court may order that the offender keep the animals

"pending their destruction or other disposal."

That strikes me as extremely odd. For a start, the offender may be unable to pay the sum involved, in which case I shudder to think what will happen to him under the law—whether he will be in contempt and so on. Secondly, it hardly fits the Bill's aim for it to say that the person against whom a forfeiture order has been made should be ordered to keep the animals pending their destruction or other disposal. We have been told all morning long that the Bill's purpose is to prevent animals from suffering. Here, in the Bill itself, is a measure that could be said to contribute to animals' suffering, unless I have misread it badly.

The hon. Member for Garston dismissed those points as Committee points, and implied that it was inappropriate on Second Reading to consider any of the detail—that we should give the Bill a grand sweep of approval and leave it to the Committee to sort out the details. I have never accepted that approach to our responsibilities in the House. I believe that Second Reading is an opportunity for Members to study the Bill—not just to decide whether they accept it in principle, but to concern themselves with what they regard as important provisions of the Bill, especially where its detailed provisions may work against its stated objective. That cannot be right or sensible.

Under clause 4 we have our old friend—no, it is not a friend; our normal cause for concern—powers of entry and enforcement. Yet again it would appear that the authorities are being given very wide powers of entry to people's premises and powers to enforce the Bill. I want to hear much more about that before I am satisfied of the workability or desirability of the measure.

I move on quickly to clause 5, which deals with compensation. We have had some debate on that, but it is an important matter. I think that it was first raised by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham. I shall raise it in a similar way because I believe that we should have heard more from the Minister about whether the Government are accepting a new and different principle and establishing a precedent.

A few months ago we had an interesting debate on quarantine, in which the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who is now on the Government Front Bench, was involved. I have no doubt that the hon. Gentleman will recall it. Against that background, I detect a difference of view between Ministers. The Parliamentary Secretary seemingly accepts the principle of compensation and is prepared to build it into the Bill, whereas only a few months ago the Minister of State was saying that he did not accept the principle. We may be breaking new ground.

As my hon. Friends have asked, whether or not we are setting a precedent and whether or not it is important, should compensation appear under the aegis of a private Member's Bill or should a new principle be established in a Government Bill?

Mrs. Gorman: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Forth: I will, but I want to conclude my remarks.

Mrs. Gorman: I wish to intervene only briefly. My right hon. Friend has long and detailed knowledge of Government policies, and will know that in the past a Labour Government, when they were nationalising our great industries in the 1960s, paid more than adequate compensation to businesses that they took over. Some of those businesses with moribund stocks received—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. Has the hon. Lady finished?

Mrs. Gorman: I was about to finish, Mr. Deputy Speaker, before you told me to sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, I could not hear what the hon. Lady was saying because she was not addressing the Chair. Perhaps she could do so now.

Mrs. Gorman: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was complimenting my right hon. Friend the Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on his knowledge of the history of political activity and pointing out to him that in the past the Labour party has accepted the principle of a more than reasonable level of compensation. When a Labour Government were nationalising all our great national industries—shipbuilding, railways, the mines and the car industry—they paid more than adequate compensation. Some industries with moribund plant received many millions of pounds. The Labour party has accepted the principle of compensation and it should be incorporated into the Bill.

Mr. Forth: I am grateful as ever to my hon. Friend. She has led me to my penultimate point, and that is the reference in clause 5(3)(a) to the role of the Lands Tribunal, which puzzles me. Surely the Lands Tribunal is distinctly unqualified to make judgments on appropriate levels of compensation in the area that we are discussing. It would be difficult enough to establish the appropriate level of compensation in the event that fur farms were closed down by law. To provide in the Bill that the Lands Tribunal is the appropriate body to make such judgments strikes me as being somewhat odd. The hon. Member for Garston no doubt had a perfectly good reason for the reference. When she replies, she might tell us why the reference was to the Lands Tribunal as opposed to any other body or institution that could deal with the matter. The reference strikes me as being somewhat odd.

I intended to refer—perhaps one of my hon. Friends will pick up the point—to welfare. If the argument is about the welfare of the animals rather than some other principle, surely the thrust of the argument should be about the enforcement of welfare conditions.

Mr. Maclean: Leave it to me.

Mr. Forth: I shall leave it to my right hon. Friend.

I round off my speech with the point that if we are talking about the welfare of animals—mainly or almost exclusively mink in this instance—we should look to existing regulations to see whether they are adequate, and then to enforcement. Simply to say that animals are suffering and therefore we should go straight to a prohibition or ban is not acceptable.

I fully accept the arguments about animal welfare. As a society, we have long since accepted them. In fact, we have gone further than most other societies in that direction. I have no problem with that. However, I have a problem when it is said that, because a particular type of animal is suffering in particular circumstances, we cannot deal with the matter by means short of prohibition. I do not accept that. That is my problem with the Bill. I should have preferred it had the hon. Member for Garston used the occasion of the Bill to deal with any welfare problem rather than producing a Bill which includes in its short title the word "prohibition" and so scares off people like me.

1.40 pm

Mr. Desmond Swayne (New Forest, West): I shall not detain the House for long, as most of the arguments that I would have made have been made—some by Opposition Members, surprisingly, and some by Labour Members—and I have disposed of some of my points in interventions.

Tendentious nonsense is associated with both sides of the argument. The early-day motion that trailed the Bill referred to inessential commodities and luxury and expensive items. Traces of that argument have been rehearsed today. I regard that as entirely irrelevant. It would appalling if we banned items because they were expensive or luxurious or inessential. I do not wish to go down that road.

Mr. Maclean: In case I am not able to speak in the debate, may I ask my hon. Friend whether he is aware that 90 per cent. of the output of British mink farms is not used for the fashion trade and worthless accessories, as some have put it, but is exported to bitterly cold countries where it is made into absolutely essential life-saving articles of clothing?

Mr. Swayne: The question of where the output goes is a matter of supreme indifference to me. I am indifferent whether it goes for a luxury item or an essential item. Given the limited output of a limited number of farms, I do not see my right hon. Friend's point as being particularly salient.

We have heard the libertarian argument—the vital principle that we should not legislate to ban activities simply because we disapprove of them. There should be a self-denying ordinance on politicians in any free society. The test of true liberalism is whether we are prepared to tolerate aspects of behaviour with which we are profoundly unhappy. That is an important principle, but it is not inviolable. It must have a test applied to it. The test must be the public good that will be achieved or the public evil that will be avoided by breaching that principle.

I come down in favour of the principle of the Bill. I do not appreciate that there is any difference in principle between farming for food and farming for leather or fur. I would not follow my right hon. Friend the Member for Kensington and Chelsea (Mr. Clark) in the arguments that he advanced, which appeared to be a form of militant vegetarianism. I have not dined with my right hon. Friend, but my reading tells me that he has a sophisticated palate. Given the arguments that he put before the House today, it would seem that in future he would be lucky if he were able to dine on birdseed.

The issue of cruelty as far as it attends fur farming is underlined by the fact that we have been told by those who oppose the Bill that fur has been farmed in the same way for 80 generations. It strikes me that if we were unable, in 80 generations of farming, to come up with a more humane method of doing so, that is a logical argument for moving straight to a ban, rather than filtering that process through some form of regulation.

Given the nature of mink as wild animals, there is no humane way of farming them that would not present an unacceptable level of danger to the natural wildlife and fauna of this country, which is after all a small island. Exactly the same argument applies to genetically modified crops.

The science that has been adduced with respect to the mink gene pool strikes me as fundamentally flawed. It seems to owe a great deal more to the discredited ideas of Dr. Lamarck and the case of the midwife toad in the last century than to any kind of logical examination of the facts as they present themselves.

It is monstrous for hon. Members to suggest that mink are a domestic animal. We have, over generations, bred a number of domesticated species, so much so that chickens are now egg-laying machines and could not possibly survive in the wild. Nor, indeed, could cows, which are bred as milking machines—they could not survive in the wild because there would be no one to milk them. That is not the case with mink.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: I am fascinated by my hon. Friend's turn of argument. Is he saying that we should not raise pigs in confined circumstances and all should graze the New Forest?

Mr. Swayne: The pigs that graze the New Forest for those commoners with such a right provide a great service and the other stock in the forest provide a vital ecological function. The mink do not do so. They destroy our indigenous animal populations, which have never been exposed to such a threat. I urge my hon. Friend to attend the owl sanctuary at Crow Hill and speak to the curator about the damage and destruction done as a consequence of the escape of mink. Such escapes are an inevitable consequence of mink farming and do not always arise from direct action by lunatic animal rights organisations.

Mr. Atkinson: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way a second time. I agree entirely that feral mink are a tremendous problem, which is why I enjoy hunting them with a pack of hounds. Will he join me in saying that Labour Members should stop attacking the hunting of mink with hounds and support it?

Mr. Swayne: I entirely concur with my hon. Friend. It was regrettable that New Forest district council did not call upon the mink hounds to assist with the remedying of the situation when it dealt with the escape in July last year.

I am in favour of the principle of the Bill, but I have a reservation with respect to compensation. First, I am deeply opposed to secondary legislation. This House, which has a well-oiled machine for examining primary legislation, should not hand over to Ministers the power to make law through secondary legislation. We do not have adequate procedures for the scrutiny of secondary legislation and I am not happy with the Bill in that respect.

Neither am I happy with the level of compensation suggested in the explanatory notes. Last Friday, I had the unenviable task of visiting Mr. Smith, who farms mink at Crow Hill, to explain why I would vote for a Bill that would deprive him of his livelihood. Having told him that, it is incumbent on me to ensure that he is compensated properly for the loss of that livelihood. I will be involved in taking his livelihood away from him and I feel strongly that, because my vote will have such an effect, I and other hon. Members must frame the compensation that he will receive. That issue must not be handed over to Ministers to deal with beyond our control and direct scrutiny.

Mr. Leigh: My hon. Friend takes a novel position for a Conservative—he is arguing for more public expenditure. Will he please explain why we should spend even more money to drive those people not out of business, but simply on to the continent, where there are 8,000 mink farms? How does he justify that, as a Conservative?

Mr. Swayne: I justify it on the simple principle that I enunciated at the outset: the great public good to be achieved or the public evil to be avoided. I have summed that up in my arguments in respect of the distasteful, unpleasant and cruel nature of mink farming. I have made a value judgment about which is the greater of the evils involved. I heard what my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) said about compensation payable during the 1960s, although, given her looks, I am surprised that she has any recollection of those times. I am not sure whether she spent those days in suspended animation, because I have no recollection of generous compensation.

The Minister said that he will examine these issues. I urge him to consider carefully the case that will be made by the small number of fur farmers who will lose their livelihoods as a consequence of this measure.

Mr. Paterson: How does my hon. Friend square that view with his earlier statement that he was supporting the Bill because he was being driven by a vexatious constituent, the NIMBY brigadier?

Mr. Swayne: That is a monstrous suggestion. Undoubtedly, the attitude of people who live near mink farms is coloured by the proximity of the farm. That is entirely appropriate. It is understandable for someone to dislike a mink farm because of the smell and the nuisance, and as a result to take an interest in what goes on in the farm.

The residents of Crow Hill wrote to me immediately after the election and asked for my view on the banning of fur farming. I palmed them off with a reply saying that I was not in favour of banning anything, and that one should consider better regulation to make it more humane. The residents then sent me a video that they had taken of the fur farm. I was appalled when I watched it, and as a result I examined the matter in much greater detail and visited the farm. That has led me to support the Bill today.

Mr. Owen Paterson (North Shropshire): It is a pleasure to follow my hon. Friend the Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne), who always gives a colourful and punchy display. Unfortunately, I do not agree with his argument on this occasion. I join other hon. Members in heartily congratulating the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Maria Eagle) on her good fortune in coming so high in the ballot. It reflects on the excellent governance of this country in the past 18 years that her priority is to close down 11 mink farms.

I should begin by declaring an interest. There has been some confusion between the leather industry and the fur industry. Before entering the House, I spent my whole career in my family's leather business, and I have declared my interest in the Register of Members' Interests. I am also the United Kingdom's delegate to COTANCE, which is the European confederation of tanners and leather dressers, and I was president of that organisation from 1996 to 1998.

In her excellent and well-explained introduction, on which I congratulate her, the hon. Member for Garston stated that the Bill excluded all skins or furs from animals that have been raised for meat. She is quite right, but my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) was slightly unclear about the difference between skin products from animals raised for meat or milk production and those from animals whose skins are the end product in themselves.

The leather industry processes by-products of the meat, milk and wool industries. The skin and hide represent about 7 to 15 per cent. of the total carcase value. It is important that the House understands the difference between processing a by-product, which is a valuable service for the whole country, and raising an animal specifically for its skin. If the House will excuse the pun, there is a woolly area. Certain skins are anomalous. The harmonised customs tariff is in the Official Journal of the European Communities volume L292, and I should like to refer to two or three areas that should be tidied up if the Bill is to proceed, otherwise some people may unwittingly get caught.

The first point states:

"Throughout the nomenclature references to 'furskins' other than to raw furskins of heading No. 4301 apply to hides or skins of all animals which have been tanned or dressed with the hair or wool on."

There is a very small trade in bovine hides where the hair is left on, generally for use by interior decorators or architects. I admit that it is a long shot, but it is conceivable that someone might breed Belted Galloways that have wonderful skins that look very good for use by some abstruse New York architect and the skin might just be more valuable than the carcase of the beast.

A much more likely case that really does need tidying up is that of sheepskins. According to chapter 43 many sheepskins of rare breeds qualify as fur. Heading 4301 refers to:

"Raw furskins . . . other than raw hides and skins".

Heading 4301 10 00 refers to the skins

"of mink whole, with or without heads or tails or paws".

Virtually in the same category is heading 4301 30 00 which refers to the skins

"of lamb, the following: Astrakhan, Broadtail, Caracul, Persian and similar lamb, Indian, Chinese, Mongolian or Tibetan lamb, whole with or without head, tail or paws".

Under the Bill as drafted, if a farmer in Britain raised those species and the value of the skin was more than that of the carcase—I would be grateful if the hon. Member for Garston would listen as it is a deadly serious point—that person would be in breach of the law.

In respect of the fur trade, I have something in common with the hon. Lady and the Minister in that I have never been to a fur farm. I have absolutely no connection with the fur industry. However, furs have been a trade commodity since the Chinese and the Phoenicians, since the Russians drove west to Siberia and since we fought it out with the French over the Hudson Bay Company in Canada. Fur is not just a luxury product; it is a fundamental commodity. I totally disagree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Kensington and Chelsea (Mr. Clark), who is no longer in his place. Fur is part of a huge international industry that goes way beyond the requirements of luxury trade. If it is minus 20 deg or minus 25 deg in Novosibirsk, northern Norway or Urumchi, no one has yet devised a more suitable material for keeping out the cold than fur.

In the European Union it is estimated that the fur trade employs 175,000 people directly, plus a further 50,000 in supply trades. The total retail trade turnover of the EU in fur is estimated at more than $6 billion. It is a substantial industry that goes well beyond the small world of fashion.

Farmed furs are the mainstay of the fur trade, accounting for some 80 to 85 per cent. of the industry's turnover. In Britain, mink predominate as the main species. I find it extraordinary that we are debating the future of 11 British fur farms producing only 100,000 mink pelts against world production of 26 million. We are talking about 11 fur farms out of 8,000 in Europe.

In Denmark and Holland they will be laughing all the way to the bank. They have more than half of world production, so if British production is closed down they will pick up the slack. Another fundamental point is that the sum of mink happiness will not increase because the same number of mink will be farmed. They will still be kept in the cages that Labour Members find abhorrent, but those cages will be in Holland, Denmark and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) pointed out, the Czech Republic, where they will not be subject to regulation and control by British vets and the British Government.

Several Labour Members have argued that mink are wild animals and live miserable lives. I find that hard to understand when the first symptom that an animal is unhappy or unhealthy is that its coat becomes dull. It is fundamental to the success of those enterprises that they produce healthy pelts to get the best value. I have yet to hear any evidence today that farmers are deliberately rearing unhappy or unhealthy animals. It defies all logic.

Mr. Gunnar Krantz, former chairman and chief veterinarian of the Swedish Federation of Animal Protection Societies, said:

"Only a person who is interested in animals and who likes them becomes a fur farmer. The farmer who has no real interest in his animals or feeling for their welfare soon suffers himself, in the form of poor financial return."

Several hon. Members have said that the animals retain their wild characteristics, despite having been reared for 80 generations. If one walks into a fur farm, the wild animal runs away and to the back of the cage. Fur farmers whom I have talked to have told me that the animals come to the front of the cage because they look forward to being fed. Professor Knud Erik Heller of the Institute of Population Biology at the university of Copenhagen has said:

"From a scientific point of view, fur animals that have been domesticated for more than 10 generations must be considered as so far genetically removed from their ancestors that they have to be treated as fully domesticated subspecies. Irrespective of the present taxonomy of the animals it has to be realised that it would be disastrous to the welfare of the animals to go on treating them as wild animals in respect to legislation. The majority of farmed fur animals require the same status as all other commonly held animals in modern husbandry."

I quote another expert from Denmark, where there is a huge fur industry. Steffen Hansen, a doctor at the National Institute of Animal Science, said:

"significant behavioural and physiological changes achieved through domestication therefore make it unreasonable to make direct comparisons between farmed mink and their relations in the wild, when considering their welfare."

The House should pay attention to the opinions of those experts.

Mr. Forth: In that context, does my hon. Friend recall that, when the Minister spoke, he said that he had paid a private visit to a fur farm in Denmark and that it was at the top of the range. He seemed to imply that the practice in Denmark was either acceptable, or certainly much more acceptable. That suggests that we should listen carefully to the Danish experience because it may point the way in which we should go.

Mr. Paterson: That is an admirable intervention. I am coming on to that. Our regulation system and our Ministry have failed to enforce a substantial range of powers that already exist.

Mr. Leigh: Before time runs out, will my hon. Friend deal with the view that has been expressed by the National Farmers Union, which sums up the debate:

"It would be a major step to move from accepting what has hitherto been a legitimate form of farming, which is the subject of assiduous regulation and inspection by the authorities, to banning it altogether"?

Will he deal with that philosophical point, which is the kernel of the argument?

Mr. Paterson: Again, I was coming to that point. We have a raft of regulation that should be properly enforced. The reaction should be to improve the regulation and enforce it better, rather than to go for the sledgehammer approach of banning the whole business.

We have the Mink Keeping Order 1997. There is the European convention on the protection of animals kept for farming purposes, and the European Union directive on farm animal welfare. I take just one. The European convention refers specifically to "animals bred or kept for the production of food, wool, skin or fur or for other farming purposes".

It is very detailed. Article 3 states:

"Animals shall be housed and provided with food, water and care in a manner which—having regard to their species and to their degree of development, adaptation and domestication—is appropriate to their physiological and ethological needs in accordance with established experience and scientific knowledge."

[Interruption.]

Mr. Forth: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In the context of the debate, should Labour Members be protected against external stimuli applied by someone who is not here?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): That is not a sensible point of order.

Mr. Paterson: It was still quite amusing and relevant to the control of Labour Members.

Article 6 of the convention states:

"No animal shall be provided with food or liquid in a manner, nor shall such food or liquid contain any substance, which may cause unnecessary suffering or injury."

Article 5 states:

"The lighting, temperature, humidity, air circulation, ventilation, and other environmental conditions such as gas concentration or noise intensity in the place in which an animal is housed, shall"

have regard "to its species".

Time is running on. Although I could quote further from European legislation—

Mr. Swayne: No!

Mr. Paterson: As a gesture to my hon. Friend, I shall return home, to the United Kingdom, and deal with the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968, which gives the Minister huge powers to intervene.

Road Traffic (Vehicle Testing) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

2.16 pm

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

I regret that there is so little time for a Second Reading debate. The Bill is not politically contentious, but is a solid, practical measure that is now needed. It has considerable cross-party support, which is not surprising since the evolutionary process that has led to it was started by the previous Administration. The main purpose of the Bill is to provide a statutory framework that maximises the benefits of establishing a central computer database of the MOT test status of vehicles. Computerisation of MOT testing will happen with or without the Bill—the public-private partnership is advancing—but, if it is not enacted, we shall not fully benefit from the advantages that computerisation can bring. That is why the Bill is needed.

First, a computerised central database will aid law enforcement: it will encourage registered keepers to have a valid MOT certificate, because the police will be able to check on the police national computer. Secondly, a computerised database will promote the efficiency and fairness of the MOT test: the Vehicle Inspectorate will be better able to control testing standards, because inspectors will more easily be able to spot abnormal patterns of test results which show possible irregularities. Thirdly, computerisation is motorist friendly: it prepares the way for paperless vehicle relicensing transactions and so makes it possible for us, one day, to renew our car licence by telephone; and motorists who cannot immediately produce an MOT certificate when asked will be spared the inconvenience of producing it later at a police station, because the police will be able to check vehicle test status on the PNC.

One further point is that the measure is cost neutral. The purpose of the provisions is to ensure that, with the introduction of computerisation, the MOT test scheme continues to be fully self-financing. The Bill sets out how the Vehicle Inspectorate receives its funding after computerisation. It also enables the Secretary of State to prescribe fees in several circumstances.

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): My hon. Friend says that the Bill is funding neutral, but would it not require an increase in the cost of the MOT certificate, which will inevitably be borne by the motorist?

Mr. Hunter: Yes, my right hon. Friend is correct. It is anticipated that computerisation will add £1 to the cost of the certificate, which currently stands at more than £30, so the increase will not be significant.

Mr. Desmond Swayne (New Forest, West): Is there not another cost that the garages will be unable to pass on to motorists? I refer to the cost of vexatious regulation, inspection and training that may lead in time to the same awful unforeseen circumstances that have occurred under the Meat Hygiene Service.

Mr. Hunter: I do not accept the thrust of that argument. My measure is motorist friendly. There are accompanying costs, but they will be absorbed in the running of the various testing stations. I do not believe that my hon. Friend has a point of principle.

The Bill will enable maximum benefit to be derived from the introduction of computerisation to the MOT testing scheme. It is a commonsense and practical measure that will give the Vehicle Inspectorate far more control over what is happening at testing stations. It will consequently improve and enhance the efficiency of the scheme, promote compliance with, and enforcement of, MOT testing, eliminate the market for stolen or forged certificates, make it more difficult to disguise stolen cars for re-sale and deter clocking.

The Bill is necessary. I hope that the House will support it, and that we can compensate in Committee for the shortcomings of the Second Reading debate.

2.21 pm

Mr. Stephen Day (Cheadle): The official Opposition welcome and support the Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter). He has listed several of the benefits that the previous Government identified when they established a review of the benefits of computerisation. We wish the Bill well, so the best thing that I can do is sit down to speed it on its way.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): The Government very much welcome the introduction of the Bill by the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter). We believe that introducing computerisation will bring significant benefits to the way in which MOT testing is carried out. We are proceeding with modernisation of the scheme, but current legislation imposes constraints in one or two areas that prevent the achievement of all our objectives. The provisions of the Bill ensure modernisation in the most cost-effective way and to the maximum effect.

The principal purpose of the Bill is to amend provisions of part II of the Road Traffic Act 1988 relating to the "MOT testing scheme". None of the provisions would relax or remove any existing controls—on the contrary, they would preserve and enhance existing provisions.

The main objective of the MOT computerisation project is for the Secretary of State to establish and maintain a central record of the MOT status of vehicles subject to MOT testing. What the Secretary of State would not be able to do without the benefits of the provisions of this Bill would be to: enable the police to check easily and quickly whether a particular vehicle has a valid MOT certificate; help to facilitate paperless vehicle relicensing transactions; and use information from the proposed MOT database for the benefit of others, including to help pay for the cost of introducing computerisation.

Mr. Swayne: Does the hon. Lady possess a vehicle of a sufficient age to require such a certificate? Has she been down to the car park to see how many Members possess vehicles—as I do—that require such certificates?

Ms Jackson: My vehicle will require a certificate in October. If the hon. Gentleman has evidence of illegal activity, I trust that he will make it available to the relevant authorities.

The Bill will make it possible for owners to choose to relicense their vehicles over the telephone. The Government also welcome the provisions in the Bill that would make it possible for MOT information to be made available to prescribed persons in certain cases. For example, prospective purchasers of second-hand vehicles might be interested to see evidence of the recorded mileage of vehicles submitted for MOT test. No doubt, people will be interested to know about the track record of particular vehicle makes and models at MOT tests.

The Government would like to make it clear, however, that the identity of registered keepers of vehicles will never be recorded on the database. The Government will conform to data protection legislation. Equally, particulars in the database records, such as where and by whom an MOT test was carried out, would not be disclosed except in cases that may be prescribed by regulations. Disclosure would be permitted only where reasonable cause for requesting that it could be demonstrated. A legitimate connection with the vehicle could be ensured by quoting the 17-character alpha-numeric identification number that is unique to individual vehicles.

In implementing the Bill, the Government will, as I said, conform to the requirements of data protection legislation. The Bill's provisions will enable the Government to obtain the maximum potential benefits from a central computer record of MOT results of the 22 million or so vehicles tested every year at some 19,000 MOT testing stations.

A full regulatory impact assessment has been carried out. The estimated cost of computerisation will be about £22 million per annum. That cost will be borne initially by my Department's Vehicle Inspectorate, then by an increase in the test fee amounting to no more than about £1.

If anonymous information from the database could be used, as we hope, for other benefits, the Vehicle Inspectorate would have a share in the income generated, which it would use to help to reduce the test fee. The Bill would benefit consumers not only by making additional information available to them, but by reducing the cost of an MOT test.

The provision to amend the Department of Transport (Fees) Order 1988 by negative rather than affirmative resolution will be considered during the Bill's passage through Parliament and, for that reason, the Government agree that the provision in clause 6 is entirely appropriate.

Two further safeguards are built into Clause 6: the special procedure would be valid only for 12 months and any order made under the provisions would be subject to annulment by resolution of this House.

The Government very much welcome the Bill, which will greatly assist in obtaining the maximum benefits from introducing computerisation into the MOT scheme, not least, as the hon. Member for Basingstoke has already pointed out, in crime prevention and law enforcement. I therefore commend the Bill to the House.

2.27 pm

Mr. David Maclean (Penrith and The Border): I, too, welcome the Bill and congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on introducing it.

Time is pressing, and we all want to speed the Bill on its way, so I shall not pursue all the points that commend the Bill to the House. I shall merely flag up to my hon.

Friend one or two concerns that I may have a chance to address if I am fortunate enough to serve on the Standing Committee. I shall want to press the Government on the level of fees that they propose to stipulate in future for attendance at MOT testing centres, retesting vehicles and so on. My hon. Friend has already referred to those, and we will need to know what fees are proposed before the Bill returns to the House, as I hope it will.

I should also like clarification—if not in Committee, on Report—about the regulations that the Secretary of State may make. There are powers in the Bill to make wide regulations and we should like to know what he has in mind.

With those minor reservations, to which we shall no doubt have time to return, I welcome the Bill and commend it to the House.

2.28 pm

Mr. Hunter: Inevitably, this has been a very truncated debate that has focused on some salient features. Hopefully, those can be picked up in Committee. I commend the Bill to the House.

Public House Names Bill

2.28 pm

Mrs. Ann Winterton (Congleton): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

The British public house is a unique institution that has survived and developed over the centuries. It is part of the social fabric of not only the nation, but, perhaps more importantly, each and every local community. Many hon. Members and I are concerned about the increasing trend to develop so-called theme pubs, which have little or nothing to do with a locality's history and are usually given rather trendy, trite standard names. Traditional names, such as the King's Head, the Royal Oak and the Coach and Horses, have fascinating historical links, giving a particular locality a direct link to its past and, importantly, to its identity.

The Bill would amend the Licensing Act 1964 to include the name of a public house in the licensing conditions, thereby making it possible to change the name of a public house only after proper consultation with the local community via the planning authority and its statutory regulations.

I hope that the Bill will bring to a halt the McDonaldisation of public house names before it is too late—

Business of the House (Statutory Instrument)

Ordered,

That, if a Statutory Instrument relating to Implementation Bodies (Northern Ireland) shall be laid before the House on Monday 8th March, a Minister of the Crown may, notwithstanding the practice of the House, make without notice a Motion for the approval of the said Instrument.—[Mr. Hill.]

Marine Rescue Services

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Hill.]

2.31 pm

Mr. Robert Syms (Poole): This is the second Adjournment debate that I have secured in this Parliament, and I am pleased that the Minister who responded to the first is here again today. However, given the wide range of subjects covered by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, it does not surprise me that that should be so.

I intend to touch on two aspects of the maritime rescue services—the Coastguard and the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. I must make it perfectly clear that they are two separate organisations, one of which is a governmental organisation and one of which is a private charity. However, they work closely together as key parts of the emergency services to save those in trouble at sea.

The Coastguard service was last debated on, I believe, 26 November 1997, after the Government had produced their five-year strategy for the service. That debate, which was introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers), seems to have been quite stormy, particularly because many hon. Members hold their local coastguard stations very dear.

Fifteen months on, the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Select Committee has just produced a pretty critical report. Given that the Minister has not formally responded to the Select Committee's report and that we may have a debate on it in a few weeks' time, I shall understand if she is not able to respond to this debate in great detail. However, I make no apology for raising this matter today.

Poole is of course a great maritime port. It is the second largest port in the south-west of England, second to Avonmouth. It is the second largest natural harbour in the world, and it has great links with the sea. Therefore, issues of sea safety have a great resonance among my constituents.

The Coastguard service is important. Having read about it prior to this debate, I was surprised to learn that it has only approximately 430 regular members and 3,100 auxiliaries. I should have thought that the service was far larger, bearing in mind that it has to discharge its duties over 10,000 miles of our coastline and 1.25 million square miles of sea and that it sometimes has to undertake operations 1,000 miles out into the north Atlantic.

I shall touch on particular aspects of the Select Committee's sixth report. The key point is that the Committee suggested that the Government ought to reverse their decision to merge the Maritime Safety Agency and the Coastguard. One or two people in my constituency have suggested that. I do not feel strongly about this but I am not sure whether the two really go together.

Another key point was the proposal to reduce the number of maritime rescue co-ordination centres from 21, closing those at Oban, Pentland, Tyne Tees and Liverpool and merging those at Lee-on-the-Solent and Portland.

The Committee was keen that the Coastguard should keep local knowledge—a key factor in command and control. The Committee felt that the proposals to merge

Portland and Solent would not be welcomed, and asked for a reversal. My hon. Friend the Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce)—a remorseless exponent of his constituents' interests who has brought up the subject of the Portland base many times—was happy for me to raise the issue. His constituents are keen to retain the base, and would not wish it to close in 2002. The report criticised the consultation process, and the Committee stated that the savings from the review would be only £500,000—not much in terms of the local Coastguard scheme.

The management of the Poole harbour commissioners told me that if there were a Herald of Free Enterprise-type accident in Poole harbour—something nobody would wish to see—a knowledge of the harbour or coastline would be important. At the moment, an individual from Poole could go to the Portland control centre to give advice about the harbour. If the centre were moved 200 miles away, that would not be possible. Local knowledge is a fundamental tool of the Coastguard watch officers.

Interestingly, the Committee felt that a period of stability within the Coastguard would have been welcomed. Given that the work load of the Coastguard has increased substantially—there were 11,667 incidents in 1997, an increase of 110 per cent. on 10 years ago, and 16,884 people were assisted—there is good argument for that proposal.

I welcome the fact that the Coastguard is bringing in a new communications system—the integrated Coastguard communications system—but I caution against putting all one's eggs into technology. Experience and training are very important in this area. I served formerly on the Wessex regional health authority, which had a regional information computer system which did not work. The National Air Traffic Service at Swanwick is an example where the hope of managers to bring in technology for emergencies has not worked out. We need training, and we need to look realistically at what technology can do.

I am looking forward to Lord Donaldson's report on command and control, salvage and rescue. The report is with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The Sea Empress and other recent disasters show that we need to look at the matter. I look forward to the report being published before the end of this month.

I have mentioned my concerns about the Coastguard, and I wish to move on to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. Members who read the newspapers yesterday will be aware that the RNLI—based in Poole, in my constituency—is celebrating its 175th anniversary. The RNLI is well loved and does an excellent job for this country. It was founded in 1824 by Sir William Hilary, an aristocrat and lifeboat man from the Isle of Man.

We are almost unique, in that the lifeboats around our coastline are paid for almost wholly by private charity and fund raising. Since 1824, the RNLI has saved 132,000 lives off our coast. It has running costs of £200,000 a day and, of its 4,000 lifeboat men, there are 200 women, playing a full part in life-saving. It takes £80 million a year to run the lifeboats, £50 million of which comes from bequests. The RNLI is successful in that way. It is all private money. As people often say in the RNLI, a rescue does not start with the lifeboat being launched, but with a man or woman collecting on the street corner. That is important.

There is one slight gripe that the RNLI has. Like many charities, it contributes in terms of VAT. Of the £80 million a year it raises, the RNLI pays the Treasury £1 million a year in VAT. The Minister is not a Treasury Minister, but perhaps she could convey concerns on this matter, as the RNLI does a great service saving lives off shore.

The importance of the celebration year—I note that the Minister may be taking part in some activities associated with it—is to increase the profile of the RNLI. There is a very strong feeling for the organisation among members of the population who are a little older, but it may not have the same profile in the minds of the younger population. If that successful institution is to continue, we must fund-raise throughout the community, and the 175th anniversary is a useful opportunity to do so.

The institution is very unusual in that it is a royal organisation that serves lifeboats not only throughout the United Kingdom but in southern Ireland. It pre-dates southern Irish independence. After southern Ireland became independent, the lifeboat organisation asked the Government of southern Ireland what they wished it to do, and they said, "Just carry on", which proves that the Irish are very sensible, as basically it is a free service, although it raises funds in southern Ireland as well.

Poole has the busiest lifeboat station in the country. Last year, the all-weather boat had 36 calls and saved two lives, and the inshore boat answered 78 calls and saved five lives. It is a very important institution; I am sure that the Minister recognises that, as I believe that one or two of her relatives have worked for it as lifeboat men.

From 20 and 26 June there is to be a major flotilla of lifeboats in Poole, and there is to be a conference in Bournemouth—the 18th International Lifeboat Federation conference—in which ideas and techniques will be exchanged. That will be a useful opportunity, in this celebration year, for lifeboats to promote themselves.

I pay tribute to the director of the RNLI who retired at the end of last year, Lieutenant-Commander Brian Miles CBE, who did an excellent job in his 34 years at the helm of the lifeboat institution. He will be fondly remembered by the organisation. I wish success to the new director, Andrew Fremantle.

I have raised a few concerns about the Coastguard. I will understand if the Minister does not want to give a detailed reply, because no doubt she will do so when she responds to the Select Committee and in the debate that we may have on the Floor of the House in a few weeks' time, but I am sure that she will join me in recognising the real achievements of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. I believe that it needs public support. We need to continue to raise money, and it will continue to do the job, which we all appreciate, of saving lives off shore.

Those of us on land often see an ambulance or a fire engine, but the emergency services that come into action when people are in trouble at sea may not always be within the sight of our citizens. We should cherish and support that organisation. I look forward to the Minister's reply.

2.43 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): I congratulate the hon. Member for Poole (Mr. Syms) on securing this opportunity to discuss marine rescue services and the men and women who play a vital role in life-saving around our shores. He referred to possibly the two most famous search-and-rescue services in this country, the Royal National Lifeboat Institution and HM Coastguard, and said that they were separate organisations, but, as I am sure that he is aware, the co-ordination of marine rescue services falls to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency, through its national network of 24-hour HM Coastguard rescue co-ordination centres.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the report by the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee. He is right that it would be improper for me to respond to it in this debate, but the Government welcome the Select Committee's report and will give a considered response in due course.

The hon. Gentleman has specific and individual concerns regarding the proposed co-location of Portland and Solent. Co-location will not in any way mean a reduction in manning or a merger of the two divisions as they are at the moment. He mentioned the importance of local knowledge, which is indeed vital, but I am sure that he would agree that the local knowledge needed to ensure the safety of hundreds of miles of our coastline and millions of square miles of the seas around them could not be maintained exclusively in the brains of individuals, and there are many ways to ensure that local knowledge is at the fingertips of the coastguards when they need it in the co-ordinating centres.

The Coastguard, of course, deals with both search-and-rescue incidents and the threat of pollution. The Government will be publishing Lord Donaldson's report on 15 March. The Coastguard has its own extensive marine and coastal rescue organisation, with more than 3,000 auxiliary coastguard volunteers formed into nearly 400 response teams. I believe that through the services of the RNLI and other volunteer rescue organisations—for example, the facilities of the Ministry of Defence and the Coastguard organisation—we have the best search-and-rescue service in the world. That is what the Government are committed to continuing.

Last year the Coastguard co-ordinated 11,747 incidents resulting in 18,965 persons being assisted or rescued. It is also worth noting that 98.7 per cent. of these incidents were brought to a successful conclusion, thanks to our excellent marine rescue service.

The Coastguard and RNLI do not react only to marine casualty situations but have an excellent relationship when working together towards promoting marine safety within the United Kingdom. This is achieved through such groups as the sea safety liaison committee, where the pooled knowledge of the two organisations gained through more than 350 years of experience between them of marine safety is being used to excellent effect.

Initiatives aimed primarily at the sport and recreational user have been successfully introduced, which offer safety advice and education. It is in this way that the awareness of safety issues and accident prevention have been brought to the fore.

I know that the hon. Gentleman takes a keen interest in marine safety matters, especially as the RNLI headquarters are situated in Poole. I should declare a personal interest because my great grandfather and grandfather served on the lifeboat in my home town of Hoylake on the Wirral peninsula. When I had the privilege of visiting the headquarters at Poole, those present kindly dug into their archives and produced the most wonderful photograph of my grandfather sitting with the crew outside the lifeboat house at Hoylake. The photograph is now hanging on my office wall.

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will agree that all marine rescue services deliver the highest standards of search and rescue, but the timing of the debate is particularly noteworthy as it follows the day on which the RNLI celebrated 175 years of exceptional and gallant service to the maritime community. I am sure that I speak for the entire House in extending my warmest congratulations and the country's gratitude to it for the service it provides and for the courage so often displayed by the crews of its lifeboats. The Government wish to be associated with the sentiments expressed in early-day motion 387.

The RNLI operates a fleet of more than 300 lifeboats from 222 lifeboat stations round our coasts and, as the hon. Gentleman said, those of the Republic of Ireland, as well as a relief fleet of about 130 boats. As a registered charity, the organisation relies entirely upon voluntary contributions and volunteer crews.

Calls on the service have nearly doubled over the past 10 years, with on average 19 calls for assistance each and every day. More than 60 per cent. of all marine incidents round our shores involve the services of the RNLI. This amounts to more than 7,000 incidents a year.

It is also important to recognise that the United Kingdom is served by other voluntary marine organisations. I am sure that the House would wish me to acknowledge too their significant contribution to the saving of life at sea and on our shores.

No debate about marine rescue services would be complete without including the contribution made by the Ministry of Defence through its network of search-and-rescue and other helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft. These together with helicopters contracted to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency provide unique air rescue coverage of the United Kingdom.

The provision of such a service can sometimes come with a very high personal price. The House will recall the tragic death of Coastguard helicopter winchman William Deacon in November 1997 during his heroic rescue of 10 crew members from the Green Lily off the Shetland islands. I pay tribute also to the RNLI for its part in that rescue. But for the tremendous efforts and skill of the coxswain and crew of the Lerwick lifeboat, five crew members would undoubtedly have lost their lives.

The Lerwick lifeboat was launched and the Coastguard helicopter scrambled to stand by the vessel Green Lily, which had been drifting, disabled, towards Bressay, Shetland, for most of the day while tugs tried to reach her and connect a tow. Coxswain Hewin Clark took the Lerwick lifeboat alongside and held her there, despite being slammed against the hull or having to manoeuvre clear of the ship, until five of the crew were saved and the ship was a mere 200 m from the shore. The Coastguard helicopter then saved the other 10 men. It was during this phase of the rescue that winchman William Deacon was tragically washed overboard and drowned.

Coxswain Clark was awarded the RNLI's gold medal—the lifeboat crews' Victoria Cross—for the rescue. That was the first gold medal to be awarded for 16 years. His crew were all awarded RNLI bronze medals.

The rescue of all the crew of the Green Lily typifies the extent to which all the rescue services work together, often in extraordinary conditions, to the common end of saving life. All sea and coastal users owe an enormous debt of gratitude to the members of the marine rescue services who daily put their lives at risk to save others.

In closing, I should like to assure the hon. Gentleman, the House and the country that the Government are fully committed to ensuring that marine safety services in the United Kingdom remain among the best in the world. We will also continue to work tirelessly not only to maintain, but to improve the service provided to sea and coastal users.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Portadown

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been (a) charged, (b) prosecuted and (c) convicted under section 8(7) of the Public Processions (Northern Ireland) Act 1998 in relation to contravention of the conditions placed by the Parades Commission on the legally notified marches organised by the Orange Order in Portadown on (i) 5 July 1998, (ii) 5 September 1998, (iii) 28 November 1998, (iv) 19 December 1998, (v) 30 December 1998 and (vi) 2 January 1999. [70208]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Prisoners

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been convicted of scheduled offences within the meaning of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts 1973, 1978, 1991 and 1996 since 10 April 1998; and how many of them received (a) a mandatory life sentence and (b) a fixed term sentence of five years or more. [70140]

Mr. Ingram: From 10 April 1998 to 31 December 1998, 123 people have been convicted of scheduled offences. Of those convicted six were given mandatory life sentences and 23 received a fixed term sentence of five years or more.

Note:

These statistics are currently being updated and may be subject to change.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland have been (a) arrested on suspicion of, (b) charged and (c) convicted of conspiracy to commit offences outside the United Kingdom under section 1 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 as amended by the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998. [69878]

Mr. Ingram: No one has been charged or convicted under the equivalent provision in Northern Ireland. I am unable to say whether or not anyone has been arrested on suspicion of conspiracy to commit offences outside the United Kingdom: no central record is kept of arrests made under that heading.

RUC

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the status of the current review of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [70097]

Mr. Ingram: The independent Policing Commission is consulting widely and has received over 2,000 submissions—the vast majority from individual members of the public. It has met with many of the key figures in the field of policing and has recently held a number of public meetings throughout Northern Ireland. As the Agreement says, the Commission will report by summer 1999.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for her Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70034]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The detailed information requested is either the subject of confidentiality or could not be answered on the ground of disproportionate costs (or both).

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Departmental Solicitors Office and the Crown Solicitors Office, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69989]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

Speeding Fines

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been raised by speeding fines issued by (a) speed cameras and (b) police officers, in each of the past five years. [71402]

Mr. Ingram: The following Fixed Penalty notices and Endorsable Fixed Penalty notices, in respect of speed detection, were issued by the Royal Ulster Constabulary during the last 5 years:

| Year | Police Officers | Speed cameras |
|---|---|---|
| 1994 | 31,089 | n/a |
| 1995 | 27,005 | n/a |
| 1996 | 27,380 | n/a |
| 1997 | 26,926[1] | n/a |
| 1998 | 13,858 | 6,674 |

[1] Including 3,983 endorsable fixed penalty notices

Mobile speed cameras were first introduced in Northern Ireland on 1 October 1997. Therefore the first full year for which information is available is 1998. Up to 30 September 1997 speeding offences attracted a £20 fine and no penalty points. From 1 October 1997 they attracted a £40 fine and 3 penalty points.

Punishment Beatings

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many punishment beatings there were in Northern Ireland between 1 May 1998 and 31 December 1998; and in respect of how many of these incidents, charges have been laid against the alleged perpetrators. [71581]

Mr. Ingram: The table shows the number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during the period 1 May to 31 December 1998. Charges are made on the basis of specific offences, for example, Common assault, Grievous bodily harm and Actual bodily harm. Those which are deemed to be paramilitary-style attacks are not recorded separately and it is therefore not possible to provide information on the number of persons made amenable for these attacks.

| | By Loyalists | By Republican |

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69968]

Clare Short [holding answer 10 February 1999]: The information is as follows:

(a) Admission of members of the public:

Members of the public may be admitted to meetings of the Know How Fund Advisory Board, ordinarily at the request of Board members, but individual requests by the public to attend would be considered on their merits. It has not been the practice to admit members of the public to meetings of other advisory bodies. There are no statutory requirements to do so.

(b) Public meetings:

It has not generally been the practice to hold public meetings principally because of the nature of the remit or the scope and size of the bodies in question. However, my Department has recently conducted a series of Regional Policy Forums culminating in a National forum to which members of the public were invited and which have contributed to the deliberations of the Development Awareness Working Group. There are no statutory requirements to hold public meetings.

(c) Lay/Consumer representatives:

The following bodies have either lay or consumer representatives:

The Development Awareness Working Group

The Indian Family Pensions Fund Body of Commissioners

The Overseas Service Pensions Scheme Advisory Board

The Know How Fund Advisory Board

There are no statutory requirements to appoint lay or consumer representatives.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings, (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards and (d) operate some form of appeal or complaints procedure; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69977]

Clare Short [holding answer 10 February 1999]: We do not admit members of the public to meetings of the Commonwealth Scholarships Commission and the Crown Agents Holding & Realisation Board and neither of these organisations hold public meetings of those bodies. The nature of their remit is not such as to require lay or consumer representation or an appeal/complaints procedure and there are no statutory requirements to do so.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69946]

Clare Short [holding answer 10 February 1999]: Minutes of meetings of the Commonwealth Scholarships Commission are available on request but the minutes, agenda and other papers are not routinely published. A register of members' interests is currently being compiled.

The Crown Agents Holding & Realisation Board does not satisfy the terms of the question but is expected to be wound up in the near future.

There are no statutory requirements of this nature.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department have a statutory base; and which are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner. [69913]

Clare Short [holding answer 10 February 1999]: The Crown Agents Holding and Realisation Board was established under the authority of the Crown Agents Act 1979. Statutory provision for the operations of the Commonwealth Scholarships Commission is made in the Overseas Development and Co-operation Act 1980. Neither fall within the remit of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Honduran Street Children

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the projects her Department is supporting concerning street children in Casa Alianza, Honduras. [72519]

Clare Short: We are not currently funding any Casa Alianza projects in Honduras. Officials from the Department for International Development met representatives of Casa Alianza in Honduras in November last year to discuss their Honduran projects but decided we could not make this project a priority. Obviously it is not possible or efficient for any one donor to work in all sectors.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72015]

Clare Short: Since 1 May 1997 DFID has awarded KPMG 27 contracts for services. In the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997 KPMG were awarded 31 contracts. The tables show the project title, the country to which the contract applies, and the total value of the contract.

Japan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will set out the responsibilities of the Crown Agents in respect of the administration of (i) debt relief grants and (ii) other aid matters on behalf of the Japanese Government; and if she will make a statement. [72577]

Clare Short: Ownership of the Crown Agents transferred from Her Majesty's Government to an independent Foundation in March 1997. The hon. Gentleman may wish to pursue this matter with the Foundation.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by her Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71516]

Clare Short [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Since 1 May 1997 the Department for International Development (DFID) has undertaken a review of international development policy, and a review of DFID's relationship with Civil Society. The review of international development policy led to the publication of the White Paper on International Development in November 1997. A report of the consultation which DFID conducted with Civil Society, North and South, will be published shortly. Key conclusions were set out in my speech on 'NGOs in a Global Future' on 13 January at Birmingham University. The costs incurred for these reviews are not separately identified, add little to the normal running costs of the department and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Department has also set up the Development Awareness Working Group. Expenditure of this advisory group is, to date, £10,500. Preparatory documents, minutes of the meetings, and a report commissioned on "Learning from Others" are all available on the DFID website.

No task forces have been established.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in her Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70770]

Clare Short: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 569–70. My Department has had no such cases within the last five years.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the amounts of British aid to Zimbabwe for each of the last 10 years, the projects for which it has been assigned and the conditions attached to it. [70588]

Clare Short: Total Overseas Development Administration (ODA) and the Department for International Development (DFID) aid to Zimbabwe in each of the last 10 years was:

|---|---|
| 1987–88 | 11,708 |
| 1988–89 | 15,278 |
| 1989–90 | 13,373 |
| 1990–91 | 28,937 |
| 1991–92 | 36,682 |
| 1992–93 | 39,172 |
| 1993–94 | 24,560 |
| 1994–95 | 27,343 |
| 1995–96 | 14,804 |
| 1996–97 | 11,057 |
| 1997–98 | 12,215 |

ODA and DFID funded 170 projects (including Joint Funding Scheme projects cofinanced with British NGOs) in the last 10 years over the value of £100,000. I will place a list in the Library of the House.

Specific conditions are not attached to country programmes. Individual projects are appraised and funded in the context of agreed country strategies and may have specific conditions attached, to ensure the project will be effective and sustainable.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71848]

Clare Short: In common with other Departments, the work of press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information required would involve disproportionate cost.

Pakistan (Zina Law)

Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made within the EU on the introduction of the Zina Law in Pakistan. [72511]

Clare Short: I have not made such representations. The Zina Law is one of five laws introduced as part of the Huddood Ordinances in 1979. The implications of the proposed 15th Constitutional Amendment are not yet clear, but it is likely that it would extend the coverage of Islamic Law in Pakistan. This Amendment still has to be passed by the Senate, for which a two-thirds majority is required. We will continue to monitor developments. More generally, the Government regularly raise their concerns with the Pakistani authorities about human rights and particularly the rights of women and girls issues; and we shall continue to do so.

Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what regard she has taken of the Zina Law's effect on Pakistan's human rights record when deciding the level of bilateral aid for that country from the UK. [72510]

Clare Short: The Zina Law is part of the Huddood Ordinance which has proved controversial in Pakistan since its introduction in 1979. Our development co-operation with Pakistan is clearly focused on reducing poverty, and takes careful account of human rights factors. We are working with the Government of Pakistan and other partners to make gender considerations an integral part of the development policy and planning; and we provide direct support for human rights and women's groups concerned with gender equity issues.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the total number of staff (a) in her Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which she is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70476]

Clare Short: The information is as follows. Including contract and other staff who are not classified as civil servants, my Department employs 1,656 staff located as follows:

| Location | Staff |
|---|---|
| (i) London | 755 |
| (ii) Wales | 0 |
| (iii) Scotland | 414 |
| (iv) English Regions | 0 |

The remaining 487 are employed overseas. I would also refer my hon. Friend to "Civil Service Statistics 1998" which is available in the Library of the House and provides a regional breakdown of civil service staff.

My Department has no agencies.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Rental Income

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, how much income has been received in rents from land owned by the commission in each of the last 10 years. [70529]

Mr. Stuart Bell: I have arranged for this information to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

In order to assist my hon. Friend, however, he should note that, while the rental income figures for 1998 have not yet been finalised, for the previous 10 years the income amounted to £647.3m.

Clergy (Stipends)

41. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what steps the commissioners have taken to ensure that the initial stipend is sufficient to attract new entrants to the clergy. [70532]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Clergy stipend recommendations are no longer made by the Church Commissioners, and their functions as Central Stipends Authority have been transferred by the Ministry Division of the Archbishops' Council from 1 January this year. The Central Stipends Authority gives very careful consideration to the question of stipend adequacy, including consultations with dioceses about stipend levels, and measuring the disposable income of clergy with that of other professions. A detailed review of stipend adequacy was last carried out in 1991/92, and it is likely that a further review will take place later this year.

The number of candidates recommended for ordination in 1998 was 343, an increase of 5.6 per cent. on the previous year. This would clearly suggest that the level of stipend is not deterring candidates for ordination.

Redundant Churches

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the number of redundant churches that the Church Commissioners have become responsible for in the last 3 years; and what the cost to them has been in each of the last 3 years. [70530]

Mr. Stuart Bell: In the 3 years to 31 December 1998, 96 churches have been declared redundant and the Commissioners have become involved in settling their future. In the same period the Commissioners have vested 15 redundant churches in the Churches Conservation Trust for preservation. The Trust now maintains 317 such churches and the Commissioners provide 30 per cent. of their costs, or about £1.07m in each of the Trust's last 3 financial years.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Admissions Code of Practice

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library copies of responses he received to the School Admissions Code of Practice Consultative Draft. [71750]

Ms Estelle Morris: I have arranged for copies of all responses received on the Draft School Admissions Code of Practice to be placed in the Library.

Failing LEAs (Contractors)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 490, on failing LEAs, how many formal expressions of interest from organisations able to (a) perform LEA functions and (b) provide management consultancy services for LEAs had been received by 15 February. [72508]

Ms Estelle Morris: 98 expressions of interest were received for consultancy work and 107 for the delivery of LEA functions.

Disabled People (Interviews)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in the pilot areas for the New Deal for Disabled People (a) how many initial interviews with personal advisers have been booked, (b) how many initial interviews with personal advisers have taken place, (c) how many disabled people have agreed to participate in the New Deal following an initial interview and (d) how many people obtained jobs following participation in the New Deal. [72372]

Ms Hodge: The Personal Adviser Service is in the early stages of pilot operation, and it is too soon to draw conclusions. Figures show that by 5 February, 1,528 interviews had been booked, 1,364 people had been seen by Personal Advisers, and some 821 people had begun to implement an employment focused action plan. We know that most people in this client group will need many months of support before they are ready to start work. However, I am delighted that so far 50 people have secured work.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72006]

Mr. Mudie: The services and levels of remuneration provided to my department by KPMG are given in the following table.

| Period | Service | Remuneration (£) |
|---|---|---|
| 1 May 1997—31 January 1999 | Management Consultancy | 22,291 |
| | Policy advice | 47,880 |
| 1 April 1996—30 April 1997 | Management Consultancy | 265,864 |

Complete figures for the 'corresponding period' 1 August 1995—30 April 1997, are not available in a comparable form. This is due to the different accounting systems used by the former Department of Education and the Employment Department which merged under the previous administration

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 566, on ministerial visits, which hon. Members have been informed of a planned visit to their constituency by him in the last 12 months. [72225]

Mr. Mudie: In accordance with paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code, hon. Members are informed in advance about planned visits to their constituencies by myself and Ministerial colleagues.

Jobfinder Grants

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Jobfinder grants have been paid in each year since the introduction of the scheme. [72184]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Frank Field, dated 22 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the number of Jobfinder Grants that have been paid in each year since the introduction of the scheme. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The number of Jobfinder's Grants paid nationally in each year since the introduction of the scheme is as follows:

| Year | Number of Grants |
|---|---|
| 1994–1995 pilot | 4,708 |
| 1995–1996 | 12,383 |
| 1996–1997 | 17,300 |
| 1997–1998 | 15,820 |
| 1998-Jan 99 (10 months) | 8,281 |

I hope this is helpful.

Ofsted Inspectors

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that all Ofsted inspectors periodically undertake some teaching in schools; [72269]

(2) what is the average age of Ofsted inspectors; [72270]

(3) what is the average length of time since an Ofsted inspector last taught in a school. [72271]

Ms Estelle Morris: These are matters for HM Chief Inspector of Schools and I have therefore asked Chris Woodhead to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Pre-school Expenditure

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements are made to assist with public funds capital expenditure on pre-school provision. [71966]

Ms Estelle Morris: Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, over £5 billion will be available over the next three years for investment in school buildings, including facilities for under fives. Earmarked capital grant for Early Excellence Centres is available through the New Deal for Schools programme.

"Teachers"

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of the magazine "Teachers" have been distributed to (a) teachers direct and (b) schools; what was the cost of producing the magazine; and what was the cost of distributing the magazine. [72506]

Ms Estelle Morris: No copies have been distributed direct to teachers. A total of 334,300 copies of the magazine have been distributed to schools: teachers requested approximately 8,000 extra copies after 326,300 copies were initially distributed to schools.

The magazine costs 9p a copy to produce and 11p a copy to distribute. It replaces the DfEE's previous publication, Schools Update. The magazine is paid for from the Department's central advertising and publicity budget which has already been earmarked for spending on publicity material.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make copies of his Department's magazine, Teachers, available in the Library. [72239]

Ms Estelle Morris: Copies have been placed in the Library.

Private-public Partnerships

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to issue draft regulations for consultation on private/public sector partnerships under section 128(1)(2) of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998. [72505]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is planned to issue draft regulations for consultation in May 1999.

School Meals

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice his Department has issued to local education authorities on the use of genetically modified foods in school meals services. [72237]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Responsibility for determining the content of school meals rests with local education authorities and the governing bodies of grant maintained schools.

Specialist Teachers

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he intends to publish details of the position of specialist teachers in relation to his proposals to restructure teachers' salary scales. [72507]

Ms Estelle Morris: There is no statutory definition of the term "specialist teacher".

The technical consultation document on pay and performance management, published on 1 February 1999, sets out the Government's proposals in respect of teachers' salary structure.

Paragraph 59 seeks views on the proposal that teachers below the new performance threshold who make additional contributions to teaching and learning, could be awarded salary supplements by the governing body on the advice of the head. Paragraph 65 proposes that, once a teacher has passed threshold assessment, that teacher's allocated salary range on the upper pay spine should reflect the nature of his or her responsibilities as well as personal performance.

The Government propose to ask the School Teachers' Review Body, following the Green Paper consultation, to advise what guidance should be available to schools on how to reflect teacher responsibilities in setting salary levels below and above the threshold.

Infant Class Sizes

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the annual recurrent cost of reducing infant class sizes to a maximum of 30 pupils. [72504]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have already allocated £22 million in revenue funding in 1998–99 for the reduction of infant class sizes. Over the next three financial years, £400 million will be available to meet the revenue costs of implementing our pledge:

1999–2000: £80 million

2001–2002: £160 million.

In addition, there will be £160 million over the same period to meet the capital costs of implementing the pledge.

Au Pairs

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect on the availability of childcare provision by au pairs for poorer families of the inclusion of au pairs within the minimum wage provisions. [70373]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 10 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply.

I do not expect the introduction of the National Minimum Wage to affect the availability of childcare provision by au pairs. The National Minimum Wage Regulations, which were laid before Parliament on Tuesday, 16 February, provide for the exclusion from coverage of workers who reside in their employer's family household, are treated as members of that family and share in the tasks and leisure activities of the family.

DEFENCE

GEC Marconi-British Aerospace Merger

11. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact that the merger of GEC Marconi and British Aerospace will have on defence procurement (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and if he will make a statement. [70501]

25. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications of the BAe-GEC Marconi merger. [70516]

Mr. Spellar: The proposed merger of BAe and Marconi will be subject to regulatory approval and it is therefore not appropriate for me to comment at this stage. The MOD's views on the military aspects of the merger will be given to the regulatory authorities in confidence at the appropriate time.

Cadets

13. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the Government's expenditure plans in relation to cadets. [70503]

Mr. Doug Henderson: During the past twelve months my Department has received a number of representations from hon. Members and others concerning the Government's expenditure plans in respect of our Cadet Forces. The Government remain fully committed to supporting the Cadet Forces, with planned expenditure upon them in the current financial year totalling some £58m. As a further indication of our commitment, we previously announced an increase in Cadet Forces' expenditure of £3m over the next four years.

Learning Forces Initiative

15. Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in establishing the learning forces initiative announced in the strategic defence review. [70505]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are making good progress with our important "Learning Forces" initiative. At home and abroad, our Service personnel are already benefiting from increased educational opportunities. The "Learning Forces" initiative is a powerful tool which will aid recruiting and retention.

Staff College, Camberley

16. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future use of the buildings of Staff college, Camberley. [70506]

Mr. Spellar: Options for the future of the former Staff College Buildings at Camberley are being studied. No proposals have yet been put to Ministers.

Future Large Aircraft

17. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with the design and manufacture of the future large aircraft; and when it is planned to go into production. [70507]

Mr. Spellar: The MOD received bids at the end of January for competing aircraft to meet our requirement for future transport aircraft. The Future Large Aircraft—now designated the A400M by Airbus Industries—is a candidate in this competition. UK officials are assessing these bids with other European partners. I will announce the outcome to the House once a decision has been made.

Dr. Gwyn Prins

18. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with NATO officials about the decision to employ Dr. Gwyn Prins of Chatham house in the office of the NATO Secretary-General. [70508]

Mr. George Robertson: None.

Iraq

19. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service personnel are currently involved in helping to patrol the no-fly zones in northern and southern Iraq. [70509]

Mr. George Robertson: Just over 2,000 service personnel are currently involved in conducting or supporting operations in the northern and southern no-fly zones. Around half of these are land-based and regularly involved in such duties; the other half are aboard HMS Invincible, whose aircraft are currently participating in the patrolling of the no-fly zones.

Service Families

20. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policies his Department has for improving the quality of life for service families. [70510]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following the Strategic Defence Review, we created the Service Families Task Force. Under my leadership the Task Force is addressing the problems Service families have told us they encounter and we are pursuing measures to help them in the areas of education, employment and health. In addition, each Service is developing specific initiatives to improve the quality of life for their families.

Anthrax

21. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to recommence his programme of voluntary immunisation of personnel against anthrax. [70512]

Mr. George Robertson: We will resume our programme of voluntary immunisation against anthrax for personnel deploying to the Gulf as soon as practicable. However, new licensed supplies of vaccine will not be available before next year.

Land Mines

22. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete Britain's land mine destruction programme. [70513]

34. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with Britain's land mine destruction programme. [70525]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor) on 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 7.

Gulf War Syndrome

23. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department is spending on research into the illnesses of Gulf war veterans. [70514]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence's portfolio of research into Gulf veterans' illnesses matters currently comprises two major epidemiological studies, a neuromuscular systems study, an independent review of research literature and a programme to investigate possible interactions between the medical countermeasures which were used during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict. So far, about £1.9 million has been spent on these studies and we estimate that they will cost a further £4 million to complete.

Armed Forces (Overstretch)

24. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has taken to address potential overstretch resulting from increasing United Kingdom military commitments. [70515]

25. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to reduce overstretch in the armed forces. [70700]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As I explained in my reply of 25 January 1999, to my hon. Friends the Members for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) and for South Ribble (Mr. Borrow), Official Report, column 4, we are firmly committed to addressing overstretch in the Armed Forces. We are taking a number of steps to increase recruitment to the Armed Forces, which continues to improve for all three Services. We are also making efforts to improve retention in the Armed Forces. Maintenance of morale within the Armed Forces as a whole is a high priority. Any decision to increase operational commitments will be taken only after careful consideration of personnel resources.

Ethnic Recruitment (Brent)

26. Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Army's ethnic recruitment initiative in Brent. [70517]

Mr. Spellar: The Army's recruiting initiative in Brent was an integral part of the Army ethnic minority recruiting campaign for 1997–98, and was designed to last for three months between January and March 1998. The Brent campaign was used as a trial of a Community Partnership Model developed by a consultancy firm. Under this approach, personnel are allocated specifically to liaise with council, education and community leaders and students, in order to promote the Army as a potential career.

Research carried out before and after this initiative shows that it was a success, and that it has created a generally more positive attitude to the Army in Brent.

During the current financial year, the Army has included Brent in its programme of visits by recruiting teams, including the Ethnic Minority Recruiting Team.

and links with the community continue to improve. The Army is currently on target to achieve its aim that two per cent. of its recruits for the year should come from ethnic minorities.

The Community Partnership Model will be employed at various locations around the country over the next three years, including Brent, with the aim of increasing ethnic minority recruiting to five per cent. over this period.

Scottish Armed Forces

27. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Scots and (b) non-Scots are currently serving in the UK armed forces. [70518]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We estimate that some 23,000 Service personnel, or around 11 per cent. of the armed forces are Scots.

Chamber of Shipping

28. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution was made by the United Kingdom Chamber of Shipping to the strategic defence review; and if he will make a statement. [70519]

Mr. Spellar: The UK Chamber of Shipping contributed to the Strategic Defence Review as part of the Review's public consultation process. Copies of submission made to the Review have been placed in the Parliamentary and selected reference libraries. As my hon. Friend is aware, the Ministry of Defence enjoys a close and productive relationship with the Chamber on defence issues, primarily through the auspices of the Shipping Defence Advisory Committee and its various working groups and sponsored discussions.

Defence Medical Services

29. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence medical services. [70520]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The future strategy for the Defence Medical Services was outlined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 329. Work on the implementation of the proposals identified in the Strategic Defence Review and the future strategy for the Defence Medical Services is now well in hand.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 329, if the harmonising of different conditions of service within the Defence Medical Services will extend to civilian employees and co-workers. [70877]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No. The work on harmonisation is focused exclusively on eliminating differences in the terms of service of Defence Medical Service military personnel undertaking similar functions.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he informed the Secretary of State for Health of his policy of direct targeting of nurses and specialist registrars for recruitment into the Defence Medical Services. [70880]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 8 December 1998.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 329, concerning the Defence Medical Services, if he will provide a breakdown of the funding to be provided over the next four years for investment in additional medical personnel and equipment. [70898]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Of the additional £140M which we announced in the SDR that we planned to spend on Defence Medical Services over the period 1998–99 to 2001–02, some £50M represents personnel costs, with the remainder attributed to a wide range of equipment, infrastructure and IT enhancements, including Primary Casualty Receiving Ship, Medical and Dental Equipment, and Medical Stores and Supplies over this period.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 329, how he intends to identify overstretch in the Defence Medical Services; and what deadlines he has set for this. [70876]

Mr. Doug Henderson: New work is currently being undertaken in Surgeon General's Department to establish a better understanding of the maximum level of medical deployment which we can sustain on a continuous basis. The results of this work will allow us to better match resources to tasks and will help operational planners to identify not only current overstretch but also the implications of proposed new deployments. The initial work should be completed by 1 March 1999.

Kosovo

30. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of a long-term deployment of forces in Kosovo on the (a) force structures and (b) budget planned by his Department. [70521]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath). In the event of such an operation, where the costs cannot be accommodated within the agreed Defence Budget, I would expect to fund them through a claim on the reserve in accordance with normal procedures.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the mission statement for the Kosovo extraction force based in Macedonia. [68802]

Mr. George Robertson [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1999, c. 651]: I regret that it was wrong to withhold the exact mission statement of the NATO-led Extraction force, operation "Joint Guarantor" as it had, in fact, been authorised for publication by Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers (SHAPE). More recently it has been replaced by a shorter version which more accurately reflects the mission of the force in Kosovo. For completeness, the full and abbreviated versions are as set out.

Mission Statement (Full version)

As authorised by the NAC, SACEUR will assume overall authority for the operation and Operational command or control of designated forces which will conduct an extraction of OSCE KVM verifiers and/or PDSS (Persons of Designated Special Status) in Kosovo at short notice with minimum use of force, followed by rapid redeployment of forces concerned outside the FRY and with the required reaction times.

Mission Statement (Abbreviated version)

On order, to conduct an extraction of OSCE Kosovo Verification Mission (KVM) Verifiers and/or Persons with Designated Special Status in Kosovo in order to assure their safety.

Airborne Stand-off Radar

31. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the airborne stand-off radar to enter service with the Royal Air Force. [70522]

Mr. Spellar: The In Service Date, ISD, in May 1997 was 2003. Since then the bidders for the Airborne Stand-Off Radar programme have been asked to review the feasibility of the current In Service Date of 2003, in their proposals for the Full Development and Production phase of the programme.

The Department is currently in the process of evaluating bids, and it would, therefore, not be appropriate to make specific comments on any aspect of the bids at this time. On current plans we aim to announce a decision on the project in the spring, and award a contract later this year. The new ISD is dependent upon the selected bid.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement on the contract for the Astor system. [70490]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Department is currently in the process of evaluating bids for the Full Development and Production phase of the Airborne Stand-off Radar (ASTOR) programme. On current plans we aim to announce a decision on the project in the spring, and award a contract later this year.

NATO

32. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards NATO enlargement. [70523]

Mr. George Robertson: All 16 members of NATO have now ratified the Protocols of Accession to NATO in respect of the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland. The NATO Secretary-General wrote to the Foreign Ministers of the three countries on 29 January inviting them formally to accede to the North Atlantic Treaty. They will do so by depositing the instruments of accession with the United States Government. No date has yet been decided for their formal accession, but we expect it to be during March. The Government warmly welcome this progress and look forward to working with our new Allies.

Territorial Army

33. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of morale in the Territorial Army. [70524]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I am encouraged by indications that morale is maintained in the TA, and that it continues to attract new volunteers. We expect that the restructuring of the Territorial Army once implemented will, ensure that the TA is both more relevant and usable and, as a result, more satisfying to those who join.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the net effect of the review of the Territorial Army, in terms of number of units per head of the population, in (a) North West England and (b) North Wales. [69318]

Mr. Doug Henderson: North Wales does not contain any TA units of Regiment or Battalion size. There are a number of sub-units in Northern Wales, but as sub-units vary considerably in size, a comparison between North Wales and the North West based on numbers of sub-units would not be meaningful. However, a comparison between the two regions based on numbers of TA members shows the net effect of the restructuring of the Territorial Army on each region.

Before the review of the Territorial Army, the ratio of members of the TA to population in the North West was 1:1,023. After the review, the ratio was 1:1,366, or a net increase in the ratio of 36 per cent.

Before the review of the Territorial Army, the ratio of members of the TA to population in North Wales was 1:1,050. After the review, the ratio was 1:1,832, or a net increase in the ratio of 74 per cent.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date Land Command submitted to Ministers the (a) first, (b) second and (c) final set of proposals for reorganisation of the Territorial Army; [69316]

(2) on what date Land Command made the recommendation to (a) transfer HQ 101 Battalion REME to Queensferry and (b) close HQ 101 Battalion REME in Chorley. [69343]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Land Command's recommendations for the future structure of the Territorial Army were put to Ministers on 2 November 1998.

Training

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to review the value for money of professional training in the armed forces. [70502]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We keep the cost-effectiveness of training in the Armed Forces under continual review.

Smart Procurement

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in implementing the smart procurement programme; and if he will make a statement. [70504]

Mr. George Robertson: This Government are committed to improving defence procurement performance. Under our Smart Procurement initiative ten projects have just completed an encouraging pilot phase and lessons will be reflected in a full transition plan to be implemented over the next year.

Royal Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received calling for the retention of Royal Hospital, Haslar as the tri-service medical centre. [70875]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The new strategy for the Defence Medical Services was the subject of comprehensive consultation within the three single Services and their respective medical Directors General are fully committed to implementing the recommendations.

Since the announcement of the closure of the Royal Hospital, Haslar, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has received direct representations from the Trade Unions and members of the public and there has been a protest march in Gosport. The Hospital Commander is consulting with local TUs, mainly through the Whitley process; staff in HQ DSCA are responding to the letters from the public. The representations of the protest marchers were received by the Agency Chief Executive.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason it has been determined that the Royal Hospital, Haslar will remain open until 2002. [70874]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In his statement on 14 December 1999, Official Report, column 329, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made clear that the Royal Hospital, Haslar will remain open until new arrangements are in place. The booklet supporting the strategy announcement added that closure was unlikely before 2002. The plans of the Portsmouth and South East Hants Health Authority include the redevelopment of their Queen Alexandra Hospital site. This and the establishment of our new Ministry of Defence Hospital Unit (MDHU) will take a number of years. We have agreed with the NHS that the process of change should be managed and gradual to ensure that RHH is able, in the meantime, to maintain its training role for Military personnel and treatment services for both Service and NHS patients.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons for choosing to establish a new Defence Medical Services Hospital Unit in Portsmouth rather than expanding the Royal Hospital, Haslar. [70878]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The decision to close the Royal Hospital, Haslar (RHH) was announced on 14 December 1998 Official Report, columns 328–29, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence as part of the overall new strategy for the Defence Medical Services.

Since RHH became the core Service hospital in 1994, significant changes have occurred which put the continued viability of the hospital in doubt. In particular, it has become increasingly difficult for RHH to provide the specialist levels of care demanded by local GPs, new healthcare strategies have been introduced by the local NHS Trust and the location of RHH is no longer ideal for the majority of Service personnel. Additionally, the running costs of RHH (not least the use of Grade 2 listed buildings) are significantly higher than any possible alternatives. Closer DMS co-operation with the NHS, through the Ministry of Defence Hospital Unit (MDHU) concept, has already demonstrated clear operational and financial advantages over isolated military hospitals. We intend to pursue this option in Portsmouth.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effect of the closure of the Royal Hospital, Haslar on local employment. [70871]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Until the size and shape of the proposed Ministry of Defence Hospital Unit in Portsmouth is established it is much too early to estimate the impact of the closure of the Royal Hospital, Haslar on local employment. Once it is possible to do so, the Defence Secondary Care Agency will consult closely with Trade Unions and the Employment Services to ensure that any transfers and releases are carefully managed throughout the long lead time.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the costs of upgrading NHS facilities to replace the services supplied by Royal Hospital, Haslar to the civilian population. [70873]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Department of Health. The provision of health care to the local population is the responsibility of the Portsmouth and South East Health Authority.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (i) civilian and (ii) military personnel have been treated at the Royal Hospital, Haslar since 1995 (a) in total and (b) for accident and emergency cases. [70869]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Hospitals count the numbers of admissions and the number of outpatient appointments. Those details for the Royal Hospital, Haslar, along with those for accident and emergency cases, are as follows in the table, from 1 January 1995.

RH Haslar A&E attendances 1995–98

| | Service | | | Civilian | | | |

Military Personnel Wastage

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the military personnel wastage rates for (a) Royal Navy (i) officers and (ii) other ranks, (b) Army (i) officers and (ii) other ranks and (c) Royal Air Force (i) pilot officers, (ii) non-pilot officers and (iii) other ranks for each of the years 1995–96, 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 to date; [71930]

(2) how his Department defines military personnel wastage. [71929]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Military personnel wastage is defined as all outflow of trained personnel. This is usually expressed as a rate which is calculated by taking the total outflow of all trained personnel during a period as a proportion of the average number of trained personnel in the period.

The wastage rates in the Armed Forces in the years from 1995–96 to 1997–98 and the current financial year are as follows:

Percentage

| | Total | PVR[1] | Redundancies[2] | Retirements[3] | Other exits[4] |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Naval Service Officers | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 8.0 | 1.5 | 1.3 | 4.7 | 0.5 |
| 1996–97 | 11.8 | 1.9 | 5.1 | 4.1 | 0.7 |
| 1997–98 | 7.3 | 2.5 | 0.0 | 4.2 | 0.5 |
| 1998–99[5] | 6.6 | 2.4 | 0.0 | 3.7 | 0.5 |
| Naval Service Other Ranks | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 9.2 | 3.6 | 1.1 | 3.1 | 1.4 |
| 1996–97 | 14.2 | 5.2 | 4.1 | 3.3 | 1.6 |
| 1997–98 | 10.4 | 5.1 | 0.0 | 3.5 | 1.8 |
| 1998–99[5] | 11.0 | 5.5 | 0.0 | 3.3 | 2.2 |
| Army Officers | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 8.4 | 2.7 | 0.6 | 4.5 | 0.5 |
| 1996–97 | 7.8 | 2.9 | 0.6 | 3.3 | 0.9 |
| 1997–98 | 7.5 | 3.6 | 0.0 | 3.5 | 0.4 |
| 1998–99[5] | 8.9 | 4.5 | 0.0 | 3.8 | 0.5 |
| Army Other Ranks | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 12.2 | 7.3 | 0.1 | 2.5 | 2.3 |
| 1996–97 | 11.2 | 6.8 | 0.1 | 2.0 | 2.3 |
| 1997–98 | 10.9 | 6.7 | 0.0 | 1.8 | 2.3 |
| 1998–99[5] | 11.4 | 6.9 | 0.0 | 2.1 | 2.4 |
| RAF Pilot Officers | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 8.9 | 1.2 | 3.1 | 4.0 | 0.6 |
| 1996–97 | 11.3 | 1.5 | 4.5 | 5.1 | 0.2 |
| 1997–98 | 7.7 | 2.8 | 0.0 | 4.6 | 0.3 |
| 1998–99[5] | 9.0 | 2.5 | 0.0 | 5.9 | 0.6 |
| RAF Non-Pilot Officers | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 10.3 | 1.5 | 4.2 | 4.0 | 0.5 |
| 1996–97 | 12.7 | 1.9 | 6.3 | 4.1 | 0.4 |
| 1997–98 | 5.3 | 2.0 | 0.0 | 3.0 | 0.3 |
| 1998–99[5] | 5.8 | 2.7 | 0.0 | 2.7 | 0.3 |
| RAF Other Ranks | | | | | |
| 1995–96 | 12.6 | 3.3 | 4.3 | 4.3 | 0.7 |
| 1996–97 | 18.0 | 3.1 | 9.5 | 4.6 | 0.7 |
| 1997–98 | 8.2 | 3.6 | 0.0 | 3.8 | 0.8 |
| 1998–99[5] | 8.7 | 4.3 | 0.0 | 3.8 | 0.6 |

[1] PVR—Premature Voluntary Release: This includes those personnel who left the Services because of pregnancy and due to marriage.
[2] Redundancies include both voluntary and compulsory redundancies.
[3] Retirements refer to personnel who have either reached the end of their commission or the end of their engagement in their Service.
[4] Other exits include deaths, medical discharges, those personnel whose services are no longer required and compassionate release.
[5] For the 1998–99 financial year, the wastage rates have been estimated by taking the number of exits from 1 April-31 December 1998 and multiplying by a factor of 4/3, and dividing by the average trained strength in this period. This takes into account the fact that the number of exits during 1998–99 is for a nine-month period; the other financial years given here are for twelve-month periods.

The rates given for the Naval Service include all personnel who were serving in the Royal Navy, Royal Marines and the Queen Alexandra's Royal Naval Nursing Service.

The rates given for the Army exclude those serving in the Gurkhas and those who were serving in the Royal Irish Regiment.

Those personnel serving in Bosnia as mobilised reservists during these periods have also been excluded.

The total wastage percentages given in the answer may not necessarily be the same as the sum of the individual wastage percentages due to rounding.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72005]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence has used the services of KPMG along with other large consultancy companies for a number of years and in the course of which they have received numerous contracts from the Department. It is not possible to provide full details of all contractual engagements which include many small contracts without incurring disproportionate cost, but the company have competitively tendered and been engaged to support a number of Departmental efficiency initiatives including Competing for Quality, the Private Finance Initiative and most recently SMART procurement, an initiative arising from the strategic defence review designed to introduce faster, cheaper and better defence purchasing. My Department's payments to KPMG pre/post 1 May 1997 are as follows:

| 1 August 1995—30 April 1997 | 1,413,972.75 (ex VAT) |
| 1 May 1997—1 January 1999 | 4,089,789.38 (ex VAT) |

Gibraltar

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure has been incurred by his Department in respect of the Gibraltar base in each of the last 10 years at current prices. [71692]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The costs falling to the budget of the Commander British Forces Gibraltar for the last seven years and an estimate of the costs of the current year are as follows:

| FY | Amount (£ million) | Current prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1991–92 | 60.7 | 74.5 |
| 1992–93 | 59.0 | 69.9 |
| 1993–94 | 60.4 | 69.1 |

| FY | Amount (£ million) | Current prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1994–95 | 56.5 | 63.6 |
| 1995–96 | 58.6 | 63.9 |
| 1996–97 | 63.0 | 66.9 |
| 1997–98 | 61.3 | 63.8 |
| 1998–99 | 57.6 | 57.6 |

Note:
Figures uprated to current prices.

Similar information is not available for the years 1989–90 and 1990–91.

Staff Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the mileage rates currently applicable to staff, indicating what changes have been made to encourage staff to switch from cars to public transport and other less polluting forms of travel. [70956]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The MOD reimburses motor mileage for official travel in private vehicles at two different levels. The higher (Standard) rate is restricted to journeys which would be impracticable by public transport, taking into account the overall cost to the Department. It reflects the full costs of travel by car. The lower (Public Transport) rate is set at a level which reflects the average cost of travel by public transport and is paid for all other official travel by car.

The rates applicable in the current tax year are as follows:

Standard Rates of Motor Mileage Allowance

Pence per mile

| Car engine capacity | Up to 1,000cc | 1001cc to 1500cc | 1501cc to 2000cc | 2001cc and over |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Up to 4,000 miles | 28 | 35 | 45 | 63 |
| Over 4,000 miles | 17 | 20 | 25 | 36 |

Public Transport Rate of Motor Mileage Allowance
All cars: 25.9p per mile

MOD discourages the unnecessary use of private cars and staff are required to undertake official travel by the most cost effective means. However, the dispersed and sometimes remote locations of Defence establishments means that public transport does not always offer a suitable option.

Northern Division

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of army personnel in the areas covered by (a) the Scottish District based in Edinburgh and (b) the Second Division based in York. [70125]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The establishments of regular Army units in these areas is currently as follows:

2nd Division 12,969.

Of these, some 400 personnel in Scottish District and 11,238 in the 2nd Division are in units which, though based in the area, will not be under the operational command of the General Officer Commanding the planned new northern division.

Following the restructuring of the Territorial Army announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 17 November 1998, the establishment of TA soldiers in these areas from June 1999 will be as follows:

2nd Division 8,574.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the Defence Systems and Equipment International Exhibition to the United Kingdom Government. [70387]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under the arrangements set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) on 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 423, the principal costs for the exhibition will fall to the organisers, Spearhead Exhibitions Ltd. However, my Department will make a contribution towards the cost of the missions from the 50 or so countries to be invited by Her Majesty's Government. Detailed arrangements have yet to be finalised, but we have estimated a direct cost to MOD of about £250,000. In addition, representatives of Her Majesty's Government may carry out other activities associated with the exhibition as part of their normal duties. These could only be identified at disproportionate cost.

Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the benefits of using the PFI to fund the next generation of weapons of mass destruction designed to replace Trident. [71172]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham South (Mr. Simpson) on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 650.

Airfields

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans the Government have to close or scale down his Department's airfields at (a) Lyneham, (b) Boscombe Down and (c) Brize Norton; and what discussions he has had on the possible closure of these airfields; [71580]

(2) what proposals he has for the future of RAF Brize Norton; [71577]

(3) if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on his Department's airfields in the south of England. [71579]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 16 February 1999]: I have no plans to close or scale down the airfields at Lyneham, Boscombe Down or Brize Norton. RAF Brize Norton remains the RAF's primary strategic air transport and air-to-air refuelling base. The Strategic Defence Review (SDR) has determined this Government's defence policy and the tasks and roles that need to be carried out in future. These, in turn will determine our requirements, among other things for airfields in the UK. Some SDR measures may have implications for airfields in the South of England, which will be announced and consulted upon in the normal way.

Military Training (Indonesian Personnel)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 737, how many Indonesian military personnel are currently receiving training in the United Kingdom; at which locations they are stationed; and what is the cost to United Kingdom public funds of that training. [71949]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are currently five Indonesian military personnel attending courses at UK military training establishments. One Indonesian Navy officer is at the Joint Services Command and Staff College; another is on the International Principal Warfare Officer course at HMS Dryad, and three Indonesians are on courses at the Royal Military College at Shrivenham as part of a private and commercial initiative organised by Cranfield university. Participation on courses at the Joint Services Command and Staff College and HMS Dryad have been provided from the Defence Military Assistance Fund at a cost of £85,000.

Details of Indonesian military personnel attending courses at non-military UK educational establishments are not the responsibility of my Department. However, based on the information available to us, we understand that a further four Indonesian military personnel are currently attending academic courses at non-military educational establishments in the UK. These students are on the Chevening scholarship programme at a cost of £100,000. Information on the location of those establishments has been withhold under Exemption 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Disability Discrimination

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71272]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department will have a number of new statutory responsibilities as a result of the implementation of Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act next October. These include the provision of departmental publications in alternative formats, such as Braille or large print, access arrangements for people with disabilities to Service museums and at open days or other events held on MOD property, and the provision of suitable housing for Service personnel with disabled dependants.

Assessment of the impact of Part III has already been set in hand, and my Department will continue to be made aware of the requirements, to ensure that the needs of members of the public with disabilities are taken into account.

HMS Glorious

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 574, if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the note instructing HMS Glorious to proceed to Scapa Flow to conduct the court martial. [71396]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The relevant extract of the Home Fleet War Diary (ADM 199/361) has been placed in the Library of the House. The Diary itself is available in the Public Record Office.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71286]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Most expenditure related to disabled people by my Department is not held in a single budget but is one part of a number of different budgets, and thus cannot be provided without disproportionate cost. This includes such items as modifications to buildings and their surroundings to enable access, the provision of training material and publications in alternative formats, the use of interpreters, and disability awareness training and good practice guidance for MOD staff.

There is, however, some central provision for staff with disabilities, amounting to around £100K in 1998–99. This covers items such as specialised equipment and associated training, and funding for a disability bursary for a member of MOD's staff.

Liability in Tort

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce legislation to ensure that in an action for liability in tort against the armed forces a plaintiff need not in all cases show negligence on the part of the Crown. [71689]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department has no plans to introduce legislation that will affect the present position in respect of its liability in tort in cases involving members of the Armed Forces. Since the enactment of The Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987, which was not made retrospective, members and former members of the Armed Forces have had exactly the same rights as their civilian counterparts to pursue their employer, the Ministry of Defence, for common law compensation arising from my Department's negligence. When claims for compensation are submitted, they are considered on the basis of whether or not my Department has a legal liability to pay compensation. Where there is a legal liability to pay compensation, it is paid in accordance with common law principles.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on NATO exercises in the Barents Sea between 7 and 11 February 1974, with special reference to (a) collisions and (b) damage to NATO vessels. [71501]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department is not aware of any NATO exercises in the Barents Sea between 7 and 11 February 1974. Similarly, we are not aware of any collisions or damage involving RN vessels at that time.

neither am I aware of the presence of any RN vessels in the Barents sea at that time. MOD does not hold records concerning collisions and damage to NATO vessels.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the public opinion research commissioned by his Department into the Strategic Defence Review covered attitudes to the Defence Medical Services; and if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the research. [71661]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department commissioned two items of public opinion research prior to the publication of the Strategic Defence Review White Paper. The purpose of the research was to explore public attitudes, feelings and knowledge regarding the key issues covered by the Review. The research addressed attitudes to the Armed Forces as a whole and did not address the Defence Medical Services specifically. Copies of the research reports have been placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Medical Training Organisation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Defence Medical Training Organisation; and what was the figure at its inception. [71909]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Medical Training Organisation currently employs 385 people. At the launch of the agency on 1 April 1997 it employed 289 people. This did not include 102 people in the Fort Blockhouse Support Unit who transferred to the Agency in October 1998.

Training Exercises

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries had armed forces involved in the 15 training exercises in Cyprus carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [71894]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The only country to have personnel involved in these exercises was Australia.

Defence Intelligence and Security Centre

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which targets the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring he has undertaken for those targets in 1998–99. [71907]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Defence Intelligence and Security Centre (DISC) achieved all of the Key Targets it was set for FY 1997–98.

The performance of the DISC is monitored by the Agency Owner's Advisory Board, which is chaired by the DISC's Owner, the Director General Intelligence and Geographic Resources (DGIGR), and which is made up of the Agency's major customers and its Non Executive Director. The Chief Executive of the DISC formally reports his progress against Key Targets to the Owners Board twice a year and also through the Owners Quarterly Performance Reviews with the Chief Executive. The first Owner's Board meeting to review 1998–99 Key Targets met on 22 October 1998 and the second is scheduled for 8 March 1999. In his capacity as the Owner, DGIGR is acting on behalf of the Secretary of State.

Challenger 2

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the in-service date for the 120 millimetre stretch programme replacement for the Challenger 2 CHARM ammunition system. [71491]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Challenger 2 is expected to be in service with the British Army until 2025. As a key battle winning equipment, it will be the subject of enhancements throughout its life in order that it can continue to provide an effective capability. A number of enhancement measures are already being considered for the future. Specific details regarding these enhancements are classified, for reasons of operational security.

Aircraft Flying Hours

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 731, for what reasons the average number of flying hours for Tornado GR aircraft was lower in 1998 than in 1997. [71981]

Mr. Doug Henderson: For Tornado GR aircraft, there was a difference of just one hour flying time per aircraft per month between 1997 and 1998. We do not consider this to be a significant difference. In such a large fleet of aircraft there are numerous minor reasons for aircraft flying varying hours, but the main one in this case was the major modifications programme that the aircraft were and are still undergoing.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 21, for what reasons the average flying hours for Tornado F3 aircraft was lower in 1998 than in 1997. [71979]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The principal reason for Tornado F3 aircraft flying fewer hours in 1998 than in 1997 is that the aircraft were undergoing a major upgrade programme.

Infantry Exercise (Botswana)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the infantry exercise in Botswana between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; and which units took part. [72202]

Mr. Doug Henderson: One joint infantry exercise, Exercise Diamond Cutter, took place in Botswana from 4 February to 12 March 1998. The purpose of the exercise was to provide company level dry and live firing training in a rugged environment, over extended lines of communication. B Company 2nd Battalion, the Parachute Regiment participated on the UK side.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official

Report, column 486, on ministerial visits, which hon. Members have been informed of a planned visit to their constituency by him in the last 12 months. [72223]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In accordance with paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code, hon. Members are informed in advance about planned visits to their constituencies by me and my ministerial colleagues. Records relating to such visits are not held on a constituency basis, and could be constructed only at disproportionate cost.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71852]

Mr. George Robertson: In common with other Departments, the work of press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary. Because this is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Ethnic Special Advisers

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many (i) black people, (ii) Asian people and (iii) women have been appointed by the Government as special advisers since 1 May 1997; and on what dates these appointments were made; [69652]

(2) how many (i) black people, (ii) Asian people and (iii) women were appointed by the Government as special advisers between 1 May 1992 and 30 April 1997; and (b) on what dates these appointments were made. [69654]

The Prime Minister: Information in the detailed form requested is not held in respect of appointments made under the last Administration.

At 15 February, there are 69 Special Advisers in post of which 16 are women. In response to a voluntary survey 58 have been identified as white. The other 11 have not responded to the survey. Information on the dates individuals were appointed is not held centrally.

Joined-up Government

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will define the term, joined-up Government. [69484]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The forthcoming White Paper on Modernising Government will set out the Government's vision for improving the way in which policy is developed and public services are designed and delivered. In central Government it means the different parts of Government working more closely together and across departmental and institutional boundaries than they have in the past. The work of the Social Exclusion Unit and Performance and Innovation Unit are examples of this approach being applied to Government. This approach is also reflected in local authorities, government agencies, voluntary and private organisations working together.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70420]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 February 1999]: For the purpose of this question, this answer includes my Office and the Cabinet Office and its Agencies.

IT equipment, and vehicles in the fleet of the Government Car and Despatch Agency, are routinely replaced at the end of their useful life. The old equipment and vehicles are sold where it is appropriate and economic to do so.

In addition to these replacement programmes, the Cabinet Office has sold two of the fixed related assets, one of which is listed in the vehicles category the other from the plant and machinery category. The sale realised £1,500.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71330]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I undertake visits to all parts of the country, but records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each overseas visit in an official capacity by a special adviser since 2 May 1997, stating the cost and who paid. [69723]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 February 1999]: In respect of my Policy Unit, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 8 December 1998, Official Report, column 143.

My Chief of Staff and Chief Press Secretary—who are employed under the terms of the amended Civil Service Order in Council—are usually part of the official party accompanying me on overseas visits.

Information covering travel by special advisers for each Government Department over the last 20 months is not held centrally.

Oskar Lafontaine

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Prime Minister what role his Press Secretary had in the preparation and placing of Oskar Lafontaine's article in The Daily Telegraph on 11 February. [71586]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Mr. Lafontaine's office advised mine that he was writing an article for The Daily Telegraph. They sought advice on the style of the article's presentation, as I routinely ask of other Governments when I write articles for foreign newspapers.

Poland

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister when he next intends to pay an official visit to Poland. [71813]

The Prime Minister: I hope to visit Poland in the near future.

Royal Commissions

Mr. Luff: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list for each Royal Commission established since 1969 the date of the establishment; what deadline was set for their report; and when they reported. [72204]

The Prime Minister: An up to date list is as follows.

| Title | Appointed | Report |
|---|---|---|
| Industrial Relations | 1 March 1969 | Wound up in 1971 |
| The Constitution | 15 April 1969 | 10 October 1973 |
| Environmental Pollution | 20 February 1970 | February 1971 |
| Civil Liability and Compensation for Personal Injury | 19 March 1973 | March 1978 |
| Press | 16 July 1974 | July 1977 |
| Distribution of Income and Wealth | 23 August 1974 | First 1975Final October 1979 |
| Standards of Conduct in Public Life | 6 December 1974 | July 1976 |
| Gambling | 24 February 1976 | July 1978 |
| National Health Service | 19 May 1976 | July 1979 |
| Legal Services | 20 July 1976 | October 1979 |
| Criminal Procedure | 3 February 1978 | January 1981 |
| Criminal Justice | 14 March 1991 | July 1993 |
| Long Term Care for the Elderly | 17 December 1997 | Will report shortly |

As standing body the Commission reports from time to time

The Royal Commission on Long Term Care for the Elderly was asked to report within 12 months of its establishment. No deadline was set for any of the other Royal Commissions listed.

Mackerel Fishing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen) of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 321, on commercial fishing of mackerel, what assessment he has made of allegations of fishing by EU member states' vessels in the conservation box. [72153]

The Prime Minister: The majority of the Mackerel Box lies outside UK territorial waters. Vessels from other member States are free to fish there provided that they have quota and do not target mackerel using mobile fishing gear or purse seine nets.

One of the tasks of the Royal Navy's Fisheries Protection Squadron and our aerial surveillance team is to patrol this area. In 1998, enforcement action included reporting two incidents to the Danish Authorities who later suspended the licences of the skippers concerned for one month. Four other cases were successfully prosecuted in the UK Courts.

We have not detected any infringements of access rights in the UK territorial waters included in the box and neither have we been informed of any infringements of those access rights.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Totnes of 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 395, if the reduction of fishing effort includes decommissioning of fishing boats. [71926]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. George) by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 117.

Gibraltar

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Prime Minister what response he made to the petition presented in December, calling on Her Majesty's Government to reject the Spanish proposals for joint sovereignty. [72211]

The Prime Minister: The Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office responsible for Gibraltar, my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), sent a letter in response to the December petition organised by the Self-Determination for Gibraltar Group. In this, she made clear that we will respond to the proposals from Spain at the next Brussels Process meeting. Our commitment under the 1969 Gibraltar Constitution is that we will never enter into arrangements under which the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Social Representation (Judiciary)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to encourage wider social representation in the judiciary. [70657]

Mr. Hoon: Judicial appointments are made solely on merit; the Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint or recommend for appointment the candidates who satisfy the statutory qualifications and who in his opinion best meet the criteria for appointment. Without prejudice to this overriding principle, the Lord Chancellor is taking a number of measures designed to encourage more applications for judicial appointment for women and minority ethnic practitioners. These include more flexible part-time sitting arrangements, an increase in the upper age limit for appointment as an Assistant Recorder and the development of work-shadowing and mentoring schemes.

Personal Injury Actions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the alternatives to conditional fee agreements and legal aid available to finance personal injury actions. [71975]

Mr. Hoon: In addition to conditional fee agreements and legal aid, personal injury actions may also be financed, amongst other things, by before the event legal expenses insurance, which is a common addition to many motoring and home contents insurance; after the event legal expenses insurance; through benefits arising from membership of organisations or trade unions and such arrangements as are agreed between solicitors and their clients.

Legal Expenses Insurance

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the insurance companies who offer after-the-event legal expenses insurance (a) in conjunction with conditional fee agreements and (b) on a stand-alone basis; and if he will make a statement. [71973]

Mr. Hoon: Insurance products to underpin conditional fees have been available since July 1995. I am aware of at least eight providers of after the event insurance to underpin conditional fees. I doubt that a comprehensive list exists or can be put together given the expanding nature of this market.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the research projects which his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) plans to undertake, into after-the-event legal expenses insurance; and if he will make a statement. [71972]

Mr. Hoon: My officials are currently discussing proposals for the research and monitoring of the operation on conditional fee agreements, with representatives from the professions, insurance providers and consumer groups. After the event insurance may form a component of that research.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71847]

Mr. Hoon: In common with other departments, the work of press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity, which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Since this is a routine part of the Department's work and is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate costs.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 457, on ministerial visits, which hon. Members have been informed of a planned visit to their constituency by him in the last 12 months. [72222]

Mr. Hoon: In accordance with paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code, hon. Members are informed in advance about planned visits to their constituencies by myself and my Ministerial colleagues. Records relating to such visits are not held on a constituency basis, and could be constructed only at disproportionate cost.

Scriveners Jurisdiction

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from the Scriveners Company concerning proposals to amend Scriveners' jurisdiction. [72159]

Mr. Hoon: Last year the Lord Chancellor undertook to review the desirability of preserving the monopoly of the Worshipful Company of Scriveners over notarial work in the central London area. As a result of this review the Department received representations from the Scriveners' Company in letters dated 10 June 1998, 25 June 1998 and 3 February 1999. The Company was opposed to the abolition of the monopoly.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72011]

Mr. Hoon: (a) The total remuneration to KPMG in respect of work awarded by my Department between May 1997 and January 1999 inclusive was £276,132. The bulk of this related to an engagement which began prior to 1 May 1997. (b) The total remuneration to KPMG in respect of work awarded by my Department between July 1995 and April 1997 inclusive was £106,136.

For the period before May 1997 complete information on the specific services performed is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Since 1997, the payments relate to two specific pieces of work, one on the Ancillary Relief Pilot Scheme, which began prior to 1 May 1997, and the second a report on the feasibility of solicitors operating a financially viable business if most money claims were pursued under conditional fee arrangements.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70006]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Lord Chancellor's Department may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client. London solicitors' firms have been used for advice on the drafting and negotiation of contracts let under the private finance initiative:

(i) Since 1 May 1997 services have been performed by Denton Hall (remuneration £223,284 to date), Masons (£228,111 to date) and Bird & Bird (£103,926);

(ii) In the proceeding period services were performed by Masons (remuneration: £119,276).

The Public Trustee and Official Solicitor instruct private solicitors in their representative capacity but to provide details would involve disproportionate cost.

CPS (Rights of Audience)

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list (a) those Crown courts where the Crown Prosecution Service has had rights of audience, (b) the dates on which those rights of audience were first granted and (c) the number of successful appeals from (i) courts where rights of audience have been so granted and (ii) Crown courts where rights of audience have not been so granted. [71499]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Under Section 4 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, Crown Prosecutor solicitors are entitled to appear in the Crown Courts at Caernarvon, Barnstaple, Bodmin (later replaced by Truro), Doncaster and Lincoln. However, these rights were not exercised until 1991, and have only been exercised at Truro.

On 26 February 1997, CPS solicitors (in common with other employed solicitors) were granted restricted rights of audience in the Crown Court (sitting at any location) subject to their obtaining a Higher Court Advocacy Qualification. These rights were exercised from 24 July 1998. Barrister Crown Prosecutors have never appeared before the Crown Court.

No separate records are kept of appeals from Crown Court centres where Crown Prosecutors have been granted or have exercised rights of audience.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71466]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Rules governing the work of the GCIS are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Libraries of the House.

No cost is incurred by my Department, its agencies and non-governmental bodies for the use of external consultants for the preparation of press releases. However, both my Department and HM Land Registry use the services of the Central Office of Information (COI) for the electronic distribution of press releases. The cost for this service to my Department was £24,561.62 for the period between May 1997 and the end of March 1999. The cost for HM Land Registry was £10,472.79 for the same period.

Since neither staff time spent on the preparation of press releases nor stationery costs or postage incurred in their distribution are separately recorded the further information requested could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

The Mall

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when authorising the closing of The Mall, what steps were made within his Department to conform to the code of practice for the co-ordination of street works published by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. [72268]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Viviane Robertson to Mr. Nicholas Soames, dated 22 February 1999:

In the absence of the Chief Executive, Mr. David Welch, I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport to answer your Parliamentary Question about the closure of the Mall, because it is an operational matter that falls within the responsibility of this Agency.

The code of practice is designed for use by local authorities in relation to street works in an urban setting. However, the Agency is aware of, and follows, the requirements of the code of practice and it consulted Westminster City Council, as the local highway authority, about the works.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for what reason The Mall is to be closed for the three weeks from 15 February. [70813]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The Royal Parks Agency is closing The Mall in order to carry out necessary work to resurface the road and to effect safety improvements at accident black spots. In accordance with the advice received following consultation with Westminster City Council, as the local highway authority, and the Metropolitan Police, the Royal Parks Agency has sought to concentrate works in the shortest period in order to minimise disruption, and this unfortunately requires total closure of The Mall for three weeks.

Film Industry

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Employment over the film education group proposed in A Bigger Picture; [71742]

(2) what representations he has received from the film industry about (a) the Skills Investment Fund and (b) the definition of a culturally British film; [71746]

(3) what meetings have taken place of the (a) Film Finance Forum, (b) Skills Investment Fund, (c) All Industry Fund, (d) Film Marketing Agency and (e) Film Action Committee. [71748]

Janet Anderson: I have discussed the progress of the film education group with Ministerial colleagues at the Department for Education and Employment and officials from our two Departments are in regular contact. There is also a DfEE representative on the group itself. Good progress has been made and the group is due to publish its report in April.

A wide range of representations about the Skills Investment Fund has been received and discussions with key industry players are proceeding very constructively. We will make an announcement on the Fund in due course.

We have received only a few representations on the proposed definition of a culturally British film. Several respondents argued that the existence of two film definitions, even if used for different purposes, could be confusing. It is for the industry to decide whether it should use such a definition to help target its marketing activities. The Film Policy Review Action Committee has not pursued this recommendation from A Bigger Picture.

There have been four meetings of the Film Policy Review Action Committee and one meeting of the Film Finance Forum. The Action Committee is discussing with representatives of the distributors and exhibitors plans for establishing a Film Marketing Agency. On the All Industry Fund, the Action Committee decided that the model set out in A Bigger Picture was not practicable, but is taking forward discussions with the industry about possible support for specific initiatives in areas such as development and generic marketing.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what discussions he has had with the Treasury concerning continued tax exemptions for British films; [71749]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer about the £15 million production costs limit for films, for tax purposes. [72324]

Janet Anderson: My Department has kept the Treasury fully informed of the industry's views about the beneficial effects of the tax write-off and about the £15 million production costs limit. The Film Policy Review Action Committee has also developed a proposal for a new tax relief aimed at boosting the domestic distribution sector, which has been submitted to the Treasury.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the predicted financial savings arising from the amalgamation of British Screen, the British Film Commission and the British Film Institute. [71752]

Janet Anderson: Last December my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that a new public body, British Film, will be established by 1 April 2000. British Film will deliver a coherent strategy for the development of film culture and the film industry. British Screen and the British Film Institute will not be incorporated in the new body. British Screen will retain its private-sector status, which enables it to operate effectively within the commercial industry. The BFI will retain its charitable status, which helps it to pursue its educational and cultural objectives. Discussions about the relationship between the British Film Commission and British Film are currently in progress.

The bringing together of grant-in-aid and Lottery funding for film under one strategic body will ensure that resources are used as cost-effectively as possible and avoid duplication of expenditure.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much lottery money (a) was spent by the Arts Council in the last 12 months for which figures are available and (b) he expects the Arts Council to have at its disposal in each of the next three years for the British film industry. [71747]

Janet Anderson: In 1997–98 the amount of lottery money committed by the Arts Council was £323.8 million.

In December I announced the creation of a new public body, British Film, that will take over the role of the Arts Council of England in distributing funds for film. British Film will be established as a Lottery distributor with its own percentage stream of Lottery money from the arts good cause, guaranteeing, for the first time, a dedicated share of Lottery resources for film. The percentage will be set to ensure British Film receives at least £27 million each year from the Lottery; the figure may well be higher if the numbers playing the Lottery continue as at present.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71343]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I have undertaken a number of visits to regions around the UK in the past 12 months as part of my Department's strategy of stimulating thinking on cultural development in the regions. Records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis as many take in more than one constituency at a time. Since 1 March 1998, and excluding the Greater London region, the following cities or regions were visited:

Bath: 1
Berkshire: 3
Birmingham: 2
Bournemouth: 1
Cambridge: 1
Cornwall: 1
Doncaster: 1
Edinburgh: 2
Lake District: 1
Leeds/Bradford: 2
Luton: 1

Manchester: 5
Newcastle: 1
Nottingham: 2
Oxfordshire: 1
Peterborough: 1
Portsmouth: 1
Preston: 1
Salisbury: 1
Sheffield: 3
York: 1.

Royal Opera House

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the running costs of the Royal Opera House are for the current financial year; and what level of public subsidy is required for the next financial year. [70358]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The total expenditure budget of the Royal Opera House for the current financial year is £36,553m. For the next financial year, grant in aid from the Arts Council of England will be £16.0m. In addition the Royal Opera House will receive £5.12m in closure grant from Arts Council Lottery funds.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to review the regulations in respect of the granting of concessionary television licences to elderly and disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [71386]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The current review of the future of the BBC licence fee after 2002 will include a consideration of the structure of the existing concessionary television licence scheme and whether a suitable alternative structure could be available. The independent review panel will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the end of July this year. There will then be a period of public consultation on the panel's recommendations.

Cricket and Football

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to develop facilities for (a) cricket and (b) football within Herefordshire; and if he will make a statement. [71156]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The English Sports Council (ESC) is working closely with the governing bodies of sport and others to identify ways in which to promote cricket and football in Herefordshire.

Facility provision for cricket in Herefordshire will be included in the ESC/England and Wales Cricket Board facilities joint strategy which is to be published in the spring. Among potential projects are a new County Ground and specialist indoor cricket centre.

The South West Region of the Football Association has recently drawn up a facilities strategy for football in Herefordshire, which examined the requirements for football from professional down to local club level. The FA will use the strategy as part of its overall measures to promote football in the County.

There have been two awards to cricket and three to football in Herefordshire from the lottery sports fund, totalling £2,600,000.

Television Subtitles

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the possible future use of digital television for the broadcasting of sign language inserts and audio description services to complement the use of programme subtitles. [71378]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Act 1996 and The Broadcasting (Sign Language) Order 1996 set minimum targets of 10 per cent. for the audio description and 5 per cent. for the signing of digital terrestrial programme services by the tenth anniversary of the start of the service. These percentages can be amended by order and the Government intend to review these on the second anniversary of the launch of digital services.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the level of (a) public awareness of and (b) usage of closed caption television subtitles (i) amongst people with a hearing impairment and (ii) generally. [71375]

Janet Anderson: The Government are aware of the results of research undertaken by the RNID into the use of subtitles and we are taking this into account in our consideration of how we might increase the provision of subtitling on cable and satellite television, on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made towards establishing targets for the percentage of programmes which should carry subtitles on (a) digital, (b) cable and (c) satellite television media. [71376]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Act 1996 sets out the minimum requirements for the subtitling of digital terrestrial programme services. There are no similar requirements on cable and satellite services and we are currently considering what might be done on a voluntary basis to increase the provision of subtitling on these services.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to promote greater awareness and use of closed caption television subtitles. [71377]

Janet Anderson: The need for greater promotion of subtitling both within the broadcasting industry and generally is one of a number of issues raised in my officials' meetings with those representing viewers with sensory disabilities and subtitling providers. We are currently considering how we might now take this issue forward.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will [illegible]e when digital, cable and satellite television media will provide subtitling to the same extent as conventional free to air television media; and if he will ensure that such a level is reached on all digital television media before analogue television broadcasting services are withdrawn. [71548]

Janet Anderson: We are currently considering the Government's strategy for analogue switch off and will make an announcement in due course. We are aware of concerns over the levels of subtitling which will be available on digital services and will ensure that the needs of those who rely on these services are taken into account.

Film Archives

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the (a) role and (b) levels of public funding of each of the regional film archives. [71167]

Janet Anderson: The role of the regional film archives is to collect material of relevance and significance to their areas, so that it can be made available locally for screenings, supply to television programmes and individual research. Each depends on a range of public funding from local and central government and public bodies. Support from my Department, which is channelled through the British Film Institute, is as follows:

|---|---|
| East Anglian Film Archive | 20,000 |
| Media Archive for Central England | 9,000 |
| Northern Region Film and Television Archive | 35,000 |
| Northern Ireland Film Commission | 10,000 |
| North West Film Archive | 16,200 |
| South East Film and Video Archive | 17,500 |
| TSW Film and Television Archive | 10,000 |
| Wales Film and Television Archive | 22,000 |
| Wessex Film Archive | 8,000 |
| Yorkshire Film Archive | 11,500 |
| Total | 159,200 |

[1] Forecast for 1999–2000

In addition, the British Film Institute currently channels some £3.8 million of its Government grant to the National Film and Television Archive which has a national remit to preserve and make accessible its collections of film and video material.

Museums and Art Galleries

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals the Government have made to encourage those on low incomes to visit museums and art galleries. [70787]

Mr. Alan Howarth: All charging Museums and Galleries funded by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport offer concessions for those on low incomes.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in December that funds have been allocated to allow free entry for children to currently charging national museums in England from April this year and for pensioners next year. This will allow those people on low incomes hitherto deterred by entrance charges to visit. We wish to broaden access further in 2001.

Television Licences

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people were (a) prosecuted and (b) threatened with prosecution for failing to have a television licence in 1998 broken down by those aged (i) under 25, (ii) 25 to 39, (iii) 40 to 59 and (iv) 60 years and over. [71407]

Janet Anderson: Prosecutions for television licence fee evasion are not recorded separately from other offences under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts of 1949 and 1967, though the great majority of offences under these Acts relate to licence fee evasion. The number of prosecutions in England, Scotland and Wales in 1997, the most recent year for which information is available, was 92,749. The age breakdown (where a person's age is not known, it is recorded automatically as 25) was as follows:

| Age | Number |
|---|---|
| Under 25 | 9,138 |
| 25 to 39 | 76,125 |
| 40 to 59 | 6,948 |
| 60 and over | 538 |

The most recent available figures for Northern Ireland are for the financial year 1996–97, when there were a total of 11,301 prosecutions, but no age breakdown is available.

In 1997, TV licensing took 315,621 prosecution statements.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71459]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Rules governing the work of the GICS are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both have been placed in the Library of the House.

The cost of press releases issued since May 1997 by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, and its predecessor the Department of National Heritage was £46,614 excluding VAT.

Information on press releases issued by the Royal Parks Agency, and Department's 41 Executive non-departmental Public Bodies, 9 Advisory non-departmental Public Bodies, and 5 Public Corporations is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71444]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The Department of National Heritage, predecessor to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, was created in April 1992. Since the creation of the Department the following press releases have been issued:

| Date | Amount |
|---|---|
| 14 April 1992 to 31 December 1992 | 129 |
| 1 January 1993 to 31 December 1993 | 191 |
| 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994 | 189 |
| 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1995 | 256 |
| 1 January 1996 to 31 December 1996 | 414 |
| 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997 | 349 |
| 1 January 1998 to 31 December 1998 | 319 |

Information on press releases issued by the Royal Parks Agency, the Department's 41 Executive non-departmental Public Bodies, 9 Advisory non-departmental Public Bodies, and 5 Public Corporations is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71851]

Mr. Chris Smith: In common with other Departments, the work of press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Feature Films

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the amount of (a) inward investment to and (b) total investment in the United Kingdom for feature film production in each of the last five years. [71153]

Janet Anderson: Information from industry sources shows the following levels of investment:

| | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 | 1998 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| a) inward investment | 229.45 | 206.71 | 398.03 | 238.85 | 219.18 |
| b) total investment | 435.76 | 420.79 | 725.59 | 557.99 | 487.16 |

Countryside

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much land held by his Department he estimates would fall within the definition of open country as set out in the consultation document "Access to the Open Countryside" of February 1998. [71640]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department has no land which falls within the definition of open countryside.

National Lottery

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what amount and what percentage of the total awarded by the National Lottery Charities Board has been allocated to organisations representing older people and pensioners in each year since the Lottery's establishment; and if he will list the recipients and the amounts received. [71406]

Mr. Banks: To date the National Lottery Charities Board (NLCB) has made over 18,700 awards totalling over £1,004 billion. A number of these have been to organisations representing older people and pensioners. The following table is derived from NLCB's annual reports. Many other NLCB funded projects will also benefit older people even if they are not the main beneficiary group but these cannot be separately identified.

| Annual Report Year | Value of awards to groups representing older people (£) | NLCB total awards (£) | Awards to older people groups as percentage of total awarded (%) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 9,015,267 | 184,097,769 | 4.89 |
| 1996–97 | 11,678,280 | 319,236,293 | 3.66 |
| 1997–98 | 50,169,146 | 307,386,464 | 16.32 |

Details of Lottery awards are listed on the Department for Culture, Media and Sports website at www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Landmark Millennium Projects

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from the organisers of Landmark Millennium projects about the availability of private sponsorship; and if he will make a statement. [72020]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Library of the House.

Tourism (Farm Buildings)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants are available to enable the conversion of farm buildings for tourism in the Chorley constituency. [68476]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 1 February 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 318–19.

The Redundant Building Grant Scheme, currently operated by the Rural Development Commission, can provide grants for the conversion or refurbishment of redundant buildings to bring them back into productive business use or to enhance their current business use. The European Regional Development Fund grants I referred to in my earlier answer are not available in the Chorley constituency itself.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Roofs (Latent Defect Insurance)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will meet representatives of the National Federation of Roofing Contractors to discuss the implications of the Latent Defect Insurance Scheme; [70380]

(2) what assessment he has made of the Latent Defect Insurance Scheme being launched by the National Federation of Roofing Contractors; [70378]

(3) what plans he has to support the Latent Defect Insurance Scheme being launched by the National Federation of Roofing Contractors. [70379]

Mr. Raynsford: I was very interested to hear of the Latent Defect Insurance Scheme which has been prepared by the National Federation of Roofing Contractors, and am pleased to offer support for a scheme which seeks to improve standards in the construction industry.

If there are specific issues where my Department may be able to assist, which the Federation wishes to discuss in relation to their scheme, I will be happy to consider a request for a meeting.

A3 (Hindhead)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) which body is responsible for drawing up the proposal for the A3 improvements at Hindhead; and if he will publish the schedule for the necessary decisions and announcements relating to that proposal; [70809]

(2) when he plans to visit Hindhead to examine the A3 and its effects on business and the environment. [70808]

Mr. Prescott: I have no plans currently to visit Hindhead. We already recognise that there is a serious congestion problem there and, in December of last year, announced our intention that an A3 Hindhead study would form part of a group of road based studies proposed to start within the next two years.

Constituency Visits

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which parliamentary constituencies he has visited in the past year to discuss road proposals. [70807]

Mr. Prescott: Paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code makes it clear that Ministers should inform hon. Members in advance of planned visits to their constituencies. Ministers in the Department undertake visits to all parts of the country and discuss various subjects of local and national interest, but records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

London Underground (Disabled Access)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve access for disabled people to London Underground services. [70726]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are committed to a fully accessible public transport system. However, full accessibility cannot happen overnight, especially on London Underground, where most of the stations are old and not designed with access for mobility impaired people in mind.

London Transport has been developing a scheme to improve access to a core of 68 Underground stations and plans shortly to consult the Disabled Peoples Transport Advisory Committee, London Boroughs and local disability groups about these plans.

The Jubilee line extension will be fully accessible and will mean that wheelchair users will be able to travel from mainline stations at Waterloo, Stratford and London Bridge stations to the Millennium Exhibition at North Greenwich.

Railway Stations (Disabled Access)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of those railway stations which have been (a) refurbished and (b) restructured in the last five years do not have access for the disabled. [70802]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All new stations planned or in build will provide full unassisted wheelchair access. In addition, Railtrack are on course to meet the target, set in the Network Management Statement 1998, of providing unassisted wheelchair access at a further 119 stations this year.

On refurbishment and restructuring projects information is available only for those stations which are included in Railtrack's Station Regeneration Programme. Of the 786 stations which have been subject to such works, 607 are not able to offer unassisted wheelchair access to all platforms. Wheelchair access may be available at these stations, however staff assistance will be required because of goods lifts, barrow crossings, or other barriers to independent access.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70772]

Mr. Prescott: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 567–70.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71292]

Mr. Meale: Amounts within the Department's budget for 1998–99 that can be attributed to spending on disabled people are as follows:

(a) the Department's Mobility Unit is responsible for transport policy as it affects the mobility of disabled people and has a net running cost budget of £950,000 and a net programme budget of £477,000;

(b) there are some specific allocations within the Department's housing programmes as follows: (i) £60 million of disabled facilities grants to help disabled people adapt their homes to enable them to live more independently; (ii) £50,000 available through the housing research programme project "housing options for people with learning disabilities and mental health problems"; and (iii) around £17 million of the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme is being spent on disabled people. In addition the Housing Corporation's revenue funding programme for supported housing schemes includes provision for the disabled;

(c) about £4.6 million is available through the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme to households specifically on the basis of a disability benefit;

(d) the Department administers the Pneumoconiosis etc. (Workers' Compensation) Act 1979 with a budget of £8,269,000; and

(e) the Air and Environment Quality air pollution information service provides information on the levels of air pollution, a forecast of levels and advice on health at a cost of about £100,000 a year.

Many of the Department's other programmes are of benefit to disabled people, although it is not possible specifically to attribute such expenditure, or to specify how much it represents as a proportion of total departmental spending.

The Department spends approximately £45,000 a year on providing technical aids for its own central staff who are disabled and about another £9,000 for the disability access survey for its central buildings and other improvements.

A3

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) miles of single carriageway road and (b) sets of traffic lights are on the A3 between London and Portsmouth. [71159]

Dr. Reid: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mrs. Virginia Bottomley, dated 22 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked Lawrie Haynes, Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to reply to your recent question about how many miles of single carriageway and how many traffic lights there are on the A3 between London and Portsmouth. I am replying in Mr. Haynes' absence.

The A3 around Hindhead in south west Surrey is the last remaining section of single carriageway between Wandsworth in south west London and Portsmouth. There are twenty sets of traffic lights on the A3 between London and Portsmouth, sixteen in Wandsworth, three in Kingston and one at Hindhead.

Resident Students

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial adjustments were made to each local education authority for 1999–2000 in respect of (a) net movement of resident students into other local education authorities and (b) resident students in the non-maintained sector. [71708]

Ms Armstrong: Financial adjustments between authorities in respect of pupils without special educational needs educated in the maintained sector outside their authority of residence ('recoupment') ended on 31 March 1995.

The Education Standard Spending Assessments use estimates of resident pupils. These are defined in the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1999–2000 on pages 40–41.

London Underground

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) of 13 January 1999, Official Report, column 212, if he will list the consultancy firms with contracts to provide advice jointly to London Transport and the Government on the implementation of his public/private partnership plans for London Underground. [71763]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The main consultants working on the London Underground Public-Private Partnership (PPP) are:-

PricewaterhouseCoopers (financial)

Freshfields (legal)

Ove Arup and Partners (engineering)

Arthur Andersen (operations entity design)

PA Consulting (infrastructure entities design and financial modelling)

Hornagold & Hills (project management)

Richard Ellis (property)

Sedgwick (insurance)

Bacon & Woodrow (pensions).

All of these firms are employed by London Transport, but their advice is available to the Government, and Ministers and officials can, through London Transport, ask them for advice on matters relating to the PPP.

Light Pollution

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to introduce legislation for the control of light pollution. [71683]

Mr. Raynsford: External lighting may require planning permission, particularly, for example, where installations are substantial and affect the external appearance of a building. Local authorities may also attach conditions to planning permissions for new development which cover the design and operation of lighting systems. These conditions can control the type and siting of light installations, and place restrictions on the spread and duration of light. The guidance, "Lighting in the Countryside: Towards good practice", issued in 1997 jointly by my Department and the Countryside

Commission, gives further advice on what can be done to lessen the intrusive effects of lighting schemes. In addition, advice on floodlighting is given in Planning Policy Guidance Note 17, 'Sport and Recreation'. My officials are also in discussion with the DIY industry to identify ways in which their customers might be made more aware of the problems which badly positioned lighting can cause. Our view is that the present combination of planning controls and practical advice is the best way forward and we are not proposing to introduce further legislation in this area.

Hazardous Waste Landfill Sites

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the one day meeting of experts organised by the Institute of Environment and Health, at the request of his Department, to discuss the links between congenital anomalies and hazardous waste landfill sites. [71691]

Mr. Meale: The one day meeting of experts was held on 26 January 1999 at the joint request of my Department and the Department of Health. Experts in toxicology, epidemiology, exposure assessment and landfill technology were present. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss recent research findings, to identify gaps in knowledge base, and to agree and prioritise further research requirements.

The meeting made a number of recommendations for further research work. We are currently considering the best way to take forward these recommendations.

London to Portsmouth Rail Services

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on road and rail traffic levels between London and Portsmouth of (a) an improvement in the quality of the rail rolling stock and (b) an increase in the frequency of main line rail services; [71559]

(2) what assessment he has made of the investment required to reduce main line rail journey times from Portsmouth to London by (a) 10 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. [71562]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State has made no such assessments.

Rolling Stock (Connex)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will discuss with the rail franchising director the condition of the rolling stock operated by Connex services into Portsmouth; [71564]

(2) what representations he has received about the condition of the rolling stock operated by Connex services to Portsmouth. [71523]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No specific representations have been received on the condition of the rolling stock operated by Connex services to Portsmouth, although general complaints about performance may have included reference to dissatisfaction with the condition of trains. The Health and Safety Executive has published draft regulations for consultation which would require the replacement or modification of mark 1 rolling stock by 1 January 2003 and, if modified, the stock to be rebodied or replaced by 2007. We are currently considering these proposals.

London to Portsmouth Road Services

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on capital investment needs of the main railway line from Portsmouth to London. [71558]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State has received no such representations.

Portsmouth Ferry Port (Rail Interchange)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received in support of the creation of a passenger rail interchange at Portsmouth Ferry Port. [71563]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 235.

The Secretary of State has received no representations in support of the creation of a passenger rail interchange at Portsmouth Ferry Port.

Local Transport Plans

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he proposes to give to local authorities as to the (a) targets for road casualty reductions and (b) road safety strategy to be included in the first local transport plans that they are required to draw up. [71478]

Dr. Reid: The Department issued draft guidance on local transport plans on 12 November 1998. This includes advice on the preparation of road safety strategies and the adoption of targets for road casualty reduction. The guidance emphasises the need to consider road safety in all aspects of the local transport plan. The guidance is intended both as interim advice to enable authorities to make a start on preparing their plans, and as a draft for consultation. The consultation period has now closed and we are in the process of preparing revised guidance, due for publication in the Spring.

Hush-kit Aircraft

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the use of hush-kit aircraft in Britain and Europe after 2002; and if he will make a statement. [71539]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received representations from three sources about the draft EU regulation on recertificated aircraft, raising specific concerns about the provision on re-engined aircraft. We do not believe that it would be possible to meet these concerns without undermining the aims of the regulation, which we support.

Local Authority Expenditure (Education)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list how much each local authority spends on education as a percentage of their total budget. [71547]

Ms Armstrong: The requested information has been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Conditions

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on identifying the locations of the worst housing conditions (i) in general terms and (ii) in respect of energy efficiency. [71405]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department carries out a five-yearly English House Condition Survey that assesses the number and distribution of dwellings nationally and regionally in poor condition and with poor energy standards. The last survey was carried out in 1996 and another is planned for 2001. As the survey is only a (representative) sample of the stock it cannot identify which particular local areas have concentrations of poor housing conditions or low energy efficiency levels. Local authorities themselves assess housing conditions and energy efficiency levels in their areas to produce locally based strategies.

Housing Stock (Energy Efficiency)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information local authorities have provided to him on the relative energy efficiency of their housing stock. [71404]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities are expected in their Housing Investment Programme submission to demonstrate that they have an energy conservation policy as part of their housing strategy. They are also required to set out, in energy conservation reports prepared under the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995, their plans for improving the energy efficiency of all residential accommodation, and they now provide an annual return covering a range of standard information on energy efficiency improvements.

Bus Grant

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the impact of increases in bus grant on the pattern of (a) rural bus services, with particular reference to passenger usage, (b) frequency and (c) routings. [71637]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We will be gathering information from local authorities in the coming months to assess the impact of the first year's funding for rural bus services announced in the last Budget. We will carry out a similar review in subsequent years. This information will inform future policy on this matter.

PFI Waste Management Schemes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the operational effectiveness of waste management schemes funded to date under the PFI; and what plans he has to develop more PFI-backed waste management schemes. [71168]

Mr. Meale: Five PFI waste management schemes have been approved but only 3 contracts have been signed and the most advanced of these is at a very early stage of implementation. Given this and the fact that each of the contracts is for 25 years, it is too early to judge their effectiveness.

We will continue to approve PFI waste management schemes if funds are available and they meet the Department's criteria for endorsement.

Radioactive Waste Management

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he received a copy of the Commission Communication on the present situation regarding prospects for radioactive waste management in the European Union, COM(1998) 799, dated 11 January 1999; what assistance the United Kingdom nuclear authorities gave to the Commission in its preparation; and if he will make a statement on the implications of the report for radioactive waste management in the United Kingdom. [71178]

Mr. Meale: A copy of the report was received in January this year. United Kingdom input to the report was co-ordinated by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions with assistance from producers of radioactive waste. The international perspective provided by the report may prove useful in considering how to respond to the report on nuclear waste management which the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology is expected to produce shortly.

HOMES

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many staff were employed by HOMES for each year from 1993; [71678]

(2) what was the total cost of HOMES for each year from 1993. [71677]

Mr. Raynsford: The cost to DOE, now the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions—of HOMES and the number of staff HOMES has employed since 1993 are as shown in the following table.

| Financial year | Total HOMES expenditure (£) | DOE/DETR grant (£) | Average number of staff employed |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 2,271,224 | 1,667,067 | 35 |
| 1994–95 | 2,201,070 | 1,646,000 | 40 |
| 1995–96 | 2,088,727 | 1,672,900 | 40 |
| 1996–97 | 2,075,138 | 1,975,138 | 45 |
| 1997–98 | 2,457,485 | 1,593,997 | 52 |
| 1998–99 | [1]2,183,223 | 1,535,063 | 48 |

[1] Forecast

Source:

Apart from 1998–99, figures derived from HOMES published accounts.

HOMES also generate their own income and have received some smaller amounts of grant support from other Departments and the Housing Corporation during this period.

Air Pollution

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to ensure that the air pollution targets set out in the National Air Quality Strategy will be met. [71911]

Mr. Meale: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced last month the outcome of the Government's review of the National Air Quality Service. We are now consulting on our proposals to amend the Strategy in order to deliver our commitment to cleaner air.

National policies will go a significant way to meeting our air quality objectives throughout the country. However, action at local level will also be essential since air quality has an important local dimension which needs a focused local approach. Local Authorities are therefore required to carry out periodic reviews of air quality in their areas and to assess present and likely future air quality against the objectives set out in the Strategy. Where any of the objectives are not likely to be met by 2005, authorities are required to designate Air Quality Management Areas and prepare and implement action plans in pursuit of the objectives.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the average levels of air pollution affecting residential homes adjacent to (a) motorways, (b) major trunk roads and (c) minor trunk roads in South Cambridgeshire in 1997–98. [71912]

Mr. Meale: There are eight Nitrogen Dioxide ($NO_2$) Diffusion Tube Network sites in or near Cambridge (sites and annual mean levels recorded in the following table). None of the sites are adjacent to motorways or trunk roads although the Cambridge Parker Street site is in the busy town centre.

Further information and daily data up to September 1998, can be obtained via the World Wide Web, at DETR's Air Quality Archive at http://www/environment.detr.gov.uk/aiq/aqinfo.htm.

The Government's policies with respect to improving air quality in the UK were published on the 13 January, in the "Report of the Review of the National Air Quality Strategy". Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give details of the 1999–2000 charging scheme for local air pollution control under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. [72364]

Mr. Meale: Charges to cover the costs of local enforcing authorities in regulating processes which are subject to Part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 were introduced in April 1991.

With the approval of the Treasury, and following consultation with local authority associations and industry, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Secretary of State for Wales have made a revised scheme specifying the scale of fees and charges to take effect from 1 April 1999.

The level of fees and charges will be increased by approximately 20 per cent. to cover an identified shortfall in recovery of costs. The main changes are that the standard application fee is increased by £215 to £1,280, the substantial change fee is increased by £135 to £815, and the annual subsistence charge is increased by £130 to £790.

The scheme will be laid before both Houses and copies placed in the Libraries.

Night Flights

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the departmental consultation document relating to night flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports; and if he will publish a breakdown by constituency of the responses. [71915]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The closing date for responses was 12 February 1999 and analysis of them is proceeding. I will comment on the responses when announcing the decision and will make available for inspection, following the decision, those responses where confidentiality has not been requested. It is not the intention to prepare a breakdown of responses by parliamentary constituency, as this would involve disproportionate cost. Responses from organisations do not relate to particular districts, but consideration will be given to making available a breakdown of responses from individuals by postal district.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to commission independent research into the effects of night flights on people living around Heathrow Airport. [71922]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our intention to commission a new research trial on the effect of night-time aircraft noise on sleep disturbance was announced on 27 February last year, when the first stage consultation on night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports was published. The trial is expected to focus on methodologies, assessing experimental and analytical techniques—and their limitations—which are related to the measurement of sleep disturbance. The findings of the trial will help us decide whether to proceed with a full-scale study of sleep disturbance, and to determine what should be included in any such study. The trial will be based at Manchester Airport, which provides a suitable combination of densely populated communities close to the airport with a spread of aircraft noise throughout the night. It may be extended to Heathrow if actual noise levels in the early morning at Manchester prove insufficient for the purposes of the trial. If, on completion of the trial, we decide to continue with more detailed research, the question of where that study would be based is one of many issues which would need to be considered at that time, based on objective research considerations.

A steering group, which includes community and industry representatives, has been established to oversee the trial and expert advice is obtained from a technical group made up of specialists in relevant scientific fields. Further peer group advice will also be sought from a panel of international experts. Detailed proposals for the trial will be announced following completion of discussions with these groups.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the studies used in preparing the latest departmental consultation document on night flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports. [71914]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The second stage consultation paper on night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, issued on 17 November 1998, Official Report, column 492, refers at Appendix D to the following studies:

1. "Aircraft Noise and Sleep Disturbance: final report", DORA Report 8008 (£3.50)
2. "Aircraft Noise and Sleep Disturbance: designated night data for sites surveyed in the main phase of the study", DORA Communication 8004 (£1.50)
3. "Noise Disturbance at Night near Heathrow and Gatwick Airports: 1984 check study", DR Report 8513 (£2.50)
4. "Noise Disturbance at Night near Heathrow and Gatwick Airports: Critique of the technical issues raised by consultees during the 1986 Public Consultation", DORA Report 8715 (£3.00)
5. "Report of a Field Study of Aircraft Noise and Sleep Disturbance", Department of Transport 1992 (£11.00)
6. "Night Noise Contours: a feasibility study", National Physical Laboratory 1997.

Also referred to in the consultation document are:

7. "Night Time Ground Noise", DORA Report 9850 October 1998 (£20.00)
8. "Assessment of Revised Heathrow Early Mornings Approach Procedures Trials", DORA Report 9823, November 1998; and
9. historical daytime noise exposure contours for Gatwick, Heathrow and Stansted airports prepared by DORA on behalf of the Department; those for 1996 being the most recent available at the time the consultation paper was issued.

Reference was also made to the "Heathrow Runway Alternation Trials—Research Among Local Residents" Final Report, March 1998, prepared by MVA for the Heathrow Airport Consultative Committee. In addition the consultation document includes information on such matters as usage of the noise quotas and movement limits since October 1993 and the main points made in the responses to the preliminary consultation, some of which referred to studies carried out.

Advice on how to obtain copies of each document or to consult reference copies free of charge, was given in the consultation document.

Northumberland National Park Committee

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what qualifications are required for appointment to the Northumberland National Park Committee, with particular reference to residence within England. [71741]

Mr. Meale: Our approach in respect of Secretary of State appointments to the National Park Authorities is to encourage candidates to be put forward from as broad a range of backgrounds as possible. The aim is to achieve both a strong and a diverse membership. Secretary of State appointees are expected to represent the national interest and, although there is no specific requirement to be resident in England, preference will be given wherever possible to those candidates who combine the qualities sought with local association to the Park to which they seek appointment.

National Public Transport Information

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what role National Rail Inquiries will play in the one point of inquiry national public transport information system; [72574]

(2) what progress he has made in meeting the commitment in paragraphs 3.73 and 3.74 of the Transport White Paper in respect of the creation of a national integrated journey timetable; [72572]

(3) how the provision of a one point of inquiry national public transport information system is to be funded. [72573]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our aim is to develop a framework for public transport information that builds on existing local and national sources—including the National Rail Enquiry Service—and extends them systematically across the country. At my request, the relevant parties are working together under the auspices of the Confederation of Passenger Transport. Decisions have yet to be taken on the preferred system architecture and funding, but the Department has given over £1 million of credit approvals this year to enable local authorities to play their part, and has invited further bids for funding in 1999–2000.

Home Buyers

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his discussions with mortgage lenders and insurers on protection for home buyers. [72509]

Ms Armstrong: The Government are committed to working with mortgage lenders to encourage greater provision of flexible mortgage products and better protection for home buyers. A mortgage is one of the biggest financial commitments of most people's lives. Home buyers need to think seriously about how they would meet their mortgage payments if they lost their income. Help with mortgage payments through the benefits system (Income Support Mortgage Interest) is confined to people receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance; most claimants wait for nine months before Income Support Mortgage Interest is paid. Home buyers therefore need better, more effective insurance to protect their mortgage payments against unforeseen periods of financial difficulty caused by problems such as accidents, sickness and unemployment. Following discussions with the Government, the Council of Mortgage Lenders and the Association of British Insurers intend to announce tomorrow a new benchmark for mortgage payment protection insurance products which all lenders and insurers will need to meet or exceed. The Government welcome this move, which paves the way for higher quality, better value insurance operating alongside state benefits to provide a more effective level of protection. Everyone with a mortgage or applying for a mortgage should consider carefully whether mortgage payment protection insurance is suitable for their needs and circumstances. If it is, they should seek professional information and advice on a policy which meets their requirements and offers good value.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 603, concerning Best Value, if the provision of services for the Greater London Assembly will be covered by the Best Value regime. [72595]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Bill allows for the Secretary of State to provide, by Order, for the GLA to be a best value authority in relation to those specified functions of the Authority which it does not exercise through the Mayor. This includes services for the Assembly which will be provided through the GLA's Chief Administrative Officer.

Signing Routes (M25)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 439–40, what representations he, or the Highways Agency, has received concerning the siting of individual signs. [72625]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 22 February 1999:

The Minister for Transport, Glenda Jackson has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the representations which we or the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions had received, in respect of the siting of individual direction signs under the London Primary Route network Signing project.

Over 900 signs have been replaced since work began and we have received only 13 representations, mainly from local residents, about the siting of six of them. Of these, two duplicated representations were sent to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. They include those that the London Borough of Sutton, a local Councillor and yourself made on behalf of one of your constituents.

The representations have focused on peoples concerns about replacement direction signs being erected nearer their property. As a result of the representations, one sign has been moved and consideration is being given to the location of two other signs.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what detailed plans are in place for (a) the provision of Channel Tunnel Rail Link Eurostar passengers services to Staffordshire and (b) the opening of rail freight routes on the West Coast Main Line through the Channel Tunnel; [72340]

(2) when he expects the Channel Tunnel Rail Link to reach Staffordshire specifically in relation to Eurostar passenger services and wider freight services. [72339]

Ms Glenda Jackson: (a) My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister received a report from Inter-Capital and Regional Rail Ltd (ICRR), the consortium appointed by London and Continental Railways to manage and operate Eurostar (UK) Ltd, on 13 November 1998 entitled "Review of Regional Eurostar Services". On 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 340, he announced the commissioning of a thorough and independent review. The terms of reference address a wide range of key issues including, in particular, the study by ICRR and the alternative proposals for regional Channel Tunnel services put forward by the Virgin Group.

(b) Railtrack are responsible for the maintenance, renewal and enhancement of the rail network, including any rail freight gauge upgrade of the West Coast Main Line. However, any such upgrade would require significant amounts of Government grant. No grant application has been received.

Local Agenda 21 Strategies

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement clarifying the relationship between Local Agenda 21 strategies and the planning process; [72053]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that local authorities' Local Agenda 21 strategies are integrated with unitary development plans; [72047]

(3) what representations he has received from local authorities about the legal status of Local Agenda 21 strategies in the determination of local planning applications. [72052]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires that planning applications are determined in accordance with the statutory development plan for the area, unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Local planning authorities are required to have regard to national and regional planning guidance when preparing their development plans. National and local strategies, including Local Agenda 21 strategies, may also inform the plan preparation process to the extent that they have a bearing on land use planning matters. Such strategies may also relate to matters which are, or which are capable of being, material considerations to be weighed when local planning authorities take decisions on individual planning applications. Local Agenda 21 strategies do not, however, form part of the statutory planning system.

The Local Agenda 21 process is a useful means of engaging members of the public in identifying ideas, issues and interests which can add value in shaping development plan policies and proposals.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will indicate (a) how many and (b) what proportion of local authorities have adopted Local Agenda 21 strategies. [72055]

Mr. Meale: The most recent survey of Local Agenda 21 activity in the UK was carried out in autumn 1998 by the Local Government Management Board. Of the authorities who responded 129 (35 per cent.) had produced Local Agenda 21 strategies. A further 187 (52 per cent.) were committed to producing a strategy by December 2000 to meet the Prime Minister's target.

Journey Costs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the statistics from the Department of Transport and Infrastructure at Imperial College, London, concerning the change in real terms in the costs of journeys by (a) public transport and (b) car in the past 20 years. [71197]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The statistics were taken from my Department's publication "Transport Statistics Great Britain". They show that bus and rail fares have increased by 25–27 per cent. in real terms over the past 20 years. Total motoring costs fell by 10 per cent. to 1990, but have increased since then to the levels of 20 years ago. Labour costs, which rise faster than average prices, tend to have had a greater influence on the costs of public transport and car maintenance than on car purchase costs, which have fallen in real terms because of improved productivity. Duty is the main component of car fuel costs. Since 1990, increases in duty have caused fuel costs to rise more rapidly than public transport fares.

Fats and Proteins (UK) Ltd.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will revoke the decision of the Planning Inspectorate with regard to the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 section 78 and Schedule 6 appeals by Fats & Proteins (UK) Ltd. application Nos. 97/01177/FUL and 97/01178/FUL. [72231]

Mr. Raynsford: The Secretary of State uses his powers to revoke planning permission only in exceptional circumstances. These particular planning decisions were reached only after a public inquiry had been held to examine the appeals.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71853]

Mr. Meale: In common with other Departments, the work of the press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this work is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Education SSAs

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the SSA levels for (a) education provision and (b) social services provision in North Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement. [72161]

Ms Armstrong: During the consultation period on the Local Government Finance Settlement for 1999–2000, Ministers received four formal representations from Members of Parliament or from the local authority concerning the SSA level for social services funding in North Yorkshire. No representations were received concerning the SSA level for the education budget.

All of the issues raised in the representations have been taken into account in the final settlement.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to visit North Yorkshire to discuss (a) education and (b) social services SSA levels for North Yorkshire County Council. [72158]

Ms Armstrong: The Deputy Prime Minister has no plans at present to visit North Yorkshire to discuss these matters.

Air Services Agreements

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress there has been in the UK-US air services negotiations; and if he will make a statement. [72162]

Dr. Reid: The last round of formal negotiations on full liberalisation of UK/US air services ended abruptly on 7 October when the US team decided to terminate the discussions. A round of informal exploratory discussions on liberalisation is scheduled for 18–19 February in London. Meanwhile, routine negotiations on matters such as increases in the allowable capacity on UK/US routes under the Bermuda 2 agreement continue as normal.

Flight Paths

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what variations in flight paths and regulations of night flights have been made in the last two years over, or in relation to, flights above the (a) county boroughs of (i) Thurrock and (ii) Southend, (b) the county of Essex and (c) the London boroughs to the east of Central London; and when the relevant hon. Members were consulted. [72147]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The routes followed by aircraft taking off from City and Stansted airports, and those followed by aircraft inbound to the Lambourne holding position (stack) over SW Essex used by aircraft waiting to land at Heathrow, have not changed in the last two years. Aircraft preparing to land at City, Heathrow and Stansted are managed tactically by air traffic control within controlled airspace set aside for the purpose which also has not changed over this period. Much of the airspace over Essex, including that over Thurrock below an altitude of 2500ft and over Southend below an altitude of 3500ft, does not form part of the controlled airspace of the London Terminal Control Area and is available for use by general aviation.

Restrictions on night flights at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports have not been changed in the last two years, but future arrangements to apply from 31 October 1999 were the subject of a consultation paper issued by my Department on 17 November 1998, Official Report, column 492, with a closing date for responses of 12 February 1999. The consultation paper included details of the Early Morning Landings Trial for aircraft approaching to land at Heathrow from the east. As a result of the trial, which began in September 1995, more aircraft are joining Heathrow's instrument landing system at higher altitudes further from touchdown, including over London boroughs east of Central London, but there have been no variations to flight paths over Essex.

Croydon Tramlink

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects Croydon Tramlink to be fully operational. [71950]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Croydon Tramlink is being constructed and will be operated under a 99 year concession agreement awarded by London Transport to Tramtrack Croydon Limited.

I understand that Tramtrack aim to open the system in November 1999.

London First

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much funding (a) London First and (b) London First Centre has received from his Department per annum since 1992; and for what purposes the funding was specified. [72164]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Contributions have been made to several London First initiatives. I will write to the hon. Member with full details and place copies in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many civil servants have been seconded from his Department to (a) London First and (b) London First Centre since 1992; and for what purposes. [72168]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since 1992 the Department has had one member of staff seconded to London First, between May 1996 and April 1998, to manage a project promoting manufacturing industry in London. No staff have been seconded to the London First Centre.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what sums the Government Office for London has contributed towards the London First/Centre for Management of Traffic and the Environment study being undertaken by Halcrow Fox on road pricing. [72169]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government Office for London has contributed £5,000 to this study.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72007]

Mr. Meale: The following services have been performed by KPMG for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions:

| Services | 1 May 1997–1 February 1999 | 1 August 1995–30 April 1997 |
|---|---|---|
| Research Consultancy | 404,328.00 | — |
| Specific Consultancy (i.e. Privatisation) | 95,211.65 | — |
| IT Consultancy | — | 45,264.00 |
| General MNGT Consultancy | 192,541.76 | 129,301.00 |
| Total | 692,081.41 | 174,565.00 |

Car Headlights (Migraines)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate reports that car headlights are setting off migraine attacks. [72517]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I can confirm that the possibility of new car headlights setting off migraine attacks is being considered as part of a current research project that the Department is carrying out into glare from headlights.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the effect on migraine sufferers of the use of intense white lights on car headlights. [72518]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has received two representations on this issue. The possibility of new car headlights setting off migraine attacks is being considered as part of a current research project that the Department is carrying out into glare from headlights.

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish all the advice which he has received from the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment since 1 May 1997. [72233]

Mr. Meacher: All the advice which I have received from the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment is published on the statutory public register held in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

The agendas and Minutes of ACRE meetings are also published on the DETR website.

Foreign Goods Vehicles

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions of (a) foreign and (b) EU lorry drivers arose in 1997–98 as a result of the Vehicle Inspectorate's examination of goods vehicles. [69269]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 8 February 1999]: In 1997–98 the Vehicle Inspectorate recorded one prosecution of a driver who gave his place of residence as outside the EU, 5,082 prosecutions of drivers who gave their place of residence as inside the EU and one prosecution of a driver whose place of residence was unknown. The Vehicle Inspectorate's records do not include prosecutions by the police or Procurators Fiscal as a result of Vehicle Inspectorate checks.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70419]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Details regarding asset sales from items listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997 are in the table.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71331]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code makes it clear that Ministers should inform hon. Members in advance of planned visits to their constituencies. Ministers in the Department undertake visits to all parts of the country and records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which the Minister of Transport has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71350]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code makes it clear that Ministers should inform hon. Members in advance of planned visits to their constituencies. Ministers in the Department undertake visits to all parts of the country and records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Documents (Mileage Information)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the compulsory inclusion of mileage information on vehicle documents. [71076]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: We are committed to providing the public with more information about second hand cars and, as part of the initiative to reduce vehicle crime, we are currently considering how best to introduce a scheme for the compulsory inclusion of mileage information on vehicle documents.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71446]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The information is as follows:

In addition to the above agencies, the DETR has responsibility for 47 non departmental public bodies on whose behalf the Department issues a small number of press releases each year. To provide the information requested for each NDPB individually from the totals issued by DETR since its formation in May 1997, and prior to that from the totals issued by the former Department of the Environment and Department of Transport would be disproportionately costly.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71461]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Rules governing the work of the GICS are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Libraries of the House.

Press releases are principally issued on my Department's behalf via the Central Office of Information's News Distribution Service. The cost of this service for DETR for the period in question was £111.8k. Figures for DETR staff and postage costs specifically in relation to the issue of press releases are not available.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council (Cash Limits)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the President of the Council what changes she intends to make to the 1998–99 cash and running cost limits for the Privy Council. [72366]

Mrs. Beckett: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XVIII, Vote 3 will be increased by £157,000 from £2,887,000 to £3,044,000 and the gross running costs limit will be increased by £157,000 from £2,360,000 to £2,517,000.

The increase in the cash and running cost limits reflects the transfer to the Department of responsibility for minor occupier charges, together with the cost of establishing an office and support for my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on his appointment as Parliamentary Secretary, Privy Council Office.

The increase in minor occupier charges will be offset by a transfer of £87,000 from Cabinet Office Class XVIII, Vote 1, and savings elsewhere within Class XVIII; and the remainder will be a charge to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Genetically Modified Plants

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Council when the then Select Committee on European Legislation reported on proposals from the European Commission to regulate the growing of genetically modified plants for research and sale, when such proposals were considered in Standing Committee and on the Floor of the House; and what resolutions were passed. [72180]

Mrs. Beckett: The European Commission adopted a proposal in February 1998 to amend Council Directive 90/220/EEC. This Directive establishes a system of controls which require prior consent from a Member State competent authority or any research and development release of genetically modified organisms (GMOs). Approval at Community level is required before any product containing GMOs may be placed on the Community market. The proposed amendment, which is contained in EC document 6378/98, COM(98)85 final, is currently under negotiation. The Government submitted an explanatory memorandum on the proposal on 23 March 1998 which was considered by the then Select Committee on European Legislation on 29 April 1998. The Committee reported that the proposal raised issues of political importance but requested further information from the Government and did not clear it from scrutiny (26th report, 97–98, HC 155-xxv1). The Committee subsequently reconsidered the proposal on 9 December 1998 on the basis of further information provided by the Government in a letter of 27 November 1998 from my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment. The Committee maintained that the proposal raised issues of political importance and recommended that it should be debated in European Standing Committee A (3rd report, 98–99 HC 34-iii). That debate has yet to take place but will be held in good time before any decisions are taken on the proposed amendments by the Council of Ministers. An adjournment debate on the effect of Directive 90/220/EEC was held on 16 December 1998, Official Report, columns 927–33, by my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson).

TREASURY

Smuggling (Tobacco and Alcohol)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of confiscated smuggled or bootlegged (a) tobacco and its products and (b) alcohol in each year since 1994. [70017]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that figures on the value of confiscated smuggled tobacco and alcohol products are not available.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals who were caught smuggling alcohol and tobacco (a) were given a final warning, (b) received a caution, (c) received a conviction and fine and (d) were imprisoned in each of the last three years. [70817]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 February 1999]: I regret that central records are not kept in this format.

Fines (Income)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the agreed Treasury criteria for income from certain fines to be used to meet some of the costs of those engaged in the enforcement and prosecution of offenders. [70231]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report (Command 3978) announced that Departments would keep more of their receipts, including from fines, where this would further the Government's economic objectives, improve efficiency and not prejudice spending plans and priorities. Further details on the criteria are set out in a technical Treasury paper (PES(98)7(Revise)) which was circulated to Departments on 31 July 1998. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70771]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 569–70.

Arms Embargoes

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the United Kingdom companies currently under investigation by Customs and Excise for alleged breaches of (a) United Kingdom, (b) European Union and (c) mandatory UN arms embargoes. [71049]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not the normal practice of the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to comment publicly about the existence or nature of any current investigations.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many United Kingdom companies have been found guilty of breaching (a) United Kingdom and (b) mandatory UN arms embargoes in the periods (i) January 1996 to January 1997, (ii) January 1997 to January 1998 and (iii) January 1998 to January 1999. [71051]

Dawn Primarolo: No United Kingdom companies were found guilty of breaching United Kingdom or mandatory UN arms embargoes during the periods in question. Three individuals have been found guilty in connection with the activities of UK companies, two in 1996 in relation to a destination subject to a United Kingdom arms embargo and one in 1998 in relation to a destination subject to a European Union arms embargo.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Mr. Benton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the contribution which the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries initiative will make towards the achievement of the OECD target of halving world poverty by 2015. [71308]

Ms Hewitt: Debt relief is one of the means by which the Chancellor hopes to meet the OECD target of halving world poverty by 2015. Data on the exact contribution which the HIPC initiative will make towards achieving the target are not currently available.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 568, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71015]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: There was no expenditure for the categories required which was not included in the earlier answer.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1998, Official Report, column 568, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71014]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: There was no expenditure relating to work carried our for HM Treasury by the bodies listed for the categories required which was not included in the earlier answer.

Travel Insurance

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people affected by the extension of insurance premium tax to travel insurance announced in the 1998 Budget. [70690]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: None. Insurance Premium Tax has always applied to travel insurance.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to announce changes in the Vehicle Excise Duty system for cars; and if he will make a statement. [71079]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: A consultation paper setting out the options for reforming vehicle excise duty was published on 3 November 1998. The formal consultation ended on 31 January 1999 and all responses are now being considered. An announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many substantive responses he has received to the Vehicle Excise Duty consultation paper. [71080]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The total number of responses received to 5 February is over 2,200.

Foreign Earnings Deduction

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) businesses and (b) individuals are affected by the abolition of the foreign earnings deduction announced in the 1998 Budget; and in each case, if he will estimate the average annual cost. [70654]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: There is no information available on the number of businesses that employ people who were affected by the abolition of the foreign earnings deduction.

All UK taxpayers are affected by the abolition of the foreign earnings deduction. The closing of this loophole means that ordinary taxpayers no longer have to make good the shortfall created by a minority of UK residents being able to escape tax on their income. The estimated number of employees who have lost the advantage they previously enjoyed as a result of the foreign earnings deduction is about 20,000. All those affected are simply put on an equal footing with other UK residents.

Property Purchases

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many purchases of (a) private dwellings and (b) business premises in excess of £250,000 were made in 1998. [70691]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: It is provisionally estimated that there were about 40,000 residential transactions and about 20,000 commercial and land transactions in excess of £250,000 in 1998, out of a total of 1.5 million property transactions.

Pensions

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of (a) personal pension plans and (b) occupational pension schemes which will be affected by the abolition of ACT credits. [70684]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Most pension providers receive dividends from UK companies. To remove a distortion, which encouraged payment of dividends rather than retention of profits for investment, payable tax credits on those dividends were abolished in July 1997.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of people who (a) were originally mis-sold personal pensions and (b) had reached a satisfactory settlement in respect of their pension entitlement (i) by 1 May 1997 and (ii) at the latest available date. [71557]

Ms Hewitt: The number of people mis-sold personal pensions will not be known until the review is completed. The priority review identified a population of approximately 685,000. At 1 May 1997, the regulators' published figures showed about 15 per cent. of these case reviews had been completed. The latest figures for 30 November 1998 showed 91 per cent. of priority reviews completed.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of businesses which will be affected by the introduction of quarterly payments of corporation tax; and what will be the average cost per business. [70652]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The introduction of quarterly payments of corporation tax will affect some 20,000 companies. This measure was part of a package of measures introduced in the 1998 Budget which included the abolition of Advanced Corporation Tax (ACT) and a 1 per cent. cut in the main rate of corporation tax from April 1999. After a four year transition period, the effect for these companies of introducing quarterly payments, abolishing ACT and the 1 per cent. rate cut is likely on average to be a reduction in liability.

Business Costs

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the number of businesses which will be affected by the 1998 Budget announcement of withdrawal of cash basis for professional businesses and (b) the average cost per business. [70653]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Inland Revenue has no central record of which businesses are on the cash basis, and no estimate of the total number of such businesses. It is therefore not possible to estimate an average cost per business.

Fiscal Measures

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many businesses were affected by the 1997 Budget announcement which prohibited the (a) transfer of unused past allowances and (b) acceleration of capital allowances; and if he will estimate the average cost to each affected business; [70685]

(2) how many businesses were affected by the 1997 Budget announcement that dividends will be taxed as trading profits; and if he will estimate the average cost per business; [70686]

(3) how many businesses were affected by the 1997 Budget announcement which blocked company purchase schemes; and if he will estimate the average cost to each affected business; [70699]

(4) what estimate he has made of the number of businesses which will be affected by the change in rules on (a) capital gain buying and (b) controlled foreign companies which were announced in the 1998 Budget; and what will be the average cost per business. [70687]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: In respect of all but the 1998 changes obliging companies to include amounts chargeable under the controlled foreign company (CFC) rules in their self assessment tax returns the measures referred to are aimed at stemming the loss of tax through avoidance devices and possibly outright evasion, rather than being tax raising. The relevant tax yields in the respective Budget Reports reflect the direct effects of the measures within the existing level of activity. The measures protect the Exchequer against greater losses in the future. Accurate estimates of the number of businesses affected directly at the time action was taken, or who might in future have been involved if action had not been taken, are not available.

In respect of the CFC change relating to self assessment, it is estimated that 1,500 groups will be affected by the new legislation and that the total compliance cost will be under £10 million in the first year. Recurrent costs will be considerably less than initial costs. The change is estimated to raise £50 million in a full year.

Biofuel Industry

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Government policy on the proposed EU Energy Products Directive as it affects the biofuel industry. [71397]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's position on the Energy Products Directive is that we favour some aspects of the proposal, such as higher minimum rates of tax on road fuels. However, we could not accept, for social policy reasons, any obligation to impose new taxes on domestic fuel and power. Our attitude to new taxes on business use of energy will depend on the decisions we take in the light of Lord Marshall's report on 'Economic Instruments and the Business Use of Energy', which was published on 3 November 1998.

Under the terms of the draft Directive, Member States may introduce optional exemptions from tax or reduced rates for certain types of energy product and to products put to particular uses. This applies to energy products used in pilot projects for the development of more environmentally friendly products, or in relation to fuels from renewable sources of energy such as solar, wind and geothermal power and biofuels.

Private Capital Inflows

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide data for each of the last 20 years on non-foreign direct involvement private capital inflows into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on their quantifiable effect on the balance of payments. [71812]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 22 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on non-FDI private capital inflows into the UK.

Estimates for non-FDI private capital inflows into the United Kingdom can be derived from the 1998 edition of "United Kingdom Balance of Payments: The Pink Book". The data in the Pink Book are available on the ONS database, which can be accessed by the Library. Capital inflows form part of the Financial Account within the Balance of Payments.

Arms Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate reports that two British companies have transported arms in breach of UN embargoes on arms exports to Sierra Leone and the Congo. [71566]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The investigation and prosecution of any alleged breaches of UK legislation implementing UN arms embargoes is a matter for the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. Anyone in possession of information which might suggest offences have been committed should make the material available to them.

Smuggling

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances Customs and Excise are permitted to make a private arrangement with an individual caught smuggling rather than pursuing the full legal process. [70816]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Under section 152(a) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 the Commissioners may "compound" any proceedings for an offence under the Customs and Excise Acts i.e. accept a monetary penalty in lieu of prosecution. The decision whether to prosecute or compound proceedings is taken on the merits of each case. Offers to compound are made only if there is sufficient evidence to support criminal proceedings. Where an offer to compound is refused it is the policy of the Commissioners to prosecute for the alleged offence.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70037]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The remuneration paid to London barristers and solicitors by this Department is not collated or held centrally, and the information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Phillip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the Government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operate between lawyer and client.

Employment Policy (Business Costs)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact on business costs (a) the minimum wage, (b) the Working Time Regulations and (c) the Fairness at Work White Paper proposals have had to date; and what estimate he has made of the annual impact when fully implemented. [69816]

Mr. Byers: Regulatory impact assessments have been published for each of these measures and are available in the Library of the House.

Deep-mined Coal

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the change in deep mined coal output in (a) the last quarter and (b) the last year; and how many pits closed in each time period. [69813]

Mr. Byers: Deep mined output in quarter 4 1998 compared with quarter 4 1997 has decreased by 0.8 million tonnes. This compares to a decrease of 3.6 million tonnes in quarter 4 1994 compared to quarter 4 1993.

Deep mined output in calendar year 1998 compared with calendar year 1997 has decreased by 5 million tonnes. This compares to a decrease of 18.5 million tonnes between calendar year 1993 and 1994.

One major pit and four smaller pits closed in quarter 4 1998 and six small pits closed during the first three quarters of the year.

Export Licences

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licence applications his Department has received in each of the last three years for (a) Iran and (b) other countries. [70063]

Dr. Howells: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 January 1996 and 31 December 1998, 37,478 applications for Standard Individual Export Licences were received.

Number of applications for Standard Individual Export Licences received in each calendar year covering exports (a) to Iran or (b) to any other destination (enduser).

| Year | Iran | All other destinations |
|---|---|---|
| 1996 | 146 | 13,382 |
| 1998 | 164 | 12,025 |

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by the former Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) routinely cover exports to a number of countries (unlike Standard Individual Export Licences, each of which normally covers exports to a single country). Any country initially specified on an OIEL application but not included as a permitted destination on the licence issued is not recorded on the Export Control Organisation's computer databases. Accordingly, as regards OIELs, the information requested could be compiled only by manual examination of the paper records of all 1,515 applications made in the period, which would entail disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average length of time taken by his Department to issue export licences; if he will estimate the impact on the value of export orders of the length of time taken; and what representations he has received from exporters. [70759]

Dr. Howells: From time to time, exporters and representative bodies express concern about the time taken to process specific applications or generally. All such cases are carefully investigated and replied to.

The average length of time taken to process individual export licence applications is not recorded. However, performance is monitored against published targets, which were set out to the hon. Member in my answer of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 404. Data on performance will be included in the forthcoming Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, and in future reports.

The sensitive issues raised by many applications mean that it is not possible to guarantee that the decision on a particular application can be taken by a specific date. However, the Export Control Organisation does aim wherever possible to give exporters a reasonable indication of the additional time that the processing of their applications is likely to take.

As recognised by the Trade and Industry Committee in its recent report on strategic export controls, the overall performance of the Government's export licensing system depends on contributions from all of the Departments involved. The Government have already taken steps to improve the information provided to exporters on the status of pending licence applications. Within DTI, the Export Control Organisation has in place both formal and informal procedures to encourage the timely provision of advice on urgent or exceptionally delayed applications; in addition, as appropriate, exporters may be put in direct contact with relevant advisers in other Departments.

Finally, the introduction of the ELATE computer system on 1 March should, among other advantages, improve the exchange of licensing information between Departments and is intended to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of the licensing process.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to accept applications for export licences by means of telephone and e-mail. [70758]

Dr. Howells: As the processing of applications for export licences cannot be completed without relevant supporting documentation, and applications need formally to be signed by specifically designated persons it would be impractical for them to be made by telephone.

The introduction of a new export licence application form and the ELATE computer system on 1 March 1999 is a first step in the process towards the use of electronic data in export licence processing. For the first time, exporters will be able to apply for a standard individual export licence using electronic information transferred on a floppy disk. The information on the disk will be entered into the ELATE system at the DTI and, where applications have to be circulated to the FCO or MoD for advice, the electronic information will be transferred to them via a modem link or on disk. Additional supporting documentation, such as end-user documentation and technical specifications will still be required in paper form.

Once the effectiveness of ELATE has been proven, the aim will be to extend the transfer of information by disk or modem link to all advisory departments involved in export licence consideration. The Government will work towards full electronic applications where the end-user documentation and technical specifications can be transferred together with the application by electronic mail subject to satisfactory assessment of security and other relevant considerations.

Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the oral answer to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 1007, if he will list each company with which the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry has been associated, indicating the dates upon which their annual returns were filed in each year of the company's existence. [70129]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 10 February 1999]: As my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House made clear on 4 February 1999, Official Report, columns 1091–92, my oral answer to the right hon. Member for Wokingham referred to Attractions Limited. The annual return for Attractions Limited in 1997 was filed on 1 November in compliance with the deadlines set by Companies House. It was returned by Companies House on 5 November for completion of the SIC code and it was registered on 13 November 1997. The annual return for Attractions Limited in 1998 was sent to Companies House on 21 October 1998. It was lost in transit. Companies House sent a reminder on 10 December, setting a deadline of 10 January 1999. A new return for Attractions Limited was received by Companies House on 8 January 1999.

Travel Industry

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about takeovers and regional integration in the travel industry; and if he will make a statement. [70921]

Dr. Howells: I have received a limited number of representations about takeovers in the travel industry.

The Director General of Fair Trading advises on mergers which qualify for investigation under the Fair Trading Act 1973. Where a merger raises concerns in respect of a particular market—whether throughout the whole of the United Kingdom or in a particular region—it can be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) for investigation.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70781]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 569–70. No Department of Trade and Industry civil servants have had their pensions removed or reduced for disciplinary reasons in the last five years.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70413]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The information requested by the hon. Member is not available in the form requested.

Cigarette Lighters

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment he has made of the assistance which the introduction of a requirement for cigarette lighters to bear the identity of the manufacturer or importer would provide to the work of trading standards officers; and if he will make a statement; [70804]

(2) what representations he has received from (a) trading standards officers and (b) the BSI on introducing a requirement for the identity of the manufacturer or importer to be marked on each cigarette lighter; and if he will make a statement. [70790]

Dr. Howells: Apart from the recent correspondence from my hon. Friend and concerns raised by European lighter manufacturers about imported lighters, I have not received any recent representations from trading standards officers or the British Standards Institution about introducing a requirement for the identity of the manufacturer or importer to be marked on cigarette lighters. However, a requirement to provide for such traceability will be included in the revised European and international standard for lighters (BS EN ISO 9994). I believe that this requirement will help enforcement, although I have not made a formal assessment of this.

Fireworks

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the number of people injured by fireworks in 1998; and if he will make a statement. [71065]

Dr. Howells: DTI is still collating the firework injury data and I do not believe that we should speculate when we are so close to having the final figures. I expect the detailed statistics to be available shortly and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as they have been verified.

Foreign Inward Investment

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide data on foreign direct investment in the United Kingdom for each of the last 20 years, broken down into, (a) the stocks and flows of inward investment for each year, (b) the percentage of foreign direct investment in mergers and acquisitions for each year, (c) the percentage of the labour force employed in foreign direct investment for each year, (d) the contribution of foreign direct investment to United Kingdom tax revenues for each year, (e) the total subsidies given to foreign investors for each year and (f) the total royalties paid to abroad by the United Kingdom on foreign direct investment for each year. [71561]

Mr. Wills: Available information is given in the tables. No official data are collected for tax revenues from foreign enterprises or total royalties paid to abroad by the UK on FDI.

(a) Table 1 shows the stocks and flows of foreign direct investment into the UK each year from 1978 until 1997, the latest year available. FDI covers not only the acquisition of fixed assets, stock building and stock appreciation but all other financial transactions, such as additions to, or payments of, working capital, other loans and credit, and acquisitions of securities. The figures cover transactions where the investor's purpose is to have an effective voice in the company, taken to be equivalent to a holding of 20 per cent. or more (10 per cent. in the 1997 figures). Stock figures are recorded at the end of the stated period. They are not cumulative totals of investment flows, but also take account of goodwill write-offs, revaluation of assets and exchange rate fluctuations.

(b) Table 2 shows the percentage of FDI flows into the UK represented by mergers and acquisitions of companies. The value of acquisitions is the sum of the value of transactions where the foreign business takes their percentage share of the relevant UK target to over 50 per cent. Figures are available only from 1986.

(c) Figures for the percentage of the labour force employed in foreign enterprises are available only for the manufacturing sector. This sector represents between 20 and 25 per cent. of total employees over the years shown. Comparable figures are not available for earlier years. In Table 3 foreign enterprises are defined as those controlled by companies incorporated overseas; this is different from the definition used in Table 1, where figures include all transactions where the investor's purpose is to have an effective voice in the company, taken to be equivalent to a holding of 20 per cent. or more.

Dormant Companies

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes have been made to the CHN21, Dormant Company Accounts booklet to ensure that directors of dormant companies are made aware of the DCA forms. [71136]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 15 February 1999]: A new version of CHN 21 is currently being printed. It makes reference to the availability of a form DCA for dormant companies that have not traded since incorporation. This is not a statutorily prescribed form. It is offered as a helpful aid for dormant companies and its use is entirely optional.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what publicity has been arranged for the Dormant Company Accounts form relating to the submission of annual accounts by dormant companies. [71135]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The availability of the Dormant Company Accounts form was communicated via the Companies House Magazine for customers, "The Register". This is widely read by professional presenters, who submit accounts to the Agency on behalf of companies. It has also been publicised via Companies House User Groups and at their Road Shows. Companies House cannot readily target individual dormant company directors. The Companies House publicity budget does not allow it to do more than publicise the most important issues in national media and mail drops.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70458]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The Department has 46 per cent. of its staff located outside London. This includes the Patent Office and Companies House, which relocated from London to Wales, a strong presence in the Government Offices for the Regions and the regional networks of the Insolvency Service, Employment Tribunals Service and Radiocommunications Agency. There has been no major decentralisation in recent years. The scope for further relocation is limited by operational requirements.

GATT

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the benefits to the United Kingdom economy in (a) output and (b) jobs of the Uruguay round of trade and investment talks. [71757]

Mr. Wilson: In 1994, the GATT secretariat estimated that, by the year 2005, the Uruguay Round Agreement could boost world incomes by up to 1.4 per cent. per annum and European Union incomes by up to 1.7 per cent. per annum.

No reliable estimates have been made of the output or employment benefits of the Agreement to the UK alone. However, as the second largest trader with non-EU economies among EU Member States, the UK is likely to be a major beneficiary of these projected income gains.

Precious Metals Directive

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the draft Precious Metals Directive to be discussed next by EU ministers. [71370]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The draft directive is under consideration at Council Working Group level and is unlikely to be discussed by Ministers unless a greater degree of consensus can be reached. I have had no indication as to whether Germany intends to convene meetings of the Council Working Group to consider the proposal during her Presidency.

Venture Capital

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning competition between financial intermediaries to which small businesses can apply for venture capital; and if he will make a statement. [71527]

Mr. Wills: I am not aware of any representations concerning competition between financial intermediaries to which small businesses can apply for venture capital.

I am aware that growing businesses have faced difficulties in raising venture capital in small amounts. We therefore announced, in the Competitiveness White Paper (Cmd 4176), the creation of the Enterprise Fund. One of the functions of this Fund will be to stimulate the availability of venture capital for smaller businesses.

We are also working with the key players in the informal investment or "business angel" markets to stimulate the availability of venture capital from individual investors.

Hallmarks

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many copies of "New Hallmarks", a consumer guide, have been printed; and by what means it is being distributed. [71364]

Dr. Howells: One million copies have been printed. The Assay offices are sending copies to their entire client base and DTI is also asking the principal retail trade associations to make their members aware of the leaflet. Individual retailers will then be able to order copies free of charge to be displayed at the point of sale. Further copies are being made available to Citizens Advice Bureaux, Consumer Advice Centres and public libraries.

Businesses (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses in the Barnsley MBC area are registered at Companies House, and how many of these businesses have fewer than 20 employees. [71141]

Dr. Howells: There are 242 companies registered at Companies House in Barnsley (S71) area. Companies House has no information on how many of these have fewer than 20 employees.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses in the Doncaster MBC area are registered at Companies House; and how many of these businesses have fewer than 20 employees. [71140]

Dr. Howells: There are 598 companies registered at Companies House in the Doncaster DN1 area. Companies House has no information on how many of these have fewer than 20 employees.

British Aerospace

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his predecessor, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), met as Secretary of State (a) the Chairman and (b) the Chief Executive of British Aerospace plc during 1998; and what subjects were discussed on each occasion. [70651]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on 3 December 1998, Official Report, column 291. These described all his meetings as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry with British Aerospace in 1998 up to that date.

Subsequently, my right hon. Friend also met the Chairman and Chief Executive of British Aerospace on 15 December at a reception to mark the twenty-first anniversary of the creation of that company. DTI officials were also present.

Manufacturing Best Practice

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he plans to introduce to encourage UK manufacturing companies to adopt the best practice techniques of their international competitors. [71644]

Mr. Battle: There is a wide variety of existing measures available to manufacturing companies to learn from and adopt the best practice of their international competitors. New measures include the CBI-led "Fit for the Future" Campaign, launched by the Secretary of State in December 1998 and featured in the recently published Competitiveness White Paper. The Campaign will provide an umbrella to enable business to get help and advice when and where is it needed. The Campaign is business led and is supported by the Department to ensure coverage of all sectors and sizes of industry.

The White Paper announced other measures designed to increase competitiveness through the process of "Business learning from Business". Two examples are the adaptation of the successful automotive sector project where "world-class" engineers work within the supply base to make significant improvements in manufacturing practice. The Department will be investing £15 million to support projects in up to 10 new sectors. A further example is the Department's work to gather international data based to the UK Benchmarking Index. This development will enable SMEs to compare their own business performance with peer groups in the UK and world-wide.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71349]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Paragraph 79 of the Ministerial Code makes clear that Ministers should inform hon. Members in advance of planned visits to their constituencies. I and my Ministers undertake visits to all parts of the country but records of official visits are not held on a constituency basis.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71470]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Rules governing the work of the GICS are laid down in the Guidance on the Work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House.

Since April 1997 my department has spent £399,000 on distributing press releases through the Central Office of Information's News Distribution Service.

Airline Industry

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the liberalisation of the airline industry and on the potential exploitation of monopoly positions at certain British airports. [71656]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The liberalisation of the airline industry is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. My Department has received a number of representations in relation to competition cases involving airlines.

City Flyer Express

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received over the take-over of City Flyer Express by British Airways; and if he will make a statement. [71655]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 February 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has received a number of representations on the proposed acquisition by British Airways plc of City Flyer Express Ltd. He announced on 20 January that, in accordance with the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading, he had referred the merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The MMC are to make their report by 28 April 1999.

BNFL

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what studies his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) funded on the technical feasibility of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. conditioning German spent nuclear fuel and German nuclear waste currently held at Sellafield for final disposal in Germany; and what studies have been undertaken into the commercial opportunities for the company in Germany for undertaking such conditioning; [71919]

(2) what discussion he has had with British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. on the conditioning of German spent fuel and German waste currently held at Sellafield for final disposal in Germany; and if he will make a statement. [71916]

Mr. Battle: None. Subject to meeting relevant safety, security and international safeguard requirements, it is for the owners of spent nuclear fuel to choose whether to reprocess it or whether to seek alternative management options. The contracts now in place between BNFL and German electricity utilities are for reprocessing spent nuclear fuel. Since 1976 all new contracts for reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for return of wastes. The government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes arising from reprocessing be returned to the country of origin. Arrangements for the return of wastes are a commercial matter between BNFL and its overseas customers, subject to meeting relevant regulatory requirements.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the German Government on final disposal in Germany of German spent fuel and German nuclear waste that is currently held at Sellafield by BNFL. [71917]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 453–54.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the KPMG report on British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. [72591]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 455.

Small Businesses (New Jobs)

Mr. Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many new jobs he expects will be created by small businesses over the next 12 months. [72298]

Mr. Wills: The Department of Trade and Industry does not produce forecasts of the number of jobs created by small businesses. Previous studies have shown that small businesses (those with under 50 employees) are responsible for six out of every ten new jobs created in the UK.

Written Answers

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many parliamentary questions for written answer have been tabled to his Department in each session since May 1997; and how many have not been answered on grounds of disproportionate cost. [71933]

Mr. Byers: In the 1997–98 session, my Department gave written answers to 4,146 questions, of which 18 could not be answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost.

So far in this session, 692 questions have been given written answers, with 3 not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost.

Plutonium Shipments (Japan)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 451, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew), 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 364–65, if he will set out what proportion of the costs for physical protection of transporting plutonium fuels will be borne by Japan and the United Kingdom respectively; and if he will indicate what proportion of the United Kingdom's costs will be borne by the public purse. [72608]

Mr. Battle: All the capital costs incurred by BNFL in undertaking contracts for transporting MOX fuel from Europe to Japan, including the costs of ensuring the physical protection of the shipment, would be reflected in the value of the contracts between BNFL and its customers.

Film Industry

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the Working Time Directive on the film industry. [71744]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There was no specific assessment of the impact of the Working Time Directive on the film industry. An assessment for the whole of British industry was made, a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Payment Cards

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the post offices that have been automated to take payment cards under the BA PoCL scheme. [72023]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office have provided a list of the 204 post offices in the North East and South-West of England that have been automated and are paying Child Benefit by Payment Card as part of a limited trial. A copy of the list has been placed in the library of the House.

London First

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many civil servants have been seconded from his Department to (a) London First and (b) London First Centre since 1992; and for what purposes. [72166]

Mr. Wills: There have been three members of DTI staff out on secondment to London First Centre at different times since 1992: the first, for six months, on Inward Investment work during the initial months of the London Investment Agency; the second, for two years, as a Project Manager, co-ordinating the Inward Investment Programme by promoting London as a location of excellence to overseas investors; and the third, for two years, as Business Development Manager, particularly identifying Inward Investment from North America.

Inward Investment (Wales)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the inward investments to Wales since 1992 to which the Invest in Britain Bureau contributed. [72295]

Mr. Wills: Between the years 1992 and 1998 my Departments Invest in Britain Bureau were significantly involved in 18 projects into Wales. The following list includes only those projects where the company has not requested commercial confidentiality and is based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest in the UK—it takes no account of subsequent developments.

| Company Name | Project Nature | Date of announcement |
|---|---|---|
| Acer Peripherals | Computer monitors | 18 December 1997 |
| Almedica | Clinical contract packaging | 1 February 1995 |
| Halla Euro Enterprise | Excavators and fork lifts | 1 February 1996 |
| I G Electromes | Monitor assembly | 1 July 1996 |
| I G Semiconductors | Semiconductor fabrication | 1 July 1996 |
| Robertson Associates | Can ends for beverage industry | 1 December 1992 |
| Schulman Plastics | Plastics | 1 April 1992 |
| Showa Corporation | Suspension and steering systems | 23 August 1996 |
| Unites States Can Co | Aerosol cans | 20 September 1996 |

Au Pairs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the application of the national minimum wage to au pairs. [71970]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The draft National Minimum Wage Regulations, which were laid before Parliament on 16 February, provide an exemption from the provisions of the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 for work carried out, where the worker is living as a member of the employer's family. Overseas nationals in the UK under the Au Pair scheme, who undertake light household work and various childcare duties, and are treated as members of the host families, clearly fall within this category.

Where au pairs, or any other worker, live in their employer's household and do not fully enjoy such benefits, the national minimum wage will still apply.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to issue guidance to those employing au pairs on the implications of the national minimum wage. [71971]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Detailed guidance on the application of the national minimum wage will be published shortly along with leaflets for employers and workers. It will be widely publicised and available from the helpline number—0845 8450 360.

World Trade Organisation

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the position of Her Majesty's Government following the joint statement by the European Commission and Japan calling for investment to be included in the Millennium Round of WTO negotiations. [72043]

Mr. Wilson: It is also the long-established position of the UK Government that investment should be included in any future Round of negotiations in the WTO.

European Commission

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the membership of the Article 113 Committee of Directorate-General I of the European Commission. [72042]

Mr. Wilson: The Article 113 Committee is an organ of the Council, not the Commission. It meets monthly at Full Member level, weekly at Deputy level, and on an ad-hoc basis at expert level. Each EU Member State is represented on the Committee as is the European Commission. Secretariat services are provided by the Council Secretariat.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement clarifying the (a) status and (b) decision-making process of Article 113 Committee of Directorate-General I of the European Commission. [72054]

Mr. Wilson: The Article 113 Committee is an organ of the Council of the EU. The Commission is required to conduct the Common Commercial Policy, in particular in negotiations with third countries and international organisations, in consultation with the Committee. It does not have a formal decision-making role.

Postal Charges

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 662, concerning postal charges, what representations he has received concerning the financial effects of the charges on the publishers of periodicals. [72596]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend and I have received representations from a number of individual companies and from the Periodical Publishers Association on the effects of the proposed changes to postal tariffs on the publishers of periodicals, which we have carefully noted. Changes to postal tariffs are primarily a matter for the Post Office in consultation with the Post Office Users' National Council.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if an internationally agreed standard for year 2000 compliance for computer systems has been agreed and published; and if he will make a statement. [72157]

Mr. Wills: I understand that a draft international standard ISO/IEC/16509 has been circulated by the International Organisation for Standardisation (ISO) and International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) for balloting within their member bodies. National standards bodies have been asked to reply by 12 March 1999. The British Standards Institution (BSI) is presently formulating the United Kingdom response to the document.

Tobacco

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the development of global rules for tobacco marketing and on the resources he plans to commit to developing such rules. [70760]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Ms Osborne) on 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 456.

European Directives

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the simpler legislation for the Internal Market Initiative applies to single market legislation which does not take the form of European Community directives, and what measures exist to simplify legislation currently in force outside of the single market field. [72531]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have been asked to reply.

Apart from EC Directives, the Simpler Legislation for the Internal Market (SLIM) initiative also covers EC Regulations—the other type of generally-applicable legally-binding EC instrument– in the Single Market field.

A Community simplification initiative that goes wider than the Single Market field is the work by the European Commission, European Parliament and Council of Ministers on codification of existing EC legislation. By providing official consolidated texts of legislative acts and their amendments it makes EC legislation more accessible and provides greater legal certainty. It covers all areas of EC legislation and has for example already been applied to legislation in the fields of agriculture, fisheries and social policy in addition to Single Market legislation.

St. Kilda

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has responded to the request from the UN for an explanation of the licensing of oil developments around St. Kilda; and if he will make a statement. [70868]

Mr. Macdonald: I have been asked to reply.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) has asked that we respond to the request by 15 April and we shall comply with that timetable.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown for (i) persistent young offenders and (ii) all young offenders, for each of the past three years, of the time taken from (a) arrest to charge, (b) charge to first appearance, (c) first appearance to start of trial, (d) start of trial to verdict and (e) verdict to sentence. [70620]

Mr. Boateng: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders appeared before youth courts and were convicted for the first time in the most recent year for which figures are available. [71086]

Mr. Boateng: The most recent estimate of the number of first time young offenders found guilty in magistrates' courts (both youth and adult magistrates' courts) sets the figure at around 37,000 in 1996. This figure rises to approximately 38,900 if cases heard in the Crown Court are included.

Criminal Record Certificates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the Active Community Unit to investigate the effect of the cost of criminal record certificates on the voluntary sector; and if he will make a statement. [71864]

Mr. Boateng: The Criminal Records Bureau is being established to enable checks to be carried out to help prevent unsuitable people from working with children or vulnerable adults. Costs will be kept to a minimum and the highest form of certificate should cost around £10 for those volunteers having substantial, largely unsupervised access to children or vulnerable adults.

Not all volunteers will require a certificate, and a certificate will not obviate the need for voluntary organisations to carry out their own checks and references as part of normal recruitment procedures. However, the over-riding consideration at all times must be the protection of the vulnerable, and the service to be provided by the Criminal Records Bureau will help to achieve this. We do not believe that volunteering will diminish with the introduction of these checks.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the categories of people he plans to exempt from charges for applications for (a) criminal conviction certificates and (b) criminal record certificates; and if he will make a statement. [71863]

Mr. Boateng: All applicants will have to pay for certificates from the Criminal Records Bureau. We considered very carefully whether there was any way in which free checks could be provided for any groups, especially volunteers. We have concluded that it will not be practicable to provide any free checks from the Criminal Records Bureau. We realise that this is unwelcome news but providing free checks would prove an unsustainable burden on the public purse and may increase demand for certificates from the Bureau to an uncontrollable extent. In addition, we do not consider it would be fair to allow one or two groups to have free certificates when there are other equally deserving groups.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the number of (1) new instructions and (2) disposals in (a) asylum and (b) immigration appeals undertaken by (i) the Immigration Advisory Service and (ii) the Refugee Legal Centre for 1997-98 and the number of appeals in both categories disposed of by the Immigration Appellate Authority in the same period together with the unit cost in both categories. [70755]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is shown in the table.

It should be noted that the figures for the Refugee Legal Centre and the Immigration Advisory Service are based on outcomes (those cases in which the appeal may or may not have finally been disposed). The cases dealt with by the Refugee Legal Centre based on outputs is 8,154. The Immigration Advisory Service do not have any comparable statistical information on outputs.

| 1997-98 | New instructions | | Appeals disposed of | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Asylum | Immigration | Asylum | Immigration | Unit cost (£) |
| Refugee Legal Centre | 6,123 | | 4,454 | | 796.38 |
| Immigration Advisory Service | 3,020 | 4,667 | 1,279 | 3,536 | 640.89 |
| Immigration Appellate Authority | | | 18,600 | 11,200 | |

Both rounded to the nearest 00.
Overall unit cost for asylum and immigration cases. Immigration cases may be more easily dealt with, which may affect the overall figure. Refugee Legal Centre normally deal with more complex asylum claims.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons claimed asylum (a) at the port of entry and (b) at his Department in each of the years 1993 to 1998, broken down by (i) successful application, (ii) unsuccessful application and (iii) application as yet undecided. [70731]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This information is not available at present but I hope to receive it shortly. I will then write to my hon. Friend.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time (a) European Union nationals and (b) non-European Union nationals who have not applied for asylum have spent on temporary admission in each year from 1993 to the latest date for which figures are available. [70747]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information is available only for non-European Union nationals granted temporary admission at the 12 largest ports in 1998 whose case has been resolved. Such persons, excluding those who applied for asylum, spent an average of 11 days on temporary admission.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time between lodging an out-of-country appeal against refusal of entry and removal from the UK and the date of hearing of the appeal in (a) asylum and (b) non-asylum cases, for those (i) removed on the latest convenient date and (ii) who had appeal hearings on the latest convenient date. [70746]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The average length of time between the lodging of an out-of-country non-asylum appeal and the date of the appeal hearing date is 366 days. This information relates to data extracted on 15 February 1999, and covers the 12 largest ports (Heathrow (4 terminals), Gatwick (2 terminals), Manchester (2 terminals), Dover East, Harwich, Stansted and Waterloo.)

There are very few out-of-country asylum appeals recorded and, therefore, information on average times for these cases may not be representative.

Police Contingency Reserves

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the level of police contingency reserves in each police force on the last date for which figures are available; what is the level of reserves which the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy recommends police forces should hold; and if he will make a statement. [71925]

Mr. Boateng: The level of unallocated balances held by each police authority at 31 March 1998 is shown in the table. In addition, police authorities hold earmarked reserves in respect of provisions, including pensions, insurances, and capital projects.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) has recently re-issued to police authorities advice in determining the appropriate level of reserves and balances. CIPFA recommends that the level of balances for a Police Authority should be around 2 per cent. to 5 per cent., depending on local circumstances.

Prisoners

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of hours per day that prisoners were locked in their cells in each of the last three years, in each (a) Prison Service establishment, (b) privately managed prison and (c) in total; and if he will make a statement. [71924]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the average number of hours per weekday that prisoners were locked in their cells for each of the last three calendar years is given in the table:

Home Detention Curfew

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of probation supervision those offenders released under the Home Detention Curfew scheme will be subject to; and if he will make a statement. [171927]

Mr. George Howarth: Offenders sentenced to 12 months and over are subject on release to supervision by a probation officer in accordance with National Standards, which apply whether or not an offender qualifies for the home detention curfew scheme. These Standards lay down, amongst other things, minimum levels of contact. A copy of the Standards is in the Library. They are now being reviewed in consultation with interested bodies, but revisions will not come into effect before April 2000.

Offenders subject to shorter sentences are not liable to statutory probation service supervision, but may approach probation staff for advice or assistance.

No offenders are placed on home detention curfew scheme in the first place without a probation service assessment of suitability.

Prisoners (Repatriation)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals, excluding Irish nationals, serving prison sentences in the UK have (a) applied for repatriation to their home countries in the last two years to complete their sentences and (b) had their applications granted; and if he will make a statement. [71865]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of foreign national prisoners (excluding Irish nationals) in England and Wales who applied for repatriation to their home countries to complete their sentences were as follows:

1998: 112.

The number of foreign national prisoners (excluding Irish nationals) transferred from England and Wales to their home country over the same period were:

1998: 20.

Figures relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

These figures do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same period.

Violence (NHS and School Staff)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each of the last three years for which figures are available, how many incidents of violence were recorded (a) against NHS staff, (b) against school staff and (c) in total; and if he will make a statement. [71862]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested for NHS and schools staff is not collected centrally. The total numbers of violent crimes notified to the Home Office in the last three financial years, which includes offences of violence against the person, robbery and sexual offences, are as follows:

| | Number of offences |
|---|---|
| 1995-96 | 319,675 |
| 1996-97 | 348,032 |
| 1997-98 | 352,873 |

Bookmakers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the proposed changes to the Bookmakers Committee. [70991]

Mr. George Howarth: We issued a consultation letter to interested organisations seeking comments by 8 February. We have received representations from Tyndallwoods solicitors (on behalf of the British Betting Office Association, the National Association of Bookmakers and the Scottish Independent Bookmakers' Association), the Betting Office Licensees Association, William Hill, Coral, Ladbroke and Stanley Leisure.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact on the competitiveness of small and independent bookmakers of replacing the existing scheme by an increased flat percentage rate of levy payable on each bookmaking shop. [70992]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have made no such assessment. The structure and rates of levy are matters for the Horserace Betting Levy Board.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70785]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 570.

Airside Transit Visas

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people of which nationalities holding airside transit visas were (a) permitted to transit at a UK airport and (b) refused entry to the UK in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998; [70739]

(2) how many people of which nationalities arriving in the UK holding airside transit visas did not leave the UK as required and how many of these (a) applied for asylum, (b) were recognised as refugees, (c) were granted exceptional leave and (d) were refused entry to the UK in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998. [70738]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information is available only on holders of airside transit visas refused entry at the 12 largest ports, and is given in the table. Only 2 of these persons applied for asylum, both in 1996—a Ghanaian who made a voluntary departure from the United Kingdom before a decision was reached on the application, and a Nigerian whose application was refused.

Data cover Heathrow (4 terminals), Gatwick (2), Manchester (2), Dover East, Harwich, Stansted, Waterloo.

Serious Assaults

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of serious assaults reported to the police in England and Wales in 1998 resulted in charges being laid against the alleged perpetrators. [72022]

Mr. Boateng: These data are not collected centrally. For 1997 the proportion of all crimes of violence against the person, recorded by the police in England and Wales, which was cleared up by a charge or summons was 39 per cent.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71849]

Mr. Straw: In common with other Departments, the work of press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nigel Locke

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Nigel Locke of Vine Street, Kidderminster, can expect to receive compensation for the hand guns he has surrendered as required by law; and if he will make a statement concerning the reason for the delay in making payment to Mr. Locke. [72367]

Mr. Boateng: Compensation was paid under Option A of the statutory surrender scheme for small-calibre pistols on 25 November 1998 and under Option C of the scheme on 17 February 1999. The more complicated Option C claims, based on individual evidence of value, are dealt with at a second stage in the interests of efficiency and to smooth the payment process. I outlined the measures we are taking to speed the processing of these compensation claims in my reply to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 28 October 1998, Official Report, columns 179–80.

Asylum Seekers

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the implications for access to the social security benefits system of where asylum seekers seek refuge. [72019]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Whilst I have not commissioned any independent research, Home Office officials have examined this issue and have provided advice for Ministers.

Review of Sex Offences

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which (a) (i) religious and (ii) other bodies and (b) individuals have been invited to take part in the Review of Sex Offences; [72343]

(2) if he will list those (a) bodies and (b) individuals who have been invited to meet regularly with his Department's officials as part of the Review of Sex Offences. [72350]

Mr. Boateng: The following organisations and individuals form part of the steering group and external reference group of the review of sex offences under the chairmanship of the Home Office:

CARE (Christian Action, Research and Education)
Kairos in Soho
Board of Deputies of British Jews

Dr Liz Kelly

No other bodies or individuals have been asked to meet regularly with my officials but there will be consultation conferences and seminars where other organisations and individuals will be able to contribute their views.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the closure date for submissions to the Review of Sex Offences is likely to be extended; [72349]

(2) which (a) bodies and (b) individuals have been consulted to date as part of the Review of Sex Offences; [72346]

(3) if (a) bodies and (b) individuals who have not been invited to meet regularly with his Department's officials as part of the Review of Sex Offences will have any further opportunity to contribute to the Review after the closure date for submissions. [72348]

Mr. Boateng: The review of sex offences is being carried out in an open and inclusive manner. The terms of reference were set out in a consultation leaflet issued on 25 January. The leaflet "A Review of Sex Offences" invites views on how the criminal law should apply in the area of sex offences, and asks for responses by 19 March 1999. Some 4,000 copies of the leaflet have been sent out to a wide cross-section of organisations and individuals concerned with criminal justice and social policy. The leaflet is also available on the Internet.

There are no plans formally to extend the period of this initial consultation which is intended to enable people to put their views on the present law in at the beginning so that they can contribute directly to the work of the review at an early stage. The review would however like to continue to receive views as its work progresses.

This initial consultation exercise will be followed by a series of conferences and seminars on particular aspects of sex offences, which will enable bodies and individuals who are not on the steering group or external review group to contribute to the work of the review.

The recommendations of the review will form the basis of further public consultation exercise on the proposals that emerge.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Review of Sex Offences will be considering raising the ages of consent for sexual activity. [72347]

Mr. Boateng: The review will be considering the whole framework of sex offences, which would include whether the ages of consent should be raised. We have already made it absolutely clear that this Government will not accept any reduction in the age of consent below that of 16 years.

Buggery

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the years 1987 to 1997 of those convicted of the offence of buggery (1) in how many cases the victim or other party to the offence was aged (a) under 14, (b) 14 to 17, (c) 18 to 20, (d) 21 to 40, (e) 41 to 64 and (f) 65 years and over, giving in each age group the number who were (1) male and (2) female; [72345]

(2) of those convicted of (a) indecent assault on a male, (b) indecency between males and (c) buggery in each of the years 1987 to 1997, for each of the age groups (i) under 14, (ii) 14 to 17, (iii) 18 to 20, (iv) 21 to 40, (v) 41 to 64 and (vi) 65 years and over, how many were sentenced to immediate custody; [72342]

(3) for each of the years 1987 to 1997, what were the numbers of (a) prosecutions, (b) convictions and (c) cautions for (1) indecency between males and (2) buggery; and in each of the categories what were the numbers of those persons who were aged (i) under 14, (ii) 14 to 17, (iii) 18 to 20, (iv) 21 to 40, (v) 41 to 64 and (vi) 65 years and over. [72338]

Mr. Boateng: Available information is given in the tables. The Home Office Court Proceedings Database cannot identify the ages of victims to the detail required.

Indecency Offences (Males)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of years 1987 to 1997 what was the number of notifications for the offence of indecency between males. [72344]

Mr. Boateng: The numbers of recorded offences of indecency between males from 1987 to 1997 in England and Wales are as listed.

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 1,127 |
| 1988 | 1,306 |
| 1989 | 2,022 |
| 1990 | 1,159 |
| 1991 | 965 |
| 1992 | 892 |
| 1993 | 671 |
| 1994 | 683 |
| 1995 | 727 |
| 1996 | 553 |

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72010]

Mr. Straw: Services performed by KPMG for my Department and the estimated remuneration made in each case are as follows:

(a) From 1 May 1997 to date (ie 20 months)

| Service | Amount (£) |
|---|---|
| Management Consultancy Services | 181,784 |
| Training/Personnel services | 123,445 |
| Project Management/Participation | 2,382,012 |
| Audit Services | 144,279 |
| Benchmarking Services | 102,385 |
| Financial Advice | 122,385 |
| Total | 3,056,290 |

(b) From 1 November 1995 to 30 April 1997 (ie 20 months prior to 1 May 1997)

| Service | Amount (£) |
|---|---|
| Management Consultancy Services | 7,984 |
| Training/Personnel services | 8,216 |
| Project Management/Participation | 40,537 |
| Audit Services | 3,000 |
| Benchmarking Services | — |
| Financial Services | — |
| Total | 59,737 |

The information does not include data for the Prison Service for the period 1 November 1995 to 31 March 1996, as records were not kept before April 1996.

Crime (Victims and Witnesses)

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve services for victims of crime and witnesses. [72146]

Mr. Boateng: I will be announcing very shortly how we intend to improve services for victims and witnesses at magistrates' courts and the enhanced level of funding we shall be making available to Victim Support.

Ministerial Meetings (US Ministers)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times Ministers in his Department have met their counterparts in the US Administration since 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved, and the name of the US counterpart. [71964]

Mr. Straw: I am in regular contact with Janet Reno, the United States Attorney General, and have had a number of meetings with her. In the period covered by the question, I also chaired a meeting of G8 counterparts, on 16 December 1998, which was conducted by video conference, at the request of Janet Reno.

Since June 1998, there have been no other meetings between Ministers in my Department and their United States counterparts.

CS Aerosol Incapacitants

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the guidelines for the police on the use of personal issue, hand-held CS aerosol incapacitants. [71963]

Mr. Boateng: Copies of the guidelines issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) were placed in the Library on 17 April 1996, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman). I understand that the guidelines are currently being reviewed by ACPO. No guidelines are issued by the Home Office.

Railways (Trespassing)

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisation has overall responsibility for prosecuting trespass on railways; and how many prosecutions for trespassing on railways have taken place in each year since 1996. [71531]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The initial decision to prosecute trespassers is taken by the British Transport Police but the final decision to continue a prosecution with a court hearing lies with the Crown Prosecution Service. The figures for prosecutions since 1996 are as follows:

| | Prosecuted | Cautioned/warned | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1996 | 321 | 4,390 | 4,711 |
| 1997 | 589 | 4,751 | 5,340 |
| 1998 | 485 | 4,574 | 5,059 |
| Total | 1,395 | 13,685 | 15,080 |

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since 1996 an individual identified by the police as causing a rail accident whilst trespassing on the railway has not subsequently been prosecuted. [71532]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The British Transport Police have no record of any occasion where an identified person who has caused a rail accident while trespassing on the railways has not been prosecuted.

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the hunts which have been investigated by the police for possible offences since 1996 and (b) the investigations which related to (i) trespassing on railways and (ii) causing road accidents. [71530]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Domestic Violence

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many women reported domestic violence for the years (a) 1996-97 and (b) 1997-98, indicating the methodology used in his estimate. [71782]

Mr. Boateng: Recorded crime statistics relate to offence type, not to the relationship between offender and victim. There is, therefore, no definitive figure for the number of crimes which are domestic in nature.

Statistical returns submitted to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) by police forces in England and Wales have included a figure on domestic violence incidents, but, until now, the definition of "domestic violence" has been interpreted very differently between forces. From April 1999, HMIC will be adopting a narrower, but common, definition.

The 1996 British Crime Survey included a new computerised self-completion questionnaire designed to give the most reliable findings to date on the extent of domestic violence in England and Wales.

The report on the findings of this questionnaire (Home Office Research Study 191) was published on 21 January 1999, and a copy has been placed in the Library. 4.2 per cent. of women said they had been physically assaulted by a current or former partner in the last year. The police were told of 9 per cent. of incidents against women who reported one or two attacks, and 22 per cent. of incidents against women who reported three or more attacks. Medical staff were the next most likely to hear of incidents.

Drug Dealers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted drug dealers now serving prison sentences in England and Wales who have been convicted in the last five years, and were ordered by the trial judge to hand over financial assets thought to have been acquired as a result of dealing in drugs, have not done so to date; and if he will make a statement. [69806]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally to the detail required.

The available information, taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database, shows that between 1993 to 1997, 22,959 offenders were sentenced to immediate custody at the Crown Court for drug trafficking offences. Out of these, a confiscation order was imposed on 5,322 (23 per cent.).

Mediation UK

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions with Mediation UK for core funding for 1999–2000. [71542]

Mr. Boateng: Mediation UK does valuable work, which contributes to the policy objectives of a number of Government Departments. It has not previously been funded by the Home Office but I am meeting its Director, this week, to discuss possible ways of keeping the organisation in being while longer-term funding issues are considered.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70033]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information sought could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom Departments are expected to use for the rest of the Government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the Government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71287]

Mr. Straw: It is not possible to identify the amounts in my Department's budget which can be specifically attributed to spending on people with disabilities. Such spending is contained within wider budgets allocated to different parts of my Department.

South Devon Hunt

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the progress of the investigation by Devon and Cornwall Police into the road accidents on the A38 near Ashburton in December 1998 involving the South Devon Hunt. [71590]

Mr. Boateng: I understand from the Devon and Cornwall Constabulary that the investigation into the two accidents is nearing completion and that they will be writing to those involved in the near future.

Mink-keeping Licences

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions have been brought and (b) convictions have been secured against individuals in connection with protests against establishments holding a mink-keeping licence in the last five years. [71312]

Mr. Boateng: Protesters would not be prosecuted unless they were committing an offence, for example, aggravated trespass, criminal damage, or breach of the peace, or breaking conditions which may be imposed on processions and assemblies by the police under the Public Order Act 1986. The Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not identify the circumstances of an offence to the detail required.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the operation of the Criminal Cases Review Commission; and if he will make a statement. [71359]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's view on the performance and effectiveness of the Commission was set out in a recent note for the Home Affairs Select Committee, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long the Criminal Cases Review Commission has been considering the case of Mr. John Kamara; and when he expects them to reach a decision. [71360]

Kate Hoey: I understand that the Commission began work on Mr. Kamara's application in July 1997, and that the case is due to be considered next month by a case committee of three Commission members, which may either decide whether or not to refer the case to the Court of Appeal, or that further investigation is required.

Trespass (Prosecutions)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of trespass onto private property have resulted in prosecution in each of the past 10 years. [71526]

Mr. Boateng: Information given in the table is for criminal prosecutions under sections 61 and 68 to 71 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

In the past, the police and courts had dealt with trespass situations covered by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act using pre-existing powers and offences. These included sections of the Public Order Act 1986, common law breach of the peace, public nuisance and criminal damage. Information on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not identify the circumstances of such offences.

Number of defendants prosecuted for criminal trespass offences under sections 61, 68 and 69 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, England and Wales, 1995–97

| Offence description | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 |
|---|---|---|---|
| S61 Power to remove trespassers on land | 4 | 4 | 15 |
| S68 Offence of aggravated trespass | 111 | 359 | 160 |
| S69 Powers to remove persons committing or participating in aggravated trespass | 15 | 27 | 25 |
| S70(pp) Take part in prohibited assembly | | | |
| S70(pp) Inciting another to take part in a prohibited assembly | 2 | 2 | |
| S70(pp) Inciting another to take part in a prohibited trespassory assembly | 1 | 2 | |
| S71 Ignoring a directive not to proceed in the direction of the assembly (trespassory) | | 1 | |

As added to Part II S14A and 14B of Public Order Act 1986
As added to Part II S14C of Public Order Act 1986

Road Policing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions he is taking to ensure greater consistency among police forces in road policing. [71479]

Mr. Boateng: In the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, we provided the means to tackle local road policing issues. In August 1998 we set new overarching aims and objectives for the police. The importance of road policing is emphasised in both the objective of improving road safety and the objective of reducing crime and the fear of crime. In November, in his letter to forces about his new development priorities, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary specifically emphasised the importance of road policing.

The recent thematic inspection of road policing by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary concluded that not enough attention had previously been given to road policing and its recommendations seek the proper integration of the function which would lead to greater consistency of approach across forces.

National Insurance Numbers and Passports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many illegally obtained (a) National Insurance numbers and (b) UK passports are currently held by non-UK nationals. [71097]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no figures available on illegally obtained United Kingdom passports currently in the possession of non-United Kingdom nationals. The Passport Agency keeps records of the numbers of fraudulent passport applications detected. The level of abuse detected in 1998 was 1,368 applications, amounting to under 0.03 per cent. of total passport issues. The vast majority of these abuses related to fraudulent applications detected before a passport was issued.

The Home Office has no responsibility for National Insurance numbers; but the Department of Social Security has indicated that they have no figures relating to non-United Kingdom nationals and illegally obtained National Insurance numbers.

Speed Cameras

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many speed cameras are situated in each county police force area. [71438]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not available centrally. The enforcement of road traffic law is an operational matter for each individual chief officer and they decide whether to deploy such technology in the light of their local conditions and policing priorities.

Cyclists

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cyclists have been convicted of riding on pedestrian footpaths in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998. [71550]

Mr. Boateng: Available information for the years 1995 to 1997 (latest available) is given in the table. 1998 data will begin to become available in the Spring of this year.

Number of persons cautioned and convicted for cycling on footpaths , England and Wales, 1995–1997

| Disposal | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Convicted | 282 | 383 | 594 |

Offences under Highways Act 1835 S72 (as amended by Local Government Act 1888 s85(1); the Statute Law Revision (no2) Act 1888; Highways Act 1959 Sch25; Criminal Justice Act 1967 3rd Sch; Criminal Justice Act 1982 ss39 and 46 and Sch3); Metropolitan Police Act 1839 s54(7); and Bylaws.

Au Pairs

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter his Department's recommendation of £35 to £40 as a reasonable weekly allowance for au pairs working a maximum of 25 hours under rule 88 of the Immigration Rules. [71735]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [pursuant to his reply, 16 February 1999, c. 654]: Work undertaken by nationals living in the United Kingdom under the au pair scheme will not be subject to the National Minimum Wage provisions. The recommended weekly allowance will be kept under review.

Drugs and Driving

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the incidence of driving while under the influence of illegal drugs. [69111]

Mr. Boateng: We are working closely with the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) and Association of Chief Police Officers. The Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch is researching into the possible development of roadside drugs screening technology and we support the Association of Chief Police Officers in its work to ensure that officers have the appropriate training to enforce the current legislation as effectively as possible. We will consider possible changes in legislation in the light of the results of the DETR research into the incidence of drugs in road fatalities.

HEALTH

Minimum Wage and Working Time Regulations

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the annual cost to the NHS of (a) the national minimum wage and (b) the working time regulations. [69762]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 February 1999]: There are no national rates of pay for adult staff working in the National Health Service at or below the national Minimum Wage level of £3.60 per hour.

Responsibility for implementing the Working Time Regulations is for local National Health Service employers. Information on the cost of implementing the regulations is not available centrally.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the annual additional cost to the NHS resulting from the European working time directive. [69741]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), Official Report, columns 127.

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70032]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathon Crowe as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers.

The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to Her Majesty's Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

The Department of Health Headquarters (being the Departmental offices other than the NHS Executive regional offices) has not used London solicitors during the time under consideration.

As part of an arrangement made with the regional health authorities prior to their absorption into the Department as regional offices of the NHS Executive on 1 April 1996, the Department have continued to use outside solicitors (not all in London) for litigation that was already underway and for land transactions. However, identifying each firm of solicitors and specifying the amount paid to them would involve disproportionate cost.

Blood

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to ensure a sufficient supply of blood, plasma and other blood products within the National Blood Service over the millennium fortnight. [70168]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Executive is working closely with the National Blood Authority to ensure sufficient stocks and contingency arrangements are in place. At local level health authorities and NHS trusts will be working with blood centres to plan adequate supplies for transfusion. The National Blood Authority's Bio Products Laboratory will be manufacturing and issuing sufficient supplies of blood products, which have a longer shelf life.

Health Technology Assessment

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list his Department's expenditure on the health technology assessment for each year from 1992 to 1998. [69781]

Ms Jowell: Expenditure in the National Health Service Health Technology Assessment Programme from 1992 to 1998 was as follows:

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1992–93 | nil |
| 1993–94 | nil |
| 1994–95 | nil |
| 1995–96 | 1.8 |
| 1996–97 | 4.4 |
| 1997–98 | 3.8 |
| 1998–99 | 6.3 |

Estimate

Copies of the "Annual Report of the NHS Health Technology Assessment Programme 1998" will be placed in the Library. This report gives details of expenditure by project.

Clinical Perfusionists

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what reply his Department sent to the letter of 5 November 1998 to its Chief Scientific Officer from Her Majesty's Coroner for Inner South District, Greater London, following an inquest into the death of a baby, asking that urgent consideration be given to the early introduction of statutory regulation of clinical perfusionists; [70173]

(2) what progress has been made (a) towards state registration of clinical perfusionists and (b) in dealing with the danger to the public posed by unaccredited perfusionists. [70172]

Mr. Denham: My noble Friend the Baroness Hayman responded directly to Her Majesty's Coroner on 16 December 1998 indicating that we expect the employment of clinical perfusionists in the National Health Service to be confined to professionally accredited practitioners and are consulting the profession on the practical steps required to implement this effectively. We are also considering options for the regulation of the profession in the longer term.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings, (b) hold public meetings and (c) have lay or consumer representatives on their boards; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69958]

Ms Jowell: Of the Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) none admits members of the public to all board or committee meetings.

Of the Department's advisory NDPBs the following hold public meetings:

The Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

The Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

The United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority

In none of these cases is this under a statutory requirement.

Of the Department's advisory NDPBs the following have lay or consumer representatives on the boards:

The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens

The Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards

The Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing

The Advisory Committee on the Micro biological Safety of Food

The Committee of the Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy

The Committee on the Safety of Medicines

The Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment

The Expert Advisory Group on AIDS

The Gene Therapy Advisory Committee

The Medicines Commission

The Standing Committee on Postgraduate Medical Education

The United Kingdom Advisory Panel for Health Care Workers Infected with Bloodborne Viruses

The United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority

The Unrelated Live Transport Regulatory Authority

In the case of the Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing and the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee this is under a statutory requirement.

Chiropody Services

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultations there were per chiropodist in England in the latest year available, in each health authority, in terms of (a) all consultations, (b) initial contact and (c) number of people seen for the first time that year. [70340]

Mr. Hutton: The information available will be placed in the Library.

ChildLine

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much financial assistance he has provided to ChildLine in the past three years; and how much he is making available to ChildLine for the next three years. [70712]

Mr. Hutton: ChildLine were awarded a grant under Section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 for a three year period in 1996-97. They received £183,000 in 1996-97, £173,000 in 1997-98, and £163,000 in 1998-99. ChildLine have also received a Section 64 Grant of £60,000 over the last three years for their special helpline for children in care.

We intend to award ChildLine a Renewal Core grant under the Section 64 Grant award scheme for the next three years. We will be making £187,500 available in 1999-2000, £180,000 in 2000-01 and £175,000 in 2001-02. In addition, we will be making £50,000 a year available for the three financial years 1999-2000, 2000-01, and 2001-02 so that ChildLine may provide a helpline for looked after children.

National Reference Cost Tables

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sources of data are used in compiling the National Reference Cost tables for NHS trusts. [71064]

Mr. Denham: The National Schedule of Reference Costs, published in November 1998, is based on information supplied by National Health Service trusts. The information is based on the 1997-98 final accounts. The information is submitted to the NHS Executive by June 30 each year, on the same timescales as the final accounts information and is therefore retrospective in nature.

Dental Services (Herefordshire)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of dental services in Herefordshire by the National Health Service. [70742]

Mr. Denham: There are 70 dentists treating patients under National Health Service provisions in Herefordshire. The Community Dental Service and an emergency dental service also provide NHS treatment. We have approved two applications under Investing in Dentistry, together intended to allow 4,000 new patients to receive NHS treatment.

Medical Records (Access)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will abolish charges for patients to access their medical records; and if he will make a statement. [70945]

Mr. Denham: We are considering the issue of access charges in the light of the Data Protection Act 1998 but no decision has yet been made.

Carers

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the number of carers who are currently pursuing (i) part-time and (ii) full-time courses of further or higher education in (a) Bolton, (b) the North West and (c) England; [70793]

(2) what is his estimate of the number of carers in (a) Bolton, (b) the North West and (c) England; [70791]

(3) what is his estimate of the number of carers over the age of 25 years in (a) Bolton, (b) the North West and (c) England. [70792]

Mr. Hutton: There are an estimated 4.9 million carers in England, of whom 4.6 million are over the age of 25 years. Of these, around 900,000 (800,000 of whom are aged over 25) are in the North West. This information comes from the General Household Survey for 1995 and cannot be used reliably to estimate the numbers of carers in individual cities or local authority areas. The General Household Survey also suggests that around 2 per cent. of carers are in full-time education in England. The numbers in the survey are too small to allow estimates to be made for the North West or for Bolton. There is no information on part-time students in the General Household Survey.

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the factors which prevent those carers who wish to enter further or higher education from so doing; [70801]

(2) what plans he has to enable carers to pay for substitute care when pursuing a course of further or higher education. [70800]

Mr. Hutton: Carers may be prevented from entering further or higher education by the extent of their caring responsibilities, particularly if they are providing care for a large number of hours each week. Other factors which may have an effect include the availability of substitute care and the effects of caring on the carer's own health and wellbeing. Our National Strategy for Carers, "Caring about Carers", copies of which are in the Library, sets out proposals to meet carers' needs better than in the past. The availability of substitute care, to give carers a break from their caring responsibilities, will be enhanced by additional funding of £140 million over the next three years for England.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the extra moneys for carers announced on 8 February 1999, Official Report, columns 21-33, will be paid (a) through local authorities, (b) direct to carers or (c) by other means. [70894]

Mr. Hutton: The additional £140 million to help carers to have a break from their caring responsibilities will be paid as a special grant and included in allocations to local authorities. The draft special grant report will be published shortly.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much per carer for years (a) 1999-2000, (b) 2000-01 and (c) 2001-02 will be provided by the £140 million additional funding for England announced on 8 February 1999, Official Report, columns 21-33, (a) in England, (b) in south-west Hertfordshire and (c) in Hertfordshire. [70895]

Mr. Hutton: Local authorities, together with their health authority partners, will be responsible for assessing the needs of carers in their area for services to allow them to have a break from their caring responsibilities, for establishing whether current services meet carers' needs and for extending the range of services provided where this appears necessary. They will also be responsible for deciding who is eligible to receive services. In assessing how to use the additional funding, local authorities will take account of their current expenditure on respite care.

Allergies

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will commission further research into the causes of the increasing incidence of hay fever, eczema, asthma and similar allergies; [65327]

(2) what evidence his Department has identified linking asthma, eczema and similar allergies to chemical by-products from (a) home heating systems and (b) car exhaust fumes. [65328]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 21 January 1999]: The Department has carried out detailed investigations into the possible links between air pollution and asthma. The Department's Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants published an extensive report on the subject, "Asthma and Outdoor Air Pollution", in 1995. The report made it clear that, while asthma and other atopy based diseases, such as hay fever and eczema, had increased considerably in many western countries over the past thirty years, this increase was unlikely to be caused by air pollution. The report acknowledged that exposure to some air pollutants could adversely affect individuals already suffering from asthma and trigger attacks.

Since then, evidence that air pollutants, including nitrogen dioxide (an indoor as well as an outdoor air pollutant) and diesel particles, may enhance the body's biological response to allergens has strengthened. There does not appear to be any convincing evidence that eczema is related to exposure to air pollution.

The prevention and treatment of asthma and allergic conditions are high priority topics within the Department's research programmes, including the £4 million National Health Service asthma management programme. The Department also funds a number of research projects as part of its joint air pollution research programme with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Medical Research Council, which are examining the impact of air pollutants on asthma sufferers as well as a separate joint programme on indoor air pollutants and damp in the home. In addition to this, the Medical Research Council also funds a substantial Government programme of basic research into asthma and allergies amounting to over £2 million in 1997-98.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998-99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71290]

Mr. Hutton: The money allocated by the Department each year to health authorities is not differentiated according to the patient groups for whom services are to be provided. At the local level, most service agreements between health authorities and National Health Service trusts and other provider bodies for hospital and community health services relate to general service areas or to specific medical and surgical specialties, which will cover disabled people like others. The same is true of expenditure on family health services.

Disability Discrimination Act 1999

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71276]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Executive appointed "Disability Matters", a specialist consultancy, to develop a proposed action programme for the implementation of Section 21 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 across the NHS. We plan to issue guidance, based on the report submitted by "Disability Matters" later this year.

It is for individual social services authorities to assess the impact on them of the implementation of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 from October 1999. All social services authorities in England were included in the consultation carried out by the Department for Education and Employment on the implementation of the new requirements. The vast majority of social services departments were aware of what their new duties entailed, and were content with the proposals.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71342]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 15 February 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has made the following official visits between 1 January 1998 and 11 February 1999:

Airedale Hospital, Keighley; Huddersfield Royal Infirmary, Huddersfield; Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Birmingham; Selly Park General Practitioner Commissioning Group, Birmingham; Moseley Hall Hospital, Birmingham; Hartlepool General Hospital, Hartlepool; North Tees General Hospital, Stockton; Leicester Royal Infirmary, Leicester; Glaxo Wellcome, Stevenage; Halton General Hospital, Runcorn; Homerton Hospital, London; Holly St Hackney Development, Hackney; Whipps Cross Hospital, London; United Leeds Teaching Hospital, Leeds; South Buckinghamshires Ground Breaking Ceremony, High Wycombe; Minor Surgery Unit, Slough; St Cross Hospital, Rugby; Shipley Community Hospital, Bradford; Neptune Health Park, Tipton; Jagonari Womens Centre, London; Gloucester Royal Infirmary, Gloucester; GP Surgery, Pontypridd; West Derby St, Liverpool; Queen Mary's Hospital, Sidcup; Ladywell Unit, Lewisham; North Middlesex Hospital, London; Bart's WRVS Shop, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London; Hebden Bridge Health Centre, Hebden Bridge; Royal Free Hospital, London; NW Region GP Practice, Preesall, Lancashire; Trafford General Hospital, Trafford; Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Greenwich; St Bartholomew's Hospital, London; Indian Senior Citizens Centre, Whalley Range, Manchester; Carlisle Private Finance Initiative Ceremony, Carlisle; Workington Health Action Zone, Workington; Equal Opportunities Commission, Manchester; SMA Medical Centre, Leyton; Norfolk Mental Health Care Trust, Norwich; University of Nottingham, Nottingham; Wythenshawe Hospital, Manchester; National Records Monument Centre, Swindon; Princess Margaret Hospital, Swindon; Swindon Health Centre, Swindon; Norwich Research Park, Norwich; Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare Trust, Norwich; Halifax General Hospital, Halifax; Calderdale Healthcare NHS Trust, Halifax; Middleton Lodge Practice, New Ollerton; Queen Elizabeth II Hospital, Welwyn Garden City; Women & Childrens Centre, Deptford; Royal Lancaster Hospital, Lancaster; Blackpool Victoria Hospital, Blackpool; Preston Acute Services, Preston; Red Cross Exhibition, Brighton; Royal London Hospital, Whitechapel; Birmingham Childrens Hospital, Birmingham; Southern Grove, Tower Hamlets, London; University of Central Lancashire, Preston; East Lancashire Health Authority, Nelson; GP Premises, Blackford House, Bury; Bury and Rochdale Health Authority, Bury; New Cross Hospital, Wolverhampton; Bromley PFI Ceremony, Orpington; Scarborough Hospital, Scarborough; Amber Project, Plaistow; Meadowfields Medical Practice, Chalferton, Derby; Mary Seacole Research Centre, Leicester; Royal London Hospital, London; London Ambulance Service, London; Community Integrated Care Team, London; Whittington Hospital, London; Abbey Road Health Centre, London; Hodgson Medical Centre, Peterborough; Bedford Hospital NHS Trust, Bedford

The Department does not hold records of official visits on a constituency basis and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Incontinence

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the report of the working party on the problems of incontinence. [71702]

Mr. Hutton: On 2 September 1998, we announced the details of the review of continence policy which involves representatives from the health service, social services and voluntary organisations. This review will lead to updated guidance on continence services which we plan to issue in the spring.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71508]

Ms Jowell: The reviews and taskforces, established since 1 May 1997, which have published their final reports are:

Review of the law relating to surrogacy

Review of evidence relating to silicon breast implants

Review of the breast screening programme in Devon and the implications for the breast screening programme as a whole

Strategic review of Health Services in London

Review of the latest information available on inequalities in Health

Independent review of proposals for the transfer of bulk blood processing and testing from Liverpool to Manchester

Review of NHS Charter

Ministerial task force on the Government's response to the Children's Safeguards Review

The reviews and taskforces, established since the 1 May 1997, which have yet to publish reports are:

Mental Health Act Review

Thoracic Surgical Services Review

United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority Review

Review of general anaesthesia and sedation with dental treatment

Review of the wheelchair voucher scheme and the provision of electrical and indoor wheelchairs

Eight regional task forces to support the Waiting List Action Team

NHS efficiency task force

NHS task force on staff involvement

Information on advisory groups and on the costs incurred by reviews and taskforces could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are followed in resolving differences of preference between authorities and individual patients as to their transfer from a learning disability hospital to alternative care; how many patients have been moved against their express wish over the last three years; and with what medical consequences for the patients involved. [71487]

Mr. Hutton: The move of patients from hospital to alternative care is the responsibility of local statutory authorities, taking into account the needs and wishes of people with learning disabilities, their carers and/or their families.

Guidance has been issued to local authorities and health authorities stressing the importance of joint working between relevant agencies, providers and professionals which involve users and carers, in providing a well co-ordinated range of services to meet the diverse needs of this client group.

However, we do not have any centrally available information about the number of patients moved from learning disability hospitals against their wishes in the last 3 years.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently accommodated within hospitals for learning disabilities. [71488]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally. However, it is estimated that there were 8,400 in-patients in hospitals under the care of a mental handicap consultant at 31 March 1998.

Mental Health Service (Leeds)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department plans to submit the business case for mental health service provision in Leeds to the Treasury. [71553]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service Executive has been actively evaluating the full business case submitted by the Leeds Community and Mental Health Services National Health Service Trust in November 1998. The trust and Bradford and Northern Housing Association, the private finance initiative partner, are being advised on the further work that needs to be done before the full business case can be submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury for approval.

Family Health Services Drugs Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities overspent their Family Health Services drugs allocations in 1997–98; and in those health authorities which overspent the allocation by over £1 million, what proportion of practices were (a) dispensing and (b) prescribing; what proportion of the overspend was attributable to each type of practice; and in each case what was the expenditure on branded drugs where a generic equivalent exists. [71574]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Seventy-eight Health Authorities overspent their family health services drugs allocations in 1997–98. The total net overspend was £69 million. Of these overspending health authorities, forty four overspent their allocation by less than £1 million. For the thirty four health authorities which overspent their allocation by greater than £1 million, the available information is provided in the table. Data for expenditure on branded drugs where a generic equivalent exists are not available.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the overall Family Health Service drugs expenditure is accounted for by dispensing general practitioner practices. [72622]

Mr. Denham: In 1997–98, 15 per cent. of Family Health Services drugs expenditure was accounted for by dispensing general practitioner practices.

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a cost benefit analysis of (a) the use of complementary medicine in the NHS and (b) the use of drugs; and if he will make a statement. [71921]

Ms Jowell: Given the wide range of treatments available both through orthodox and complementary medicine, it would be very difficult to draw any meaningful conclusions about their relative cost/benefits as a whole. The National Research Register includes details of projects which have examined the clinical and cost effectiveness of certain types of treatment or intervention for individual conditions, including complementary therapies. The Register is available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the Internet at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority the spending on holistic therapy projects for each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [71918]

Ms Jowell: The amount spent by each health authority on holistic therapy projects of any sort is not recorded centrally, and the funding of research projects is handled separately. A report published in 1995 by the Medical Care Research Unit of Sheffield University showed that some 40 per cent. of general practitioner partnerships in England provided some form of complementary therapy for their National Health Service patients.

Project details of work directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS research and development levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR). This is available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the Internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR also contains many details of projects funded by the MRC and other funders.

Osteopathy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make osteopathy treatment available on the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement. [71920]

Ms Jowell: The availability of osteopathy within the National Health Service, as with any other forms of treatment, reflects decisions taken locally by health authorities and general practitioners about the clinical and cost effectiveness of such services and the priority given to their provision in the light of competing demands for the resources. A report published in 1995 by the Medical Care Research Unit of Sheffield University showed that some 40 per cent. of general practitioner partnerships in England provided some form of complementary therapy for their NHS patients.

Adoption

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend family law to give birth relatives access to information about adopted members of their family. [72041]

Mr. Hutton: There are no plans at present to amend the Adoption Act 1976 to change the provision enabling birth relatives to have information on adopted relatives.

Mid-Essex Hospital NHS Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in the Mid-Essex Hospital NHS Trust area have been waiting (a) 13 to 25 weeks and (b) more than 26 weeks to see a consultant at the latest date for which figures are available. [72154]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 185. This provides the latest published figures for outpatient waiting times. Figures for the end of December 1998 will be available from 25 February.

Beta-interferon

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if, in considering the cost effectiveness of beta-interferon, the National Institute for Clinical Excellence will be allowed to consider social care and social security costs and lost tax revenues as well as health-related costs; [72567]

(2) what time-scale he will expect the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to work to in drawing up advice on the role of beta-interferon. [72566]

Mr. Denham: We are currently consulting on a discussion paper, Faster access to modern treatment, which sets out its detailed proposals for how the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) will carry out appraisals of the clinical and cost effectiveness of individual health treatments. Until responses have been received and considered by Ministers, no firm decisions will be taken either on the topics to be referred to NICE, or on the precise methods of appraisal to be used.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71850]

Ms Jowell: The Department's communications planning unit includes an officer whose job is to make more systematic and orderly the process of responding to criticism on Government policy, and, in particular to inaccurate or misleading allegations. This is in common with other departments, where the work of press office includes responding to misinformed allegations. The salary of that officer is £22,746.95. Three hundred and ninety-nine rebuttals have been issued since May 1997.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72009]

Ms Jowell: Detailed information about the services provided for the Department by KPMG, and their costs, are not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The total for all expenditure on services provided by KPMG is:

| Year | £ |
|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 471,767 |
| 1996–97 | 298,897 |
| 1997–98 | 331,058 |
| 1998–99 (until 9 February) | 115,068 |

plus £21,949 for work commissioned by the National Health Service Estates Agency between September 1995 and March 1997.

Silicone Breast Implants

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he has received from professional bodies on the use of silicone breast implants; [72523]

(2) what advice he has received from his scientific advisers on the long-term effects on the human body of silicone breast implants. [72524]

Ms Jowell: In response to continuing concerns expressed by some implanted women, an Independent Review Group was set up by the Chief Medical Officer in May 1997 to review the possible health issues associated with silicone gel breast implants and to examine the issues relating to pre-operative patient information. The members of the group were selected for their independent views, their knowledge and understanding of the issues and lack of any vested interest in the conclusions reached. The group reported back to the Chief Medical Officer in July 1998 and a copy of that report is available in the Library.

The Independent Review Group took evidence from various organisations and individuals, including a representative of the British Association of Plastic Surgeons and the British Association of Aesthetic Plastic Surgeons, and a representative of the British Association of Cosmetic Surgeons. Subsequent to the group's report, the Royal College of Surgeons has agreed to develop multidisciplinary clinical standards for breast implant surgery.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the safety of silicone breast implants. [72522]

Ms Jowell: In July 1998, the Independent Review Group on silicone gel breast implants concluded that, on the basis of the information available, silicone gel breast implants were not associated with any greater health risk than other surgical implants.

Copies of the group's full report are available in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, columns 576–77, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71020]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Expenditure by Cabinet Office non-departmental public bodies was included in my previous answer to the hon. Member. The table lists the expenditure since May 1997 by the Department's Executive Agencies, including own expenditure by Central Office of Information and the Buying Agency, which are Trading Funds.

| Property Advisers to the Civil Estate | nil | nil | nil | 11,504 |
| Security and Facilities Division | nil | nil | nil | 35,649 |
| The Buying Agency | 551 | 10,649 | 12,843 | 662,434 |

Operated as Security and Facilities Executive Agency until July 1998.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71854]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In common with other Departments, the work of press officers in my Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

This is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not recorded separately from other tasks.

Women's Unit

Mr. Berry: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the arrangements and mechanisms whereby the Women's Unit will ensure that women's interests are taken into account in the development and delivery of policies by all Government Departments in line with the performance targets. [71533]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment" was issued jointly by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Women, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in November 1998. These guidelines, which were placed in the Library on 5 November 1998, show how to ensure that both policy making and service design consider the impact upon women and other groups. They have been sent to all Departments and agencies under cover of a note from the Cabinet Secretary emphasising their importance. This updated previous guidelines issued in 1992.

As set out in the Cabinet Office Public Service Agreement (PSA) (published as part of the "Public Services for the Future" White Paper in December 1998), the Women's Unit will develop further guidance for policy makers by the end of the year on how to consider the needs and requirements of women. This will supplement the policy appraisal guidance. This will be circulated to all Government Departments and placed in the Library when complete.

The Women's Unit worked closely with Her Majesty's Treasury and other Departments in the development on PSAs which reflect women's interests. A performance target on tackling domestic violence against women has been included in the PSA for the Home Office and on the National Childcare Strategy in the PSA for the Department for Education and Employment. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Women sits on the relevant Cabinet Committee which will be monitoring Departments' performance. Monitoring will cover the handling of cross-cutting issues, including women's interests.

The Women's Unit convenes a women's policy group of senior officials from Departments across Whitehall with responsibility for women's issues in their Departments. This group maintains an overview of activity to ensure that women's interests are taken into account coherently and consistently.

The Director of the Women's Unit is also responsible for the Women's National Commission (WNC), the advisory non-departmental public body on women. The WNC represents some 50 organisations with around 8 million members, and provides advice and comment on all aspects of Government policy.

SCOTLAND

Consultancies

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate his Department's expenditure on (i) internal and (ii) external consultancy in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02. [69250]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 4 February 1999]: It is not possible to provide the information for the Scottish Office and its Agencies in the time available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible, placing a copy of my letter in the Library.

From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the (a) salary costs and (b) other costs of special advisers in his Department in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98, (iii) 1998–99 and (iv) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [69264]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Special Advisers' salaries are negotiated individually within the three-band range announced to the House by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 16 November 1998, Official Report, column 354. Individual salaries and pension contributions are confidential. Other costs of the Special Advisers in my Department since I took up office amounted to around £35,000 in 1997–98 and are estimated to amount to £57,000 in 1998–99. It is not possible to predict the costs for 1999–2000.

NHS Staff (Pay)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of paying the proposed salary rises for NHS staff in Scotland, (a) in total and (b) by category; if he will estimate the additional cost of an additional 0.5 per cent. increase (i) in total and (ii) by category; how much extra each grade of Scottish nurse would receive if given the same percentage increase as the equivalent grade in London; and if he will make a statement. [69853]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The total cost of the awards is £89 million. Details of cost for particular categories are as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Nurses and Midwives | 49 |
| PAMs | 7 |
| Hospital Doctors and Dentists | 13 |
| Ophthalmic Practitioners | 1 |
| General Medical Practitioners | 15 |
| General Dental Practitioners | 4 |

The estimated additional cost of an 0.5 per cent. increase in total by category would be as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Nurses and Midwives | 4.5 |
| PAMs | 0.6 |
| Hospital Doctors and Dentists | 1.7 |
| Ophthalmic Practitioners | 0.2 |
| General Medical Practitioners | 1.2 |
| General Dental Practitioners | 0.6 |
| Total | 8.8 |

Each grade of Scottish nurse would receive between £398 and £750 per annum extra if given the same percentage increase as the equivalent grade in London.

From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Deer

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to safeguard the public in West Sutherland from increased numbers of straying deer. [69597]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Deer Commission for Scotland is encouraging Deer Management Groups and estate owners to take measures as appropriate to reduce the numbers of deer straying onto roads or feeding on roadside verges, for example by introducing supplementary feeding as a method of drawing deer away from public highways. The Commission is also continuing to discuss with the roads authorities and the police matters such as road design, installation of warning signs, and use of wildlife roadside reflectors or fencing. These authorities also have discretion to introduce lower speed limits in certain circumstances.

Although deer numbers in the area have not increased, there is evidence to suggest that deer are spending more time on lower ground.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and if in each case this is under a statutory requirement. Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on Scotland's Travelling People

All do so voluntarily and not under a statutory requirement.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will allow representatives of the Scottish National Party, Scottish Liberal Democrats and Scottish Conservative and Unionist Party access to view, on a confidential basis, papers relating to spending by his Department already allocated and contracts signed by his Department for the period after 1 July for spending within the control of the Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [69920]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 9 February 1999]: The allocation of all of the resources which will, after 1 July 1999, be under the control of the Scottish Parliament is set out in the booklet 'Scotland's Supply Estimates 1999–2000, which was laid before the House on 4 February. There is no central record kept within the Department of the wide range of contracts and similar arrangements entered into throughout the year by the Scottish Office, its agencies and associated Departments.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70779]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 570.

Fisheries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the selection criteria and priorities of the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance scheme against which projects are selected. [70713]

Mr. Macdonald: Guidance notes for applicants, which are widely available, provide information on selection criteria and priorities of the scheme. Copies of the guidance notes have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Hunting

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Forestry Commission met Mr. Roger Harris to discuss hunting; and what action is to be taken as a result of this meeting. [70926]

Mr. Macdonald: Some of the Forestry Commissioners met Dr. Harris on 29 January to discuss the Joint Universities Study on deer hunting. The Commissioners will formally consider the findings of the study once it has been published and subjected to peer review.

New Deal

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1999 under the subsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [71433]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office is offering a total of 50 places under the subsidised job option of the New Deal programme.

City Status

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements his Department proposes to make in order to select candidates to propose for City Status. [71430]

Mr. McLeish: Awards of city status are made by Her Majesty The Queen acting under the Royal Prerogative, on the advice of the Government of the day. Her Majesty has expressed the intention of making awards in 2000 and 2002. Towns which have indicated an interest in city status will be contacted in May and invited to submit a formal application.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71282]

Mr. Galbraith: Elements of the expenditure on a wide range of services within my right hon. Friend's budget, including social work, health, housing, education and transport, are of benefit to disabled people. It is not possible to identify these separately.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Colleges (European Funding)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much of the funding allocated to colleges under European funding schemes is currently outstanding; [71362]

(2) how many bids by Scottish colleges for European funding have been successful; and what has been the average length of time between the initial approval of the scheme and the receipt by the college of the first and the final payments. [71363]

Mr. Macdonald: The information requested could not be identified except at disproportionate cost. Further Education colleges in Scotland secure from the European Social Fund assistance amounting to over £20 million per year for over 400 projects per year. Payments are made as soon as possible following the receipt of valid claims.

The administration of the European Structural Funds in Scotland will, from 1 July 1999, be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Prisoners (Employment)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average daily number of prisoners employed and the percentage of prisoners involved in vocational training by (a) quarter and (b) month in 1998. [71646]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is not available at this time in the detail sought, as figures for prisoners in employment are collated centrally for the full period required by the Scottish Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts, that is, from April to March each year. The numbers involved in vocational training are collected separately. Provisional figures for the number of prisoners engaged in vocational training for 1998 are as follows.

| Month | Average daily number of prisoners |
|---|---|
| January | 292 |
| February | 289 |
| March | 297 |
| April | 281 |
| May | 286 |
| June | 310 |
| July | 316 |
| August | 109 |
| September | 310 |
| October | 316 |
| November | 322 |
| December | 273 |

The Scottish Prison Service is developing a computerised management information system for regime activity to support continuous improvement in prisoner programmes and other opportunities, and data collection.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total spending on education for Scotland across all categories of education expenditure for each year from 1994–95 to 2000–01 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices. [71776]

Mrs. Liddell: The information is as follows:

| Year | Cash terms | 1998–99 Prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1994–95 | 3,485 | 3,894 |
| 1995–96 | 3,534 | 3,837 |
| 1996–97 | 3,590 | 3,781 |
| 1997–98 | 3,596 | 3,695 |
| 1998–99 | 3,758 | 3,758 |
| 1999–2000 | 4,036 | 3,938 |
| 2000–01 | 4,351 | 4,141 |

As from July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the spending on education in each of the current local government areas and for Scotland as a whole for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–01 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices. [71775]

Mrs. Liddell: The available information is given in the following table. Final outturn figures for any year are generally higher than the budget estimates.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

1. All figures are net current expenditure excluding loan and leasing charges as returned by the individual local authorities to the Scottish Office, adjusted, where necessary, to 1998–99 prices using the GDP deflator.
2. The provisional outturn figures for 1998–99 and the budget estimates for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 are not yet available.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the spending on housing in Scotland as a whole for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–01 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices; [71777]

(2) if he will estimate the total spending on housing for Scotland across all categories of housing expenditure for each year from 1994–95 to 2000–01 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices. [71778]

the years 1994–95 to 2000–01. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Housing programme

Notes:

1. Expenditure by the 5 New Town Development Corporations (which were dissolved by 31 March 1997) is excluded.
2. The figures exclude non-HRA resources which were included in the single non-housing capital allocation from 1996–97.
3. The figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 exclude additional allocations to local authorities of £109 million and £57 million respectively for the purchase of New Towns' stock.
4. The figure for 1997–98 excludes additional grant of £46 million for Scottish Homes redemption of debt.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the spending on health for Scotland as a whole for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–01 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices; [71779]

(2) if he will estimate the total spending on health for Scotland across all categories of health expenditure for each year from 1994–95 to 2000–01 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices. [71780]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is as follows:

| | Current prices | Constant 1998–99 prices |

[1] Outturn
[2] Estimated outturn
[3] Plan

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the extra funding for the Rough Sleepers Initiative announced on 16 December 1998 will be spent. [70318]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The intention is that the additional funding announced for the Rough Sleepers Initiative on 16 December 1998 should be spent in the financial years 2000–01 and 2001–02.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Carers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local authority (a) the amount of grant that will be payable in each year to support the National Carers Strategy, (b) the estimated number of carers and (c) the product of dividing (a) by (b). [71102]

Mr. Galbraith: Local authorities have been allocated £1.1 billion for social work services in Scotland in 1999–2000. Although not ring-fenced, at least £5.1 million is for carers and respite care. Also £5 million of the total has been specifically allocated to encourage local authorities to implement the Community Care Action Plan, a key theme of which is support for carers. Information on the numbers of carers is not held centrally. It is for each authority to determine how much of its total resources to allocate to assisting carers.

From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fixed Penalties

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in (a) Scotland and (b) each individual sheriffdom last year were charged with (i) one to three, (ii) four to five, (iii) five to 10 and (iv) more than 10 fixed penalty offences. [71874]

Mr. McLeish: Procurators Fiscal are empowered to make a conditional offer of a fixed penalty (fiscal fine) in relation to any offence in respect of which an alleged offender could competently be tried before the district court. The police or the Procurator Fiscal may also make a conditional offer of a fixed penalty in respect of certain road traffic offences.

Information collected since 1996 indicates that 92 per cent. of fiscal fines accepted involved one fine, 7 per cent. involved 2 fines, 1 per cent. involved 3 fines and 0.4 per cent. 4–8 fines.

From 1 July, Procurator Fiscal conditional offers (fiscal fines) will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament. Police and Procurator Fiscal fixed penalties for road traffic offences will be reserved.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland with reference to the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland's report to him on the Second Statutory Review of Electoral Arrangements, in how many local authorities (a) detailed counter-proposals were lodged against the Commission's draft proposals, by (i) political parties, (ii) individuals and (iii) community groups; (b) the Commission agreed to hold a local hearing; and (c) the Commission's draft proposals were amended subject to local hearings. [71890]

Mr. McLeish: The Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland advises me that its records are not held in a form from which this information could be quickly extracted. I am asking the Commission to write to the hon. Member, and shall arrange for a copy of the reply to be placed in the Library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland with reference to the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland's report to the Secretary of State for Scotland on the Second Statutory Review of Electoral Arrangements, how many local authorities' amendments to the draft proposals of the Commission were incorporated in the Commission's final recommendations to the Secretary of State. [71885]

Mr. McLeish: In the case of every authority, amendments to the draft proposals of the Commission were incorporated in the Commission's final recommendations to the Secretary of State. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Solicitors (Payments)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Legal Aid Board about the number of solicitors who will continue to register for criminal legal aid work in Caithness following the introduction of fixed fees for summary criminal legal aid cases. [71861]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Legal Aid Board have made no representations. From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Rowett Institute

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he received information from Dr. Pusztai in respect of work he had been undertaking at the Rowett Institute in Aberdeen involving experiments with rats and genetically modified potatoes; and if he will place a copy of it in the Library. [72570]

Mr. Macdonald: A copy of the report produced by Dr. Pusztai in response to the report of the Audit Committee was received by the Scottish Office on 26 October 1998. A copy of the report, together with the Audit Committee's response to the report, has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the papers relating to Dr. Pusztai's research released by the Rowett Research Institute. [72362]

Mr. Macdonald: A copy of the Audit Committee Report and the Press Release issued by the Rowett Research Institute; Dr. Pusztai's Report in response to the Audit Committee; and the Audit Committee's response to that report and the accompanying Press Release, have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will require the instruction to say nothing, given to Dr. Pusztai by his superiors at the Rowett Institute in Aberdeen, to be lifted forthwith. [72576]

Mr. Macdonald: I have been asked to reply as responsibility for this subject lies with the Scottish Office.

The restriction was lifted by the Director of the Rowett Research Institute on 16 February 1999.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Housing

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to publish the Green Paper on housing in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [71994]

Mr. Dewar: I am publishing the Green Paper "Investing in Modernisation—An Agenda for Scotland's Housing" today, and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The Government's firm belief is that every household should be able to live in a decent, secure and affordable home, and the Green Paper sets out a range of ideas and proposals for achieving this objective. We have already made substantial progress towards this goal, for example, by providing an additional £300 million of investment for housing; by developing new programmes through the Warm Deal, Empty Homes, and Rough Sleepers initiatives; by establishing New Housing Partnerships to lever in private finance; and by putting community regeneration and tenant empowerment at the centre of our strategy. The publication of "Investing in Modernisation"—the first Scottish Housing Green Paper in twenty years—is further evidence of the importance which this Government attach to improving housing in Scotland.

The Green Paper seeks views on a wide-range of issues and proposals, some forty in all. It emphasises the need for a long-term strategy which recognises the links with health, employment, and environmental policies and the role that housing can play in promoting social inclusion. It addresses all housing tenures, and places particular emphasis on the housing needs of the most vulnerable members of our society—rough sleepers and the homeless, community care users and families in cold and damp homes. "Investing in Modernisation" sets out the Government's ideas for revitalising public housing through the promotion of community ownership, which offers the prospect of fundamental and radical change which should bring major benefits to tenants, local authorities and communities. The Green Paper also highlights the importance of local authorities developing a strategic role in respect of housing in their areas, and it assesses the current activities of Scottish Homes and seeks views on how these might best be carried out in future.

"Investing in Modernisation" is a consultative document which is intended to stimulate debate and discussion about the long-term housing policies and strategies which are most relevant to Scotland's distinctive needs and circumstances. The closing date for responses to the Green Paper is 31 May 1999. Responses will be made available to the Scottish Parliament and Executive, who will have responsibility for determining, after 1 July, whether these proposals should be taken forward.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the annual cost of abolishing the tolls on the Skye Bridge and paying a shadow toll to Skye Bridge Ltd. for the remaining years of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [69246]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 4 February 1999]: The terms of the contract with the concessionaire are that any changes to the concession agreement must have the consent of the concessionaire. Accordingly, it is not possible to estimate the final cost of shadow tolling. However, as my right hon. Friend said in his written answer of 4 July 1997, Official Report, columns 288–90, the idea of removing tolls completely through 100 per cent. shadow tolls is not less expensive than buying out the contract nor in public expenditure terms does it have the effect of spreading the cost over a number of years, as people have tended to assume. The full cost of the project would be a public expenditure charge immediately because of the absence of the transfer of risk to the private sector, which is what justifies the phased public expenditure cost for DBFO roads contracts entered into before construction has begun. The cost of buying out the contract is estimated to be at least £25m, but the final figure would depend upon the outcome of negotiations with the concessionaire. Hence, full shadow tolling is not considered an affordable option given the other competing pressures upon the roads budget.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71288]

Mr. Bayley: Expenditure on those people with a long term illness or disability is estimated to be £24.8 billion in 1998–99. This represents approximately 25 per cent. of total Social Security expenditure.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total savings to the social security budget, for the past five years, resulting from maintenance paid to families through the Child Support Agency. [71099]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

A breakdown of total savings to the Social Security budget from maintenance paid through the Child Support Agency

£ million

| Year | Benefit savings |
|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 418 |
| 1994–95 | 479 |
| 1995–96 | 493 |
| 1996–97 | 469 |
| 1997–98 | 464 |
| 1998–99 | 314 |

up to 31 December 1998

Note:

The figures include maintenance, collected or arranged which directly offsets benefit expenditure, together with estimated savings where a claim for Income Support ceases as a result of action by the Agency.

Transfer of Functions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on plans for the division of responsibilities between the Treasury and the Department of Social Security with respect to (a) answering parliamentary questions and (b) appearances before Select Committees following the implementation of the Social Security Contributions (Transfer of Functions, Etc.) Bill [Lords]. [71124]

Mr. Timms: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security, announced to the House on 8 February 1999, Official Report, columns 35–45, that Treasury Ministers would take on responsibility for policy on National Insurance on 1 April 1999. The Social Security Contributions (Transfer of Functions, Etc. Bill currently before Parliament transfers operational responsibility for National Insurance contributions, Statutory Sick Pay, Statutory Maternity pay and contracting out matters, together with control and management of the National Insurance Fund, to the Board of the Inland Revenue. It also transfers responsibility for policy on National Insurance contributions from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to Treasury Ministers.

Policy responsibility for Statutory Sick Pay, Statutory Maternity Pay, contracting out, credits, Home Responsibilities Protection and the security of the National Insurance Number system remains with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. He will also continue to be responsible for benefits. Ministers and, where appropriate, officials will be accountable to Parliament on the areas for which they are responsible. Treasury Ministers will answer questions relating to the Inland Revenue including those responsibilities transferred to it by the Bill. It is for the House to decide on the areas of responsibility for Select Committees.

Guaranteed Minimum Pension

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the additional annual cost of the introduction of the guaranteed minimum pension. [71373]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

The estimated additional cost from April 1999 to 2002 (the period covered by the comprehensive spending review settlement) of providing a minimum income guarantee for pensioners

| | 1999–2000 | 2000–01 | 2001–02 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost of introducing the minimum income guarantee | 495 | 6[1] | 840 |

Note:
The costs include the effect on Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit arising from increasing the rates in line with Income Support, and the additional numbers qualifying for full HB as a result of becoming entitled to the Minimum Income Guarantee.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the additional annual cost of increasing the state retirement pension to the same level as the guaranteed minimum pension. [71374]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer my right hon. Friend, the then Minister of State for Social Security, gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 18 November 1998, Official Report, columns 624–25.

Asylum Seekers (Fraud)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to investigate the level of social security fraud committed by asylum seekers. [71096]

Mr. Timms: Our estimates of fraud levels do not identify asylum seekers as a distinct group. However, we investigate fraud wherever it is alleged to occur, regardless of the category of the claimant involved.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security where an employee takes out a stakeholder pension through the access given by his employer and then changes job, what arrangements will ensure continued access to the same stakeholder pension. [71174]

Mr. Timms: The Green Paper "Partnership in Pensions" indicated that the requirement on employers to provide access to stakeholder pension schemes, including the deduction of contributions from pay, would initially apply only to a single scheme nominated by the employer. An employee who moved to a new employer with a different nominated scheme and who wished to remain in his or her current scheme would be able to do so, but would need to make his or her own arrangements for passing contributions to the scheme, unless the new employer agreed to pass on contributions on a voluntary basis.

We believe it would be desirable in the longer term to move to a position where employers would be required to pass employees' contributions to any stakeholder scheme. Before doing so, we would want to ensure that such a requirement did not impose an undue administrative burden on employers. The Green Paper indicates that we plan to consult further on the idea of a clearing house for contributions, which could be helpful in reducing the cost to employers of passing contributions to a number of different schemes.

Pensioners

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many non-married pensioners with income below £80 per week are (a) men and (b) women who are (i) 65 to 69, (ii) 70 to 74, (iii) 75 to 79 and (iv) 80 years or above; and if he will list separately the figures in each case for those who are (1) widows/widowers, (2) divorced or separated and (3) never married. [71176]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Non-married pensioners in Great Britain with income below £80 per week, by status—All non-married (non-cohabiting) pensioners

| Age band | Men | Women | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 65 to 69 | 30,000 | 100,000 | 130,000 |
| 70 to 74 | 20,000 | 180,000 | 200,000 |
| 75 to 79 | 40,000 | 190,000 | 220,000 |
| 80 or above | 60,000 | 270,000 | 330,000 |
| All 65 or above | 150,000 | 730,000 | 880,000 |

Widow/widower pensioners

| Age band | Men | Women | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 65 to 69 | 10,000 | 70,000 | 80,000 |
| 70 to 74 | 10,000 | 140,000 | 150,000 |
| 75 to 79 | 30,000 | 160,000 | 190,000 |
| 80 or above | 50,000 | 230,000 | 290,000 |
| All 65 or above | 100,000 | 600,000 | 710,000 |

Divorced or separated pensioners

| Age band | Men | Women | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 65 to 69 | 10,000 | 20,000 | 30,000 |
| 70 to 74 | 10,000 | 20,000 | 20,000 |
| 75 to 79 | [2] | 10,000 | 20,000 |
| 80 or above | [2] | 10,000 | 10,000 |
| All 65 or above | 20,000 | 60,000 | 80,000 |

Never-married pensioners

| Age band | Men | Women | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 65 to 69 | 10,000 | 10,000 | 20,000 |
| 70 to 74 | [2] | 20,000 | 20,000 |
| 75 to 79 | 10,000 | 20,000 | 20,000 |
| 80 or above | 10,000 | 20,000 | 30,000 |
| All 65 or above | 20,000 | 70,000 | 90,000 |

[2] Estimates of fewer than 5,000 pensioners

Notes:
1. Estimates are given to the nearest 10,000 pensioners, although they are not necessarily accurate to that degree. Components may not sum to totals due to rounding.
2. Estimates, particularly those for 'divorced or separated', 'never married' and male widowed pensioners, should be treated with caution since they are based on small sample sizes.
3. Income is defined as net income before housing costs at July 1996 prices.
4. Non-married pensioners who are currently cohabiting are excluded from the analysis.

Source:
Family Resources Survey, 1996–97

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate from the PENSIM simulation the numbers of pensioners eligible for the minimum income guarantee (a) under current arrangements and (b) if the Government's proposals on pensions are implemented in (i) 2000, (ii) 2010, (iii) 2020, (iv) 2030 and (v) 2040. [72192]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is given in the table.

| | 2000 | 2025 | 2050 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Current arrangements | 1 in 5 | 1 in 5 | 1 in 3 |
| After implementation of proposals (excluding effect of behavioural change) | 1 in 5 | 1 in 5 | 1 in 4 |

Notes:

1. The estimates of the numbers in receipt of the Minimum Income Guarantee under current arrangements are based on our intention, over the long-term and as resources permit, to uprate the Minimum Income Guarantee in line with average earnings.

2. Projections forward to the year 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions that need to be made in making these estimates. The estimates have been made by extrapolating estimates from the PENSIM model, but these can only give a broad indication of the likely order of magnitude of figures so far into the future.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1999, Official Report, columns 222–23, on income support, what assessment he has made of the gender breakdown of the one in four pensioners whom he expects to be on income support in 2050. [71437]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available. Projections forward to 2050 are subject to a high degree of uncertainty, given the number of assumptions that need to be made in making these estimates. Estimates have been made by extrapolating estimates from the PENSIM model, but these can only give a broad indication of the likely order of magnitude of figures so far into the future.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the effects of his over-indexation of income support rates for pensioners on the number of pensioners receiving (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit in 1999–2000. [71957]

Mr. Timms: It is estimated that, as a result of increasing the Income Support rates for pensioners above price indexation in April 1999, an additional 5,000 pensioners will become entitled to Housing Benefit and an additional 10,000 cases will become entitled to Council Tax Benefit.

Notes:

1. The estimates are based on the 1995–6 Family Resources Survey and have been adjusted by administrative data. Figures are uprated to 1999–2000 prices and benefit levels and rounded to the nearest 5,000 cases.

2. Pensioners are defined as pensioner benefit units at and above State pension age, (at least one of SPA or above), rather than individual Pensioners.

3. The two figures do not sum. Pensioners entitled to Housing Benefit will also be entitled to Council Tax Benefit, but not all Council Tax Benefit recipients will be receiving Housing Benefit.

Widows

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the rights of women who are widowed (a) before and (b) after pension age in respect of their late husband's state second pension. [71177]

Angela Eagle: We intend that men and women widowed over State pension age will be able to inherit half the State second pension entitlement of their late spouse (subject to the overall maximum). In line with the proposals for bereavement benefits currently before Parliament, those with dependent children who are widowed before State pension age will also be able to inherit half their late spouse's State second pension entitlement as part of their Widowed Parent's Allowance. Those without dependent children will be able to inherit half their late spouse's State second pension entitlement when they reach State pension age (again subject to the overall maximum).

LISA

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the current charging levels of unit trusts, with respect to the feasibility of incorporating lifetime individual savings accounts within the stakeholder pension framework. [71173]

Mr. Timms: The consultation paper "Helping to deliver stakeholder pensions" indicates that the proposed new investment mechanism could be used for all existing types of defined contribution pension scheme and, in due course, for stakeholder pension schemes.

Pooled investment schemes, including unit trusts, typically take most of their income from an annual percentage charge on the funds under management and should therefore be well placed to deliver flexible arrangements with charges that do not penalise individuals who stop paying in, or who wish to transfer their pension savings to another scheme. Details of the minimum standards that all stakeholder pension schemes will be required to meet, including those on charges, will be set out in due course.

New Deal

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the types of benefit received by those leaving the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds to transfer to other benefits. [71186]

Angela Eagle: Of the 82,600 young people who have left the New Deal up to November 1998 (the latest date for which figures are available) 10,150, 12 per cent. of all leavers, have claimed other benefits. Of these, 5,600 have claimed Incapacity Benefit, 1,700 have claimed Income Support and 2,850 have claimed other benefits for which no detailed breakdown by benefit is available.

NIRS2

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many extra staff have been recruited to compensate for the delays in the NIRS2 project; how many of these staff are (a) short-term and (b) part-time workers; what has been the cost of employing these staff including employment on-costs; and how much of this cost is recoverable from Anderson Consulting. [71788]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 556.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for which customers and from what dates the Contributions Agency has declined to accept national insurance contributions because of an inability to record those contributions; how many customers are affected; how much revenue has been lost; and how it will be recovered. [71784]

Mr. Timms: The Contributions Agency has never declined to accept National Insurance contributions from its customers or contributors because of an inability to record the contributions paid on the new National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2).

However, there have been some situations where the Department has been unable to register an individual to pay Class 2 self-employed contributions either by the Direct Debit or quarterly payment method as a consequence of the delays in introducing the NIRS2 on-line facilities.

The Department identified approximately 160,000 customers who were affected by the delays and provided them with information. Contingency arrangements were invoked where appropriate to minimise the impacts to customers.

Since the introduction of the on-line facility, the Agency has cleared approximately 31,000 cases from the 160,000 outstanding backlog cases. It is also continuing to action all new applications as they are received.

Collections of all outstanding Class 2 liabilities affected by the delays will be handled sensitively.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the objectives of the NIRS2 project; when the final decision was taken to implement the project; on what dates revisions of the objectives were approved; what has been the expenditure on this project to date; and if he will list the remaining implementation milestones to completion. [71770]

Mr. Timms: The objectives of the NIRS2 project were to develop a new computer system that would replace the ageing NIRS1 system and to support the legislative changes brought about by the Pensions Act 1995.

The original NIRS2 Agreement was to deliver the system in 3 releases between February 1997 and April 1999. A subsequent Deed of Agreement was agreed in July 1996, which allowed for a phased delivery of the first release. Although incorporating the original time frame, the phasing of delivery between those dates was significantly altered.

Release 1a

The agreement delivery date of 10 February 1997 was achieved.

Release 1b

The original agreement date of 27 October 1997 was not achieved. Delivery took place on the 28 January 1998.

Release 1c

The original agreement date of 6 April 1998 was not achieved. Part of the service was delivered on the 13 July 1998, and final acceptance took place on the 28 August 1998.

Release 2–3 is the remaining milestone. The agreed delivery date is the 6 April 1999, and this is still the current target. A maintenance release incorporating changes requested by the business is also planned for 6 April 1999.

As reported by the National Audit Office on 29 May 1997 the cost of implementing the NIRS2 computer system is likely to be around £134 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what studies have been commissioned under the Housing Benefit Computing Strategy Study; when such studies were commissioned; what agencies are employed in the study; how much expenditure has been committed so far; and what are the implementation milestones to completion. [71786]

Angela Eagle: The Housing Benefit Computing Strategy (HBCS) study was announced on 5 March 1996 to explore the benefits of integrating local authority Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit (HB/CTB) computer systems with the next generation of departmental computer systems. A range of studies were commissioned in 1996. They included a national survey of local authorities (to establish details of their existing systems and their attitude towards a national computing system); an HB/CTB process mapping exercise (to baseline the business requirements of an integrated system) and a financial analysis (to model the costs and benefits for the department and local authorities of such a system).

Further analytical work has been undertaken during the course of 1997 and 1998. At present, only the Department is involved in continuing work, but local authority Housing Benefit practitioners and a number of consultancy firms have been involved in the past. Excluding civil service and local authority costs, expenditure of approximately £640,000 has been committed so far. The study into whether Departmental computer systems should take account of HB/CTB is continuing. Integration of local authority and Departmental computer systems is a major undertaking and progress is dependent on the implementation of the Department's overall information systems/information technology strategy. Final decisions on the outcome of the HBCS study and any future implementation plans will be dependent on this.

Smartcard

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the objectives of the benefits payments smartcard project; on what date the final decision was taken to implement the project; what has been the expenditure on the project so far; and if he will list the remaining implementation milestones to completion. [71764]

Mr. Timms: The Benefits Agency is involved, with Post Office Counters Ltd., in a Programme to automate post offices and benefit payments. The objectives of this Programme are:

To deliver a secure method of paying benefits at post offices;

To develop a system that meets recognised accountancy practices;

For automation to provide greater commercial opportunities enabling Post Office Counters Ltd. to improve competitiveness and increase efficiency;

To provide an improved level of service to all customers.

The project is being taken forward under the Private Finance Initiative and the contract was awarded to ICL Pathway on 15 May 1996.

To date, the Department's expenditure amounts to £241 million. This expenditure provides a range of services and an Information Technology infrastructure that will also support our wider programme of modernisation.

The Programme is presently undergoing a limited trial in the North East and South West of England using the Benefit Payment Service to pay Child Benefit and the Order Book Control Service to record bar coded order books. The remaining milestones consist of the completion of post office automation nationally, the introduction of card payment for all other benefits and the delivery of the remaining services; the Electronic Point of Sale Service which records post office product sales; and the Automated Payment Service that provides automated bill payment facilities.

Child Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he requires customers receiving child benefit to distinguish between children of different relationships. [71709]

Angela Eagle: Generally, a person who is responsible for a child either because the child is living with them, or because they are contributing regularly towards the maintenance of the child, will be eligible for Child Benefit. The relationship between the child and the person claiming is immaterial.

Where competing claims are received in respect of the same child and both claimants live at the same address, a parent will have priority of title over a person who is not the child's parent. Step-parents and legally adoptive parents are treated as natural parents.

Accord Project

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the objectives of (a) the accord project and (b) the assist computerisation project; on what date the final decision was taken to implement the project; what was the expenditure on each project; and if he will list the remaining implementation milestones to completion. [71781]

Mr. Timms: The Access to Corporate Data (ACCORD) Procurement project was established to provide the Department with long term supply options to take forward the delivery of the new generation of Information Systems/Information Technology (IS/IT) needed to underpin the modernisation of the Welfare State. The procurement set out to establish Private Finance Initiative/Private Public Partnership arrangements with suitable service providers.

The announcement of the selected service providers (AFFINITY, ARCWAY and 1ACCORD) to take this work forward on behalf of the Department was made on 5 November 1998, Official Report, column 646. Specific business allocations will be made to the service providers under the provision of an overarching IS/IT Services Agreement. Milestones for these individual projects will then be defined as part of the projects management activity.

The ACCORD Procurement Project team has, since its inception in 1996, cost in the order of £3.8 million. No payments have yet been made to any service provider as a result of the procurement project. Expenditure commitments will be linked to the business allocations made under the IS/IT Services Agreement.

The ASSIST (Analytical Services Statistical Information System) Project was established to produce a comprehensive statistical package to support statisticians and policy makers within the Department, with final approval for the implementation of the system given on 9 February 1998. The final milestone will be the roll out of the Data Repository to users in the Departments Analytical Services Division from 5 April 1999. Total expenditure from April 1995 to the end of the financial year 1998–99 is expected to be £6.2 million.

Benefits Agency Offices (Closure)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he first assessed the advantages of closing the Benefits Agency offices in Abingdon and Wantage. [71688]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave him on 18 November 1998, Official Report, column 629.

Reviews and Task Forces

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71512]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

| Review | Cost | Reports |
|---|---|---|
| Review of the major components of the Social Security system | Costs are subsumed within the Department's ordinary running costs. | Green paper: "New Ambitions for Our Country: A new contract for welfare", published 26 March 1998. Decisions on support for disabled people, bereavement benefits and a single work-focused gateway to the benefits system for working age people will be taken forward in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. Further announcements in due course. |

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of extending entitlement to invalid care allowance to those above state pension age. [71498]

Mr. Bayley: Extending eligibility for Invalid Care Allowance to people initially claiming aged 65 years or over would cost an estimated £30 million in terms of benefit expenditure in 1999–2000, including the cost of increased eligibility for carer premium within the income related benefits.

Note:

The expenditure estimate has been given at 1998–99 prices and is rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Source:

1996–97 Family Resources Survey. Due to limitations in the survey data the estimate should be treated with caution.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71855]

Mr. Timms: In common with other Departments, the work of press officers in this Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

As this is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

"A New Contract for Welfare"

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list changes made to the proposals in the Green Paper, "A New Contract for Welfare: Support in Bereavement and Support for Disabled People", as a result of the consultations he undertook. [72187]

Mr. Bayley: An announcement will be made shortly.

Back-to-work Bonuses

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Back-to-Work bonuses have been paid in each year since the introduction of the scheme. [72186]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Number of back to work bonuses made

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 7 October–31 December 1996 | 1,374 |
| January–December 1997 | 41,353 |

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of individuals who will lose entitlement under his changes to incapacity benefit and the numbers who, as a result, will claim means-tested assistance. [72191]

Mr. Bayley: Most of the people who would be affected by the proposal to take some account of occupational and personal pensions over £50 a week will continue to receive Incapacity Benefit. The estimated reduction in the number of people on Incapacity Benefit as a result of the proposed change to the National Insurance contribution conditions is 30,000 in year one, 60,000 in year three and 120,000 in year ten. Approximately 70 per cent. of these people will already be receiving income-based Jobseeker's Allowance or Income Support when their claim for Incapacity Benefit is made and we would expect their entitlement to means-tested benefit to continue.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the change in the number of people claiming incapacity benefit (a) in the six pilot areas of the New Deal for Disabled People and (b) in control areas. [72356]

Mr. Bayley: We are piloting a Personal Adviser Service under the New Deal for Disabled People in 12 areas. The first six pilots were launched on 28 September, and pilots in the remaining six areas are expected to start in the Spring. The latest available information about Incapacity Benefit caseloads in the pilot areas relates to August 1998, before the pilots started. Data are collected quarterly, and information for the quarter ending November 1998 will be available at the end of March.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many widows currently receive incapacity benefit on the basis of their husband's contributions; what is the total cost of the payments; and what is the average payment received; [72354]

(2) how many widows and widowers he estimates will not be able to claim incapacity benefit on the basis of their spouses' contributions as result of the changes proposed in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. [72353]

Mr. Bayley: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows. It is estimated there may be up to 2,000 successful claims a year to Incapacity Benefit on the basis of a late spouse's contributions. We estimate that about 1,500 people will be affected in the first year and 5,000 in the long run by the proposed changes to the contribution conditions.

Housing and Council Tax Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have claimed housing benefit and council tax benefit extension period for each year since the introduction of the concession. [72189]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Housing benefit/council tax benefit extended payments

| | Housing benefit | Council tax benefit |
|---|---|---|
| 1996–97 | | |
| Total extended payment applications | 110,000 | 100,000 |
| Number of successful applications | 87,000 | 85,000 |
| Percentage of successful applications | 82 | 83 |
| 1997–98 Provisional | | |
| Total extended payment applications | 170,000 | 170,000 |
| Number of successful applications | 150,000 | 140,000 |
| Percentage of successful applications | 85 | 85 |

Notes:
1. Figures have been rounded to two significant figures.
2. Figures refer to a benefit unit, which may be a single person or a couple.
3. 1997–98 figures are provisional. Final figures will be released in HB/CTB Quarterly Summary.
4. Statistics—May 1998, on 25 February 1999.

SERPS

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of men with SERPS entitlement who retired between 1986 and 1996. [72044]

Mr. Timms: We estimate that there are approximately 2 million male pensioners in Great Britain, who are aged between 68 and 78 and who have some entitlement to additional pension from SERPS.

Source:
5 per cent. sample of the Pensions Strategy Computer System (PSCS) drawn at January 1999.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the men with SERPS entitlements who retired between 1986 and 1996 he estimates may have made financial arrangements on the basis of the incomplete information included in DSS leaflets NP45 and NP46 published between 1986 and spring 1996. [72045]

Mr. Timms: We estimate that there are approximately 2 million male pensioners in Great Britain who retired between 1986 and 1996 and who have some SERPS entitlement. They will have made their financial arrangements on the basis of various sources of information.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to write to all the men with SERPS entitlements who retired between 1986 and 1996 whose decisions may have been affected by the incomplete information provided in DSS leaflets NP45 and NP46 between 1986 and spring 1996; and if he will compensate all those who have been affected. [72046]

Mr. Timms: We are considering ways to heighten general awareness of the reduction from 100 per cent. to 50 per cent. in the amount of SERPS which can be inherited by a surviving spouse from 6 April 2000. Current widows and those widowed before 6 April 2000 will not be affected by this change. Existing compensation arrangements can offer redress to those who can show that their financial decisions have been affected to their detriment by misleading information provided by the Department.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72012]

Angela Eagle: All of the business awarded to KPMG has been competitively tendered amongst a selection of suppliers, under the Computer and Related Services Framework Agreement, which has been in place since 1 June 1996. No records are available prior to this date.

This Framework is covered by the provisions of the EC Services Directive (92/50/EEC), which came into effect on 1 July 1993. This ensures that all tender exercises are compliant with EC Procurement legislation.

This Department spends in the order of £60 million per annum under the Computer and Related Services Framework Agreement on consultancy and contractor services, under 2 per cent. of which has been spent with KPMG during the whole period of the Framework. All contracts of over £10k are listed in the table, three other minor contracts below this value have been awarded.

| Date | Service provided | Value (£) |

Annuities

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate on the basis of the figures provided by the Government Actuary the weekly income which could be purchased via an indexed annuity by (a) a man and (b) a woman, aged 65 years with an accumulated sum of £10,000 from a stakeholder pension if that annuity was intended to last (i) for a fixed period of 10 years and (ii) until death. [72182]

Mr. Timms: £10,000 would provide an annuity income of £730 per annum for a man and £630 per annum for a woman. Both of these are payable for life. The Inland Revenue's rules do not permit a retirement annuity to be payable for a fixed period of ten years.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the final figures of cases under the Benefit Integrity Project following its conclusion on 31 March. [72355]

Mr. Bayley: Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) statistics for the period ending 31 March 1999 will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses by the end of April 1999. BIP cases being actioned on 31 March 1999 will continue to be processed. Statistical information will continue to be provided as these cases pass through all stages of adjudication, including review and appeal.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 378, on stakeholder pensioners, if he will provide corresponding estimates of income as a percentage of the minimum income guarantee for (i) 10 years and (ii) 15 years after retirement. [72183]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

| Number of years after retirement | Pension as a proportion of the Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) Earnings-indexed MIG (%) | Price-indexed MIG (%) |
|---|---|---|
| 0 | 110 | 240 |
| 10 | 90 | 200 |
| 15 | 80 | 175 |

Notes:
1. The hypothetical individual in this example is assumed to begin work at 16 years old in 2002; work for 49 years until retirement; and earn £10,000 per annum in 1998 earnings terms throughout their working life.
2. Only National Insurance rebates are paid into the stakeholder pension scheme.
3. Real earnings growth is assumed to be 1.5 per cent.
4. Percentages are rounded to the nearest 5 per cent.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what data sources are available to him which would enable him to assess long-term trends in the living standard of widows over pension age relative to other groups of people over pension age. [71958]

Angela Eagle: Information on incomes of widows over pension age and other groups of people over pension age is available from the Family Expenditure Survey for selected years between 1979 and 1996–97. Such information is also available from the Family Resources Survey from 1994–95 to 1996–97. Reliable estimates may not be available from these sources for all years, or for certain subgroups of people over pension age, due to small sample sizes.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 379, on pensions, if he will provide a breakdown of the total package between (i) the minimum income guarantee, (ii) winter fuel payments, (iii) free eye tests and (iv) concessionary travel, and indicate in each case how the expenditure is phased over the three year period. [72040]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Estimated DSS expenditure based on comprehensive spending review forecasts

£ million

| Year | Mimimum Income Guarantee[1] | Winter Fuel Payments |
|---|---|---|
| 1999–2001 | 495 | 155 |
| 2000–01 | 670 | 160 |
| 2001–02 | 840 | 165 |

[1] This includes additional cost for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

In addition, costs in the region of between £120 million and £150 million per annum (depending on take up) will be incurred by the Department of Health in respect of free eye tests for people aged 60 and over. the introduction of a national minimum scheme for pensioners on buses depends on the passage of primary legislation.

Bereavement Allowance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he estimates it would cost to extend the payment of bereavement allowance from six months to (a) one year, (b) two years, (c) three years, (d) four years and (e) five years. [72282]

Angela Eagle: The following is the information:

Additional cost of extending bereavement allowance

| | 2001 | 2005 | 2020 |
|---|---|---|---|
| One year | 10 | 30 | 50 |
| Two years | 10 | 90 | 150 |
| Three years | 10 | 140 | 200 |
| Four years | 10 | 180 | 250 |
| Five years | 10 | 200 | 350 |

Notes:
1. Figures are in 1998–99 prices and are rounded to the nearest £10 million. Figures for year 2020–21 are rounded to the nearest £50 million. The estimates for 2020–21 are broad orders of magnitude and are provided for illustrative purposes only.
2. Estimates are presented net of means-tested benefit offsets, in line with those in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill. Means-tested benefit offsets were estimated using the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiries. They assume a constant offset ratio for each year.

Vouchers

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will release the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee concerning luncheon vouchers and other vouchers. [72281]

Mr. Timms: We are considering the Social Security Advisory Committee's report on regulations to bring non-cash vouchers into line with the treatment of cash earnings for National Insurance contribution purposes. Where the Committee reports on a set of regulations, the Secretary of State is required to publish it, and the Government's response, when tabling the regulations. There is no requirement to publish the Committee's report where a decision is taken not to table the regulations. We shall make a further statement shortly.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the latest available year the value of benefits paid by his Department to claimants in the (a) Liverpool and (b) Wirral areas. [72185]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables. Where a benefit is paid centrally its value cannot be broken down to local figures, unless it is paid with a locally administered benefit such as Income Support.

The value of benefit claims for the Financial Year 1997–98, period ending March 1998, for Liverpool and Wirral areas

| Benefits | Liverpool | Wirral |
|---|---|---|
| Attendance Allowance[1] | 41,436,945 | 11,854,879 |
| Community Care Grants | 3,321,647 | 833,135 |
| Disability Living Allowance[1] | 25,840,578 | 6,324,555 |
| Funeral Payments | 94,884 | 22,665 |
| Incapacity Benefit | 210,017,961 | 66,275,699 |
| Income Support | 380,229,248 | 106,703,915 |
| Industrial Death Benefit | 868,650 | 533,175 |
| Industrial Injuries Benefit | 11,543,984 | 8,578,417 |
| Job Seekers Allowance | 105,322,360 | 29,589,854 |
| Maternity Allowance | 278,828 | 115,242 |

The value of benefit claims for the Financial Year 1997–98, period ending March 1998, for Liverpool and Wirral areas

| Benefits | Liverpool | Wirral |
|---|---|---|
| Maternity Expenses | 484,029 | 140,829 |
| Retirement Pension[1] | 382,241,952 | 140,576,855 |
| Severe Disablement Allowance | 22,899,682 | 7,067,890 |
| Widows Benefit | 13,987,575 | 4,675,006 |
| Winter Fuel Payments | 3,051,760 | 1,002,410 |
| Xmas Bonus | 1,737,431 | 608,596 |
| Other[2] | 43,961 | 23,244 |
| Total | 1,203,401,475 | 384,926,366 |

[1] The benefits marked are centrally paid benefits and the full value of these benefits paid in Liverpool and Wirral is not shown. The amounts shown are only the value of the benefit where it is combined with a locally paid benefit such as Income Support.

[2] The "other" figure consists of the remaining benefits whose value individually are small.

Notes:

1. Other centrally administered benefits that could not be shown in the table are: War Pensions, Family Credit, Child Benefit, Earnings Top-Up, Disabled Working Allowance, and Invalid Care Allowance.
2. Liverpool consists of Knowsley, Liverpool Mersey, Liverpool North and Sefton Districts. The BA local offices which make up these districts are: Liverpool Huyton, Liverpool Kirkby, Liverpool Belle Vale, Liverpool Edgehill, Liverpool Garston, Liverpool Toxteth, Liverpool Breckfield, Liverpool West Derby, Liverpool Bootle, Liverpool Crosby and Southport.
3. Wirral is one BA district with Birkenhead and Wallasey local offices.
4. Figures are provisional and subject to change.

| Housing Benefit Subsidy | 137,797,161 | 39,894,852 |
| Council Tax Benefit Subsidy | 80,723,071 | 19,439,489 |
| Total | 218,520,232 | 59,334,341 |

Notes:

1. Local Authorities included above are Knowsley, Liverpool, Sefton and Wirral.
2. The amounts for Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit represent the subsidies paid to Local Authorities by the Department as opposed to the actual amount of benefit paid to claimants by the Local Authorities.
3. Figures may be subject to change at audit.

Asbestosis

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many United Kingdom civilians employed in war-related work have received war pensions for asbestosis since 1969; and what factors led to their award. [72000]

Mr. Bayley: As at 31 December 1998, there were 3,183 civilians receiving a War Disablement Pension. However, information on how many of these pensions relate to asbestosis, how many pensions have been awarded since 1969 and what factors led to their award is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Second Pension

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the additional annual cost of the second pension in (a) 10, (b) 15, (c) 20 and (d) 25 years' time. [71372]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

The estimated gross public expenditure costs of the state second pension

£ billion 1998–99 prices

| Year | SERPS | SSP | Difference, net of Income Related Benefit effects |
|---|---|---|---|
| 2010 | 9.4 | 9.0 | –0.4 |
| 2015 | 11.0 | 10.7 | –0.4 |
| 2020 | 12.0 | 11.9 | –0.3 |
| 2025 | 13.2 | 13.8 | 0.0 |

Notes:

1. This shows the net public expenditure effects of the difference between the costs of SERPS and Second State Pension (SSP), taking into account the effects of income related benefits.
2. The SSP figures include all expenditure on State second-tier pensions, including SERPS pensions already in payment and pre-2002–03 SERPS accruals yet to come into payment.
3. These figures exclude the effect of the introduction of stakeholder pensions, which is expected to lead to higher levels of contracting out.

WALES

Millennium Celebrations

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make additional funds available to the ambulance service and the fire service in Wales, above their normal revenue budgets, to meet the one-off costs associated with the millennium celebrations. [70308]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: No additional funding is being made available to the ambulance or fire service in respect of the millennium celebrations.

Following the transfer of functions, this matter will be a responsibility of the National Assembly.

Aricept

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which area health authorities in Wales fund the prescription of the drug Donepezil Hydrochloride (Aricept) to treat Alzheimer's disease. [71486]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Generally, Health Authorities do not set aside funding for specific drugs, whether these are prescribed by GPs or by hospital doctors.

On 29 May 1998 the Chief Medical Officer circulated to clinicians and pharmacists in Wales the advice of the Standing Medical Advisory Committee that treatment with Donepezil should be initiated and supervised only by a specialist experienced in the management of dementia, that the benefit should be assessed at 12 weeks, and that treatment should continue only for those patients who have benefited from its use.

There is, therefore, no Departmental prohibition on the use of Donepezil in Wales but Health Authorities have to consider its use in the light of their locally determined priorities. The Dyfed Powys Health Authority has set up a formal referral system and Iechyd Morgannwg Health have decided to treat patients within the protocol of a randomised control trial. The Gwent, North Wales and Bro Taf Health Authorities are reconsidering their position and are expected shortly to propose formal arrangements for the use of Donepezil in their areas.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reviews, task forces and advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71517]

Mr. Michael: I will write to the right hon. Member as soon as possible, and will place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Underground Spoil (Grovesend)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the potential implications for (a) public health and (b) traffic on the M4 of the burning of underground spoil at Grovesend. [71295]

Mr. Hain: Responsibility for the health of the population of the area around Grovesend lies primarily with Morgannwg Health Authority. I understand that both the Health Authority and Swansea County Council have been monitoring and assessing the implications of underground burning of the tip at Grovesend.

The traffic position has been discussed with the police and local authorities in the area and resources have been made available to establish extra road signs, which will be erected shortly. A diversionary route has also been discussed and proposals for signing this have been put to the affected local authorities. It is considered that implications on traffic will diminish through the summer months but even with a start on works to address the problem in the near future, it will be some time before the position is substantially improved.

This is clearly a very serious problem. While others have primary responsibility for dealing with it, Welsh Office officials are working with the various interested parties to try to resolve the problem and I have called for regular reports on progress.

Nurses

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many whole time equivalent nurses were employed in Wales on 31 January. [71155]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on NHS staff is currently collected centrally on a quarterly basis. At 30 September 1998, the latest date for which information is available, there were 23,691 whole-time equivalent staff directly employed by the NHS in the nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff group.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

NHS Managers

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of managers in the NHS in Wales in each of the last five years. [71165]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on a comparable basis is available only for the last three years and is given in the following table. Prior to this the term "manager" was only applied to persons in the administrative and clerical grades. The whole-time equivalent number of managers in this group was 1,292 in 1994 and 1,350 in 1995.

Managers directly employed by the NHS in Wales

It should be noted that data may underestimate the true position as some non-medical staff (1.5 per cent. in 1995, 0.3 per cent. in 1997 and 0.2 per cent. in 1998) did not have a valid occupation code and have not, therefore, been assigned centrally to a staff group or grade.
Some staff in this group were erroneously included with administrative and estates staff during 1996.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Princess of Wales Hospital

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many doctors are employed at the Princess of Wales Hospital in Bridgend; and how many were employed there in May 1997. [71169]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on hospital doctors is collected by the NHS Trust as at 30 September each year. At 30 September 1997, the latest date for which information is available, there were 180 hospital doctors employed in the Bridgend and District NHS Trust which related to a whole-time equivalent of 157.5.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Meningitis

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost to date of tackling the meningitis outbreak in the Bro Taf Health Authority area. [72258]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Details of the costs incurred by Bro Taf Health Authority during the recent outbreak are not held centrally. No additional funding has been sought from the Welsh Office and no additional costs have been incurred by my Department.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost of advertising information relating to the meningitis outbreak to the public in Wales during the recent outbreak. [72253]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Department has incurred no additional expenditure: all publicity material available has been produced as part of the Department's on-going meningitis awareness campaign.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last had discussions with the National Meningitis Trust. [72260]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Welsh Office officials have had discussions with the National Meningitis Trust and that organisation has been invited to nominate a representative to join the group that I have set up to examine meningitis in Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what extra resources have been provided to the Bro Taf Health Authority to meet the cost of the meningitis outbreak. [72259]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: No additional funding has been sought by, or provided to, Bro Taf Health Authority. Each Health Authority receives an element of discretionary funding in their annual resource allocation which is for the Health Authority to spend according to their priorities in their area.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last had discussions with the Meningitis Research Foundation. [72261]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Welsh Office officials have had discussions with the Meningitis Research Foundation and that organisation has been asked to nominate a representative to join the group that I have set up to examine meningitis in Wales.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action is being taken to educate people in South Wales about meningitis. [72257]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: A bilingual leaflet entitled "Knowing About Meningitis and Septicaemia", containing advice on recognising the signs and symptoms of meningitis, is widely available. This information is also included in the "The Guide to Childhood Immunisation" given to all new mothers.

There is also a successful yearly campaign "Look out for your mate" in universities and colleges.

Helplines and advice are made available to local people by Health Authorities when an outbreak occurs.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Ford Motor Company

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the meetings he has had with representatives of the Ford Motor Company since he became Secretary of State; and if he will make a statement. [72256]

Mr. Michael: I have met representatives of the Ford Motor Company on two occasions:

23 November 1998 at the Welsh Office in London.

25 January on a visit to the Ford factory at Bridgend with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Trade Unions (Meetings)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the meetings he has had with trade unions over the last six weeks in his official capacity. [72255]

Mr. Michael: Over the last six weeks I have met representatives of trade unions on two occasions:

5 January

Trade union side at Bronglais Hospital. During the course of this visit I also met members of the management of Ceredigion NHS Trust, Dyfed Powys Health Authority, and various other representatives.

17 February

UNISON about Sully Hospital.

I make it a matter of course to meet trade unions during the industrial visits I undertake, for instance Ford at Bridgend, and BAE and Raytheon at Broughton.

Over the same period, the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) has also had two meetings with representatives of trade unions:

1 February

Unions at Lucas SEI;

11 February

NUT.

National Assembly (Opening Ceremony)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost of the opening ceremony of the National Assembly for Wales. [72251]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 683.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71859]

Mr. Michael: Rebuttals of allegations in the media are made in my Department by individual press officers either through telephone calls to the organisation concerned, or through an appropriate letter signed by an official or a Minister. Generally, it is found that reporting of Welsh matters in the regional and national media is of a response nature, and the need for rebuttals is infrequent. For that reason, there is no special unit in the Department to handle rebuttals, and no record is kept centrally of the number or cost of rebuttals.

Teacher Morale

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on teacher morale. [72033]

Mr. Hain: Teaching is a demanding and vitally important profession. Our White Paper "Building Excellent Schools Together" (Cm 3701) acknowledged, however, that teachers' professionalism had been disdained all too often over the last decade; that morale had been badly damaged; and that this had to stop.

We have recently published our Green Paper "The Best for Teaching and Learning In Wales" on the future of the teaching profession in Wales. The Green Paper offers fundamental reform and the opportunity to give teachers the recognition and support they deserve. In return for a newly enhanced professionalism, greater individual accountability, more flexibility and still higher standards, its proposals set out measures that would offer teachers higher status, better prospects, a more rewarding career structure, less bureaucracy and more freedom to teach. We are undertaking a widespread consultation with all interested parties on these proposals

We have also undertaken to establish a General Teaching Council for Wales to maintain high professional standards in Wales and promote a positive image of teaching both within the teaching profession and to those outside.

Following the transfer of functions, these issues will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Class Sizes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on class sizes in infant schools. [72030]

Mr. Hain: The January 1998 annual Schools' Census showed the following percentages of pupils in Wales were educated in classes of 30 or less:

| Year group | Usual age of pupils | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| Reception | 5 | 74.3 |
| Year 1 | 6 | 66.4 |
| Year 2 | 7 | 62.5 |
| Other key stage 1 classes of mixed year groups | | 74.9 |

At January 1998, there were 30,734 pupils in Key Stage 1 classes of over 30 pupils.

In 1998–1999, £3.7 million in infant class size reduction grant has been allocated to local education authorities across Wales. It is estimated that more than 270 additional teachers have been taken on using this grant, with more than 700 classes being brought down to 30 pupils or less. This means that there are now 23,500 more Welsh infants in classes of less than 30 than there would have been without the grant. The 1999 Schools' Census will give the actual position.

In 1999–2000, £11.3 million will be available to local education authorities to continue funding existing measures and to make further progress in tackling the remainder of the problem. Local education authorities have submitted bids for 1999–2000 infant class size reduction grant and successful bids will be announced by end March. Eligible expenditure in the 1999–2000 round includes teachers' salaries, minor refurbishment works and the capital costs of new build classrooms and demountable classrooms.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Nursery Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate (a) how many and (b) what percentage of nursery age children are in nursery education in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [72027]

Mr. Hain: In line with the Government's commitment to nursery education, a free, at least part-time education place has been available under local early years development plans from September 1998 to all four year olds whose parents want this, from the term following the fourth birthday. Local early years development partnerships can decide to secure and fund places in the maintained or non-maintained sector, provided they work within an agreed quality assurance framework.

There were 25,590 children in maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools, as at January 1998. This is 35 per cent. of 3 and 4 year olds.

In addition, there were 29,346 children under 5 years old who attended ordinary or special classes in maintained schools. This represents a further 40 per cent. of 3 and 4 year olds.

Non-maintained settings also provide nursery education places for three and four year olds which are funded under local early years development plans. Information on the number of such places is not yet available centrally but should be in late Spring when draft plans for school year 1999–2000 are submitted to the Secretary of State for approval.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact upon Wales of the Social Exclusion Unit. [72029]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Monmouth (Mr. Edwards) on 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 612.

New Deal

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employers are involved in the New Deal for the (i) young unemployed and (ii) long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement. [72031]

Mr. Hain: The latest statistics produced by the Department for Education and Employment indicate that up to the end of December 1998, over 2,900 employers in Wales had signed up to provide subsidised jobs for the New Deal for 18–24 year olds or for the New Deal for the 25 plus.

I am very encouraged by these figures. From the outset we made it quite clear that the involvement of employers was crucial to the success of the New Deal in Wales. We have made an excellent start and I look forward to this continuing.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Date-based Export Scheme

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers about (a) their views on and (b) the willingness of their members to participate in, the date-based export scheme; and if he will make a statement. [70867]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Minister met the Federation of Fresh Meat Wholesalers on 12 January and I met them today. Officials have had a number of meetings with them about the Date-Based Export Scheme and the Federation wrote on 22 January responding to the consultation on our proposals for operating the scheme.

The Federation has expressed reservations about the attractiveness of the scheme to potential exporters. They see the requirement for plants to be dedicated to the slaughter of export eligible animals as a major drawback and have advised that their members are unwilling to commit to this requirement. They suggest that it will not be possible for the industry to export profitably under the scheme as it is currently planned to operate.

Nevertheless, the Federation recognises the importance of setting a date from which the UK is allowed to resume exports. I agree with them that the scheme rules are difficult and we expect the uptake to be low initially. But given the current climate of concern about BSE in other Member States, I believe then we could not have negotiated a more liberal scheme.

Covent Garden

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to dispose of the fruit, flower and vegetable market at New Covent Garden. [70888]

Mr. Rooker: We intend to dispose of the assets of the Covent Garden Market Authority as soon as parliamentary time can be found for the necessary legislation.

Meat Hygiene

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the meat hygiene costs borne by the livestock industry in England and Wales in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; [70944]

(2) if he will list the meat hygiene (a) charges to and (b) costs borne by the (i) UK and (ii) EU member states' livestock industries which result from EU regulations; [70920]

(3) which meat hygiene costs in other member states of the EU are borne by (a) public authorities and (b) the relevant livestock industry; and in cases where costs are shared, if he will indicate the proportions paid. [70922]

Mr. Rooker: Council Directive 85/73/EEC (as amended) on the financing of veterinary inspections and controls requires Member States to recover the costs of those hygiene inspections conducted at licensed fresh meat plants in accordance with harmonised EC meat hygiene rules. The Directive sets standard charges (in ECU) applicable in all Member States for hygiene inspections of red meat, poultry meat and game meat, with rates varying depending on the species and size of animals being slaughtered. Subject to meeting specified criteria, such as the efficiency of operations at individual plants, the Directive provides for the standard charge to be abated by up to 55 per cent. Conversely, where the actual cost of inspection exceeds the standard charge, the Directive provides for actual costs to be charged. Similar principles apply in respect of charges in licensed cutting plants.

The total cost to the meat industry of hygiene inspections carried out in Great Britain by the Meat Hygiene Service in 1996–97 was £26.0 million and in 1997–98 was £29.8 million.

The actual level of hygiene inspection charges levied on individual meat plants in other Member States is set by the appropriate competent authority within the framework laid down by Directive 85/73/EEC. I am currently seeking information about the level of such charges, including the extent to which hygiene inspection costs are borne by public authorities. Once I have received this information I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning methods of enforcement of meat hygiene regulations in other EU states as compared to enforcement in the United Kingdom and the impact of any differences on the competitiveness of UK products; and if he will make a statement. [71158]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission's Food and Veterinary Office (FVO) is responsible for ensuring that individual EU member States comply with their Community public health obligations, including the enforcement of the EU meat hygiene Directive. The FVO carries out a regular programme of inspection visits to all Member States and publishes the reports of such visits on the Commission's website on the Internet (http://europa.eu.int/comm/dg24health/vi/reports). A list of the relevant reports also appears each month in MAFF's Meat Hygiene Enforcement Report and BSE Enforcement Bulletin.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost to producers if the charges for Meat and Hygiene Service inspections are passed on to them. [68726]

Mr. Rooker: Meat Hygiene Service charges are levied on the occupiers of licensed fresh meat premises. It is a commercial decision for such operators whether they pass these costs onto their suppliers.

The total cost to the meat industry of meat inspection and hygiene supervision carried out in Great Britain by the Meat Hygiene Service was £29.8 million for 1997–98 and is forecast to be £33.1 million for 1998–99. Certain MHS enforcement costs, such as those for Specified Risk Material controls, were met by Government.

The MHS budget for 1999–2000 is currently being prepared. However, after careful consideration, my right hon. Friend the Minister announced on 14 January that the Government can no longer defer the introduction of charges to industry to cover the costs of SRM controls. It is proposed that these costs, estimated to be £21.5 million, should be transferred from the taxpayer to industry from 29 March 1999. We are currently considering the results of the consultation exercise on this matter.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been done by (a) his Department and (b) consultants to his Department into the possible effects of genetically modified crops or plants on (i) how insects pollinate and (ii) the quality of soil. [72527]

Mr. Rooker: All of the work within MAFF's research programme to assess the risks to the agricultural environment from the release of genetically modified crops is carried out by researchers under contract to the Ministry; none of the work is done in-house by the Ministry.

The Ministry has commissioned no research to date on possible effects of genetically modified crops on how insects pollinate, or on the quality of the soil.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if crops grown in genetically modified food trials will be allowed to enter the food chain. [71413]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Foods or food ingredients produced from GM crops may enter the food chain provided they have first passed a rigorous safety assessment and have been approved and labelled in accordance with the EC Novel Foods and Novel Food Ingredients Regulation.

Food Standards (Schools)

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many schools his Department estimates will be subject to the levy to fund the Food Standards Agency. [72238]

Mr. Rooker: It is proposed that the levy be applied to certain food premises required to register with the local authority under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991. Schools as such will not be required to pay. The requirement to pay the levy would depend on whether the premises concerned were required to register. Details of the number of registered food premises located in schools are not collected centrally and could be derived only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many schools are currently registered under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991. [72236]

Mr. Rooker: Registers of food premises under these regulations are prepared and maintained by individual local authorities. Details of the number of food premises located in schools that are required to register are not collected centrally and could be derived only at disproportionate cost.

Rights of Way

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce cross-compliance measures which would prevent agricultural subsidies and other public money going to landowners who block public rights of way. [70889]

Mr. Rooker: The Commission's proposals on CAP reform would provide for Member States to apply cross-compliance measures to protect the environment. Access provisions could not be applied under this provision.

We will consider cross-compliance measures further in light of the terms of the eventual Agenda 2000 agreement and the responses to the current consultation exercise.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70776]

Mr. Morley: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 569–70.

Countryside

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much land held by his Department he estimates would fall within the definition of open country as set out in the consultation document "Access to the Open Countryside" of February 1998. [71639]

Mr. Morley: It is estimated that of the 4,000 or so hectares of agricultural land held by my Department—approximately 1,150 hectares (28%)—would come within the definition of open country. This is part of a research farm in Northumberland which is partly freehold and partly leasehold and has been let to ADAS Consulting Ltd. for moorland research.

Organic Cereal Production

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants the Home Grown Cereals Authority has made for research into organic cereal production. [71534]

Mr. Rooker: To date the Authority has funded no research projects directed specifically at organic cereal production. The Authority is, however, currently in the process of revising its cereals R&D strategy. As part of this process, it has held formal discussions with a number of organisations representing the interests of organic producers.

Pork Products

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about a possible ban on the sale of pork products whose methods of production are illegal in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [71525]

Mr. Rooker: I and my Ministerial colleagues have received a large number of representations calling for a ban on the import of pork and pork products which do not match British production standards. It remains the case, however, that Single Market Legislation and European Court of Justice Rulings protect the free circulation of goods in the EU. In areas where there is a common market, such as pigmeat, if products conform to EU requirements, individual member states cannot introduce a unilateral ban.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 160–61, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure, [71025]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 160–61, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department; [71024]

(3) if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70978]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The information asked for is not all held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member when it has been gathered together.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effects of the decline of the euro against sterling on the green pound. [70617]

Mr. Rooker: As from 1 January 1999, "green" rates ceased to exist, because the agrimonetary system, which converts amounts under the Common Agricultural Policy and the Common Fisheries Policy into national currency, has been completely overhauled. Daily market exchange rates are now used to convert from euros into sterling.

Overall, sterling has strengthened slightly against the euro since 1 January 1999, but it is too soon to predict long term trends. Compensation may be available if the sterling value of direct payments or market support payments is adversely affected by a decline in the euro.

Synthetic Pyrethroid

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the impact of synthetic pyrethroid sheep dips on water courses. [71540]

Mr. Rooker: The Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) reported to Ministers on the use of synthetic pyrethroid and other non-OP sheep dips in January 1998. The Committee's recommendations, which included the extension of the Certificate of Competence Scheme to non-OP dips with effect from 31 December 1998, are being implemented. Applications for Marketing Authorisations for all veterinary medicinal products must satisfy the statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes the safety of the environment. Environmental pollution incidents involving sheep dips should be reported to the Environment Agency or the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. Officials of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) liaise closely with the environment agencies and all suspected adverse reactions to veterinary medicinal products, including those affecting the environment, should also be reported to the VMD.

Beef Imports

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the importation of hormone-treated beef from the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [71537]

Mr. Rooker: We have received a number of representations on the importation of hormone-treated beef from the United States of America. In each case we have provided the assurance that, in line with the European Union (EU) ban on the use of hormone growth promoters in food producing animals, any third country which permits the use of these substances is required to guarantee that no animal, and no meat coming from animals, to which they have been administered will be exported to the EU. Exports for the EU market must be certified accordingly and Commission inspectors verify compliance with all the requirements.

Farm Land

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many acres of farm land in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland have been bought in each of the last five years for which figures are available with funds released by roll-over relief. [71161]

Mr. Rooker: I regret that the information requested is not available. The data collected on agricultural land transactions do not identify the source of funding for land purchased. The estimated total area of agricultural land sold over the last five years for which figures are available are as follows:

Hectare

| | England | Scotland | Wales | Northern Ireland |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1993 | 146,032 | 30,639 | 16,811 | 4,721 |
| 1994 | 163,021 | 27,149 | 13,836 | 4,605 |
| 1995 | 156,785 | 17,202 | 10,735 | 4,050 |
| 1996 | 214,386 | 22,506 | 17,232 | 3,425 |
| 1997 | 200,695 | 33,795 | 12,824 | 2,912 |

In Great Britain sales of less than 5 hectares are excluded, and in Northern Ireland sales of less than 2 hectares are excluded. In Scotland the series excludes sales of whole estates and inter-family sales. For England, Wales and Northern Ireland there is a delay between the date of sale and the inclusion in the analysis whereas for Scotland the analysis is based on the date of sale and is subject to retrospective revision.

Groundwater

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the EU Groundwater Directive and the cost of its implementation in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [71528]

Mr. Rooker: I have received a number of representations which refer to this Directive. As the Groundwater Directive is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Environment, they have been passed to his Department for an answer.

Tobacco Subsidy

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the tobacco subsidy to EU growers cost in the last year for which figures are available; and when he expects the subsidy to be discussed next in the Council of Ministers. [70405]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998, the EU spent 868 million ecu (£583 million[1]) on subsidies under the EU tobacco regime.

In November last year the Commission issued a proposal for a Council Regulation amending Regulation 2075/92 and fixing the premiums and guarantee thresholds for leaf tobacco by variety group and Member State for the 1999, 2000, and 2001 harvests. This is likely to be discussed at the Agriculture Council soon, but no date has been specified.

[1]Using an exchange rate of £1 = 1.4887 ecu.

Sniffer Dogs (Quarantine)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the quarantine regulations will apply on their return to the sniffer dogs sent from the United Kingdom to assist in the search for survivors of the recent earthquake in Colombia. [71504]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Yes, the two dogs in question returned to the United Kingdom on 4 February and are currently undergoing six months quarantine.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current statistical risk of dying from new variant CJD as a result of the consumption of beef on the bone (a) using 1999 data together with the SEAC published 1997 risk analysis formula and (b) provided to him by his Department. [70089]

Mr. Rooker: It has still not been established that nvCJD is caused by exposure to BSE infectivity in food, but the Government, based on expert scientific advice, have always proceeded on the assumption that it could be. There continues to be great uncertainty about the nature of new variant CJD and about how susceptible people may be to infection. It is, therefore, not possible to estimate the current statistical risk of dying from the disease as a result of consuming beef or beef products which had been cooked on the bone.

In its 1997 advice, the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) quoted an estimate of a 1 in 20 chance of one case of nvCJD arising as a consequence of exposure to infectivity in dorsal root ganglia in 1998.

In November 1998, SEAC concluded that it was still not known how many people had become infected with nvCJD as a result of exposure to the BSE agent, nor how much BSE infectivity is needed to cause disease. Consequently predictions as to public health risks are very uncertain and SEAC did not quote specific levels of risk. However, the Committee was of the opinion that, in view of the continued decline in the BSE epidemic, the number of infected cows entering the human food chain would be less in November 1998 than in 1997.

On this basis, the Committee concluded that any risk from dorsal root ganglia and bone marrow in 1999 is less than it was 12 months previously. The pattern of experimental results obtained with bone marrow led the Committee to conclude that the risk, if any, from that tissue is likely to be very small. With the Over Thirty Month Scheme in place, the Committee thought it likely that the risk from dorsal root ganglia is also very small and negligible in comparison to the possible risk earlier in the epidemic. Due to the uncertainty, neither SEAC nor Departmental officials has sought to quantify the risks numerically.

The decision to retain the controls on the sale, use and disposal of beef bones was made for the reasons explained to the House by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 4 February 1999, Official Report, columns 1077–82.

Quality Standard Marks (Pigmeat)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual budget for the Meat and Livestock Commission's new quality standard mark for pigmeat; and if he will make a statement on how the success of the scheme will be measured. [71036]

Mr. Rooker: The funding of the British Quality Standard for Pigmeat and its measures of success are matters for the industry through the Meat and Livestock Commission's Pig Strategy Council.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the (a) timescale and (b) budget for extending the new Meat and Livestock Commission quality standard mark on pigmeat to other meat products. [70923]

Mr. Rooker: The British Quality Standard for Pigmeat was developed by the pigmeat industry itself through the Meat and Livestock Commissions Pig Strategy Council. The possible development of quality standard marks for lamb and beef are matters for the respective strategy councils for those products. The budget is to be set-aside for technical and promotional work of this nature is a matter for the MLC in consultation with the industry. Poultry meat is outside the remit of MLC.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) plans he has for and (b) representations he has received on the incorporation of existing farm assurance schemes into the new Meat and Livestock Commission quality standard mark for pig meat. [70924]

Mr. Rooker: None; the British Quality Standard for Pigmeat and the various farm assurance and quality schemes in the pigmeat sector are all industry run and industry funded operations. The relationship between them is therefore a matter for the industry itself.

Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate how many food premises are exempt from the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991 by reason of not being open for more than four days in any consecutive period of five weeks. [71365]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rotherham Euro Experiment

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature of the involvement of (i) the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Baroness Simons and (ii) the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) in the Rotherham Euro Experiment; if (a) ministerial transport and (b) departmental equipment were available to them over the period of their involvement; and what reports have been made by them subsequently. [70789]

Ms Quin: The Rotherham Euro Ready Week was organised by the local Chamber of Commerce Training and Enterprise Council, the Rotherham Advertiser, and other local public and private sector bodies. It was welcomed by HMG as making a significant contribution to the Government's campaign to raise awareness of the introduction of the Euro.

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State attended in her Ministerial capacity in support of HMG's public information campaign. She travelled by rail to Doncaster, her ticket paid for from public funds. The organisers kindly provided a car to take her from Doncaster to Rotherham. She had her usual departmental equipment with her.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) was present in his constituency capacity. This Department did not provide him with transport or equipment.

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in his Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70773]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 570.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71283]

Mr. Fatchett: So far in 1998–99, £37,523.58 of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office budget can be attributed to spending on people with disabilities. This represents 0.0036 per cent. of the total FCO departmental spending.

However, this does not represent a complete picture since spending on people with disabilities has, to date, been subsumed into a number of the FCO's general budgets. In addition, there is the general spend on items such as building repairs/improvements which benefits all staff, but which takes particular account of the needs of people with disabilities.

During the new financial year 1999–2000, budgets will have a sum allocated specifically for people with disabilities. This will enable us to form a more accurate picture of spending on people with disabilities.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71269]

Mr. Fatchett: In the United Kingdom the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for the provision of Consular and Legalisation services to the public. We already ensure that where a customer has difficulty in accessing these services, by reason of a disability, alternative arrangements are made to ensure that person can access those services.

Consular Division of the FCO, which has responsibility for delivering these services, is to be relocated in 2000. A detailed disability access audit has already been carried out on the new site and the requirements of part III of the DDA have been fully incorporated into refurbishment plans.

Whilst the provision of goods and services by British Diplomatic Missions overseas is not covered by this legislation, our staff overseas will do all they can to adhere to the spirit of the Act in the provision of, for example, Commercial, Passport and Consular services to British Citizens, as well as entry clearance services to Citizens of other countries.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the expenditure incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) the setting up and (b) the operation of web sites, indicating the cases in which the expenditure has been above that budgeted; and if he will list for each web site (i) the topics covered, (ii) the current average number of hits per month and (iii) the estimated expenditure on each web site for each of the next three years. [70972]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The following is the information:

[1] The Planet Britain website is an online version of a CD-ROM of the same name. Cable and Wireless provide free bandwidth and server space to host the site.

i) The main FCO website covers British policy and the work of the FCO. Average monthly hits are 3.8 million.

ii) The publications website is an online ordering catalogue for FCO publications. The site has registered 24,222 hits between its launch on 1 December 1998 to 5 February 1999.

iii) The Wilton Park website gives details of Wilton Park conferences. It registers an average of 6,000 hits per month.

iv) The Planet Britain website is aimed at a youth audience overseas and gives an overview of modern Britain (science, sport, culture, media etc.). It has registered 420,000 hits since May 1998 to date.

v) The British Council website promotes the work of the Council worldwide and receives an average of 4 million hits per month.

vi) The Commonwealth Institute website promotes the work of the Commonwealth in the UK and registers an average of 5–6,000 hits per month.

vii) The Great Britain-China Centre website covers the work of that organisation and provides links to other related organisations. It receives approximately 1,600 hits per month.

viii) The Britain-Russia Centre website covers the work of that organisation and receives approximately 250 hits per month.

ix) The British Association for Central and Eastern Europe (BACEE) website covers the work of that organisation. It was launched on 25 January 1999 and user statistics are not yet available.

Estimated running costs for these websites are expected to remain roughly the same over the next three years. The FCO Publications website hopes to recover some costs from the sale of publications and the Great Britain-China Centre website hopes to offset some costs by carrying advertising.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 721, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71013]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Since May 1997 there has been no expenditure by task forces, review bodies or focus groups on public opinion research, television, radio and newspaper advertising, or direct mail. From centrally held funds there has been no expenditure on market research. £4,818,211 has been spent on publications and publicity commissioned through the Publications Section of the FCO's Information Department. This figure does not include publications for in-house communications purposes. It would involve disproportionate costs to establish what individual FCO posts may have spent on these activities from their devolved budgets.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 721, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71012]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I am asking the Chief Executives of FCO Agencies and non-departmental public bodies to write directly to the hon. Member with information on expenditure on (a) public opinion research, (b) television, radio and newspaper advertising, and (c) direct mail since May 1997.

The COI undertakes work for the FCO on a contractual basis competing with other providers. All expenditure incurred by the COI on work carried out on behalf of the FCO is included in my previous answer.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71507]

Mr. Fatchett: Since 1 May 1997 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has established the following task forces, reviews and advisory groups:

Review of the Criteria Used in Considering Licence Applications for the Export of Conventional Arms.

The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced the new criteria on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. There were no additional direct costs to this review.

Review of Policy Towards the Remaining UK Overseas Territories.

The Government intend to publish a White Paper soon. The direct cost of this review is £4,342 to date.

Panel 200 Advisory Group.

Panel 2000 published a consultation Document on 10 September 1998 which was laid before Parliament on the same date. The direct cost of this group is £49,519 to date.

The indirect office and staff costs of these reviews have been absorbed by the FCO.

Spain

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of European funding allocated to Spain in each year since accession. [71697]

Ms Quin: The EC budget is not broken down by Member State. But in its report "Financing of the European Union" COM (98) 560, deposited in the House Library on 26 October 1998 (Batch list 121), the Commission show at Table F Annex 8 the total EU expenditure in all Member States from 1992–97. The table shows that between those years Spain received the following from the EC budget:

| | Mecu |
|---|---|
| 1992 | 7,536.0 |
| 1993 | 8,215.0 |
| 1994 | 7,889.7 |
| 1995 | 10,898.4 |
| 1996 | 10,661.5 |
| 1997 | 11,303.6 |

Information on Spain's receipts from accession to 1992 can be derived from the European Court of Auditors Annual Reports which provide a comprehensive breakdown of all EC expenditure.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of manpower and military assets Spain dedicates to the NATO alliance. [71696]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I have been asked to reply.

The forces that Spain makes available to NATO is a matter for the Spanish Government.

Gibraltar

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to take legal action regarding Spanish imposed delays at the Gibraltar frontier. [71701]

Ms Quin: In our discussion of Gibraltar with the Spanish Government, we have emphasised that border restrictions going beyond those compatible with EU norms for a light passport check and customs control (Gibraltar is outside the Community customs territory) are unjustified and counter-productive. We have also drawn the current situation at the Gibraltar/Spain border to the attention of the President of the European Commission; and look to the Commission to remind the Spanish authorities of their obligations. We want to see the outcome of those representations before considering further steps.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what cost burden Gibraltar has imposed upon HM Treasury in each of the last 10 years. [71700]

Ms Quin: The Government of Gibraltar budget is self-financing, and Gibraltar has received no technical aid, programme aid or budgetary support in the last ten years. Ministry of Defence and Foreign and Commonwealth Office activities in Gibraltar are financed from departmental budgets while the Department for International Development deals with some Gibraltar-related pension matters.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was his response to the Gibraltar House of Assembly's motion, of 17 December, calling on Her Majesty's Government to reject the Spanish proposals for joint sovereignty; and on what date his response was made. [72212]

Ms Quin: We are, of course, aware of the Gibraltar House of Assembly motion of 17 December. We were not asked for a formal response. The Chief Minister drew our attention to the motion in a letter of 18 December (received on 8 January). I responded to that letter on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 January.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on self-determination for the people of Gibraltar. [72214]

Ms Quin: We support the right or principle of self-determination reflecting the wishes of the people concerned. It should be exercised in accordance with the other principles and rights in the UN Charter and with other Treaty obligations. In Gibraltar's case, that includes article X of the Treaty of Utrecht. This has been the long-standing position of successive British Governments.

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, columns 702–03, if he will list the agenda of the bilateral meeting with the Liberal Democrat spokesman on Foreign Affairs and Defence; at whose request that meeting took place; for how long it lasted; which common foreign and security policy issues were resolved to be specific areas for further discussion; and if he will make a statement. [71355]

Mr. Robin Cook: On 12 January I held a short meeting with the Liberal Democrat spokesman on foreign affairs and defence. We agreed to recommend an extension of the Joint Consultative Committee's remit to cover a range of common foreign and security policy issues. The meeting took place by agreement as a result of the widening of co-operation announced by my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the leader of the Liberal Democratic Party in December.

European Commissioners

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will deposit in the Library a list of the members of the cabinets of European Commissioners, with their pay scales. [71148]

Ms Quin: I have deposited in the Library a list of the members of the different cabinets in the Commission, together with a table of pay scales, as provided by the Commission's Personnel Directorate.

European Budget

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs further to the reply of 2 February 1999, Official Report, column 542, if he will make a statement on the nature of the activities authorised under (i) 3706-other political activities and (ii) 3708-information work. [71143]

Ms Quin: A detailed breakdown of the activities authorised is not readily available. I will write to the right hon. Member in due course. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Tibet

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government on its campaign to promote atheism in Tibet. [71163]

Mr. Fatchett: The situation in Tibet, including restrictions upon religious freedom, continues to be a matter of concern. We take every opportunity to raise Tibet with the Chinese authorities, both bilaterally and in conjunction with our EU partners.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what impact the current situation regarding human rights in China and Tibet will have on (a) bilateral aid to and (b) EU dialogue on human rights with the Chinese Government. [71162]

Mr. Fatchett: The EU/China human rights dialogue provides an opportunity for the EU to address many serious human rights concerns, including in Tibet, directly with the Chinese authorities. We will continue to support this dialogue with bilateral assistance, such as in the legal and judicial fields, which is a valuable way of bringing about concrete improvements on the ground in China.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71447]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 February 1999]: 1,028 FCO press releases have been issued by the COI since the COI began distributing press releases on the FCO's behalf in 1995. Between 1990 and 1995 1,223 press releases were issued by the FCO direct. The year by year breakdown is as follows:

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1990 | 263 |
| 1991 | 221 |
| 1992 | 182 |
| 1993 | 197 |
| 1994 | 180 |
| 1995 | 200 |
| 1996 | 207 |
| 1997 | 296 |
| 1998 | 325 |

In respect of FCO Agencies and non-departmental public bodies I am asking the Chief Executives of those bodies to write to the hon. Member direct.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71462]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by Governments Departments are laid down in the Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the libraries of the House.

The primary means by which the FCO issues press releases is the News Distribution Service of the COI. Since May 1997 the COI has charged the FCO £44,067.39 for this service. No records are kept for subsidiary costs, such as faxing and postage of press releases direct by the FCO to any applicants.

In respect of FCO Agencies and non-departmental public bodies, I am asking the Chief Executives of those bodies to write to the hon. Member direct.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent events in Zimbabwe. [71820]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are shocked by the detention and apparent torture of Mr. Chavunduka and Mr. Choto by the military authorities in Zimbabwe, and applaud the prompt action by the judiciary in ordering Mr. Chavunduka's release. President Mugabe's recent statements raise serious questions about his Government's commitment to the rule of law and basic human freedoms. We have reminded the Zimbabwe Government of their obligation to uphold international human rights standards, and to act to repair the damage to the country's reputation.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he has held with (a) Zimbabwean officials and (b) human rights groups in relation to the torture of journalists by the army in Zimbabwe. [71819]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We summoned the Acting High Commissioner for Zimbabwe to protest at the Zimbabwe Army's detention and apparent torture of two journalists. I have written to the Zimbabwe Foreign Minister, and our High Commissioner in Harare has raised our concerns with both Government Ministers and officials. Our officials in London and Harare are in regular contact with human rights groups.

Sudan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Usama bin Laden had invested in the Al-Shifa pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum; and if he will make a statement. [71762]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Usama bin Laden's past association with Sudan is well known. He had numerous business interests there and we believe that he still has.

We do not have evidence to indicate whether or not these interests included the Al-Shifa plant.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71858]

Mr. Fatchett: In common with other Departments, the work of the press officers in this Department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this is a routine part of the Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Caribbean Banana Producers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his colleagues from other member states of the European Union to discuss the present circumstances and future trading prospects of the Caribbean banana producers; and if he will make a statement. [71421]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary attended the 7 December General Affairs Council. The Agenda for this meeting covered the dispute with the US over the EU banana regime (the means by which the EU gives preferential access to banana imports from Caribbean ACP producers). Since then my right hon. Friend has on several occasions discussed the dispute, and its implications for UK industry and the Caribbean, with the US Secretary of State.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon will receive a substantive answer to his question concerning ministerial use of RAF and chartered aircraft to which a holding answer was given on 4 February (Ref. 69074). [72297]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 738.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

World Trade Organisation

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to support the eight elements of an ideal result as outlined in the European Commission Note from Directorate General I to the Article 113 Committee on investment and the World Trade Organisation; and if he will make a statement; [71755]

(2) if her Majesty's Government supports the Investor-State Dispute Settlement set out in the European Commission Note from Directorate General I to the Article 113 Committee on investment and the World Trade Organisation; and if he will make a statement; [71753]

(3) if Her Majesty's Government have asked the European Commission to redraft the leaked Note from Directorate General I to the Article 113 Committee on investment and the World Trade Organisation; and if he will make a statement; [71756]

(4) if Her Majesty's Government have objected to the contents of the European Commission Note from Directorate General I to the Article 113 Committee on investment and the World Trade Organisation; and if he will make a statement. [71754]

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Commission Note from DG1 to the Article 113 committee on investment in the World Trade Organisation. [72249]

Mr. Wilson: It is the Government's policy, shared by our EU partners, that the meeting of World Trade Organisation Ministers in Seattle later this year should lead to a comprehensive new "Round" of WTO negotiations, and that investment should be included on the agenda. However, the Government's policy is that any investment negotiation must be based around a new set of objectives, derived by consensus. We are in the process of consulting with all interested groups within the UK on what the Government's objectives for a new negotiation might be. As part of our general consultations over the UK's objectives for the new "Round", I am convening a series of meetings including other Ministers, NGOs, TUs and business organisations. No conclusions have been reached on the inclusion or exclusion of an investor-state dispute settlement mechanism, or indeed on any other individual issue.

The European Commission circulated an internal discussion paper on possible elements of a WTO investment agreement to Member States on 15 December 1998, with a view to stimulating discussion within the EU. The paper does not represent the views of the UK Government. The UK has called for a discussion of the paper by EU investment experts, but such a discussion has not yet taken place.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons Chapters E and F were omitted from the publicly released European Commission Note from Directorate General I to the Article 113 Committee on Investment and the WTO; and if will make a statement. [72056]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The Note was issued by the European Commission and its contents are a matter for them. However, I have drawn their attention to my hon. Friend's interest and have asked them to respond directly to him.

London First

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much funding (a) London First and (b) London First Centre has received from his Department per annum since 1992; and for what purposes the funding was specified. [72167]

Mr. Wills: Since its incorporation in February 1994, London First Centre (LFC) has received annual grants from the DTI's Invest in Britain Bureau for the co-ordination of inward investment activities in the Greater London area of £500k (94–95); £1,000k (95–96); £1,010k (96–97); £1,015k (97–98); and £1,015k (98–99).

London First, of which LFC is a wholly owned subsidiary, has not received grant funding from the DTI. It is financed from members' contributions, donations, project and sundry income.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were referred to the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last three years; in how many cases court proceedings were recommended; and if he will make a statement. [72548]

The Attorney-General: The table shows the number of cases which the Crown Prosecution Service received from the police, and the number which the Service finalised, in each of the last three years. Both figures are inclusive of cases submitted for pre-charge advice and non-criminal proceedings, and the numbers of these completed in each year are shown separately.

The table then shows the number and the proportion of cases in which a prosecution did not proceed. These outcomes are divided into those cases discontinued by the Service, and those which were written off because the defendant could not be traced or had died, or because proceedings were adjourned indefinitely.

Finally, the table shows the number and proportion of cases in which a prosecution proceeded. These are divided into cases in which the defendant was bound over to keep the peace, those which proceeded to a committal hearing, and those which proceeded to a trial or guilty plea.

The Code for Crown Prosecutors requires that there should be sufficient reliable evidence to give a realistic prospect of conviction, and that the prosecution should be in the public interest. These criteria are applied in every case. Every case discontinued must be reviewed by a Crown Prosecutor and, wherever time allows, the police must be consulted before a decision is taken. The number of cases discontinued against the opinion of the police is very small: a survey conducted in 1994 showed that the police objected to discontinuance on only 4 per cent. of occasions when they were consulted.

However, discontinuance is not primarily the result of a Crown Prosecutor's judgment. More than half of discontinued cases are unable to proceed because witnesses fail to appear at court, refuse to give evidence or change their evidence, defendants produce driving documents proving their innocence on the day of the trial; evidence is excluded because of irregularities in its collection; or due to lack of continuity evidence in the prosecution case which cannot be provided by the police. In these circumstances, the Crown Prosecution Service has no choice but to discontinue proceedings.

There is no connection between discontinuance and writing off a case. The latter does not represent the termination of proceedings, but is an administrative procedure whereby dormant cases are removed from the record of live proceedings, so giving a more accurate account of work on hand. The majority of write offs occur where the police cannot trace a defendant for service of a summons, or where a warrant for arrest remains unexecuted following the defendant's failure to surrender to bail. If the defendant is subsequently arrested, the prosecution can then recommence.

Notes:

1. The figures given in the draft reply represent cases handled by the 13 Areas of the CPS, but do not include the specialised cases handled by Central Casework.
2. Cases discontinued are inclusive of those in which the CPS withdrew proceedings at court as well as those discontinued by way of a s23 notice.
3. Discontinuance fell from 13.3 per cent. of completed cases in 1992 to 12.8 per cent. in 1993, and has remained almost unchanged at around 12 per cent. for each year since then.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Students

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many school students there were in each local education authority that attracts standard spending assessment resources in each of the last five years; what are the estimated figures for 1999–2000; in what years changes in the definition of qualifying students took place; and if he will estimate the effect of these changes on the total numbers. [71810]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Sustainable Development

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government strategy on sustainable development will be announced. [72301]

Mr. Meale: Following the extensive "Opportunities for Change" consultation exercise on revision of the 1994 UK Sustainable Development Strategy, preparation of new UK sustainable development strategy is underway. Publication is expected shortly.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if developing countries can withhold agreement to import genetically modified organisms on the basis of detriment to traditional methods of farming. [72209]

Mr. Meacher: The UK currently has a delegation in Colombia engaged in final negotiations on the UN Biosafety Protocol. This instrument will govern the transboundary movement of Living Modified Organisms (effectively the same as GMOs).

While many of the developing countries want to see socio-economic factors such as the effect on traditional farming practices form part of the risk assessment, exporting countries disagree. My instructions are that the UK, on its own and as part of the EU negotiating group, should seek an outcome that includes some reference to socio-economic factors and encourages research into impacts on farming practices. We expect that countries will always be able to ban imports where there is evidence of serious damage to the environment or human health.

Air Service Agreements

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the Singapore-UK air services agreement; and if he will make a statement. [72163]

Dr. Reid: A number of representations have been received on the UK/Singapore air services arrangements, which already provide for unlimited capacity from Summer 2001. At the bilateral negotiations which took place earlier this month my officials confirmed that we would review Singapore's request for transatlantic fifth freedom rights either when we have liberalised the air services arrangements between the UK and the United States or in January 2000, whichever is the sooner.

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the names of those he has nominated to the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, together with (a) their qualifications, (b) details of relevant (i) public and (ii) private interests and (c) dates of appointment; if he will make a statement on the resources allocated to the Committee; and if he will set out the references to any of the Committee's published reports. [72556]

Mr. Meacher: Details of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) are as follows:

Membership of ACRE, with qualifications and interests:

Professor John Beringer (Chairman)

Professor of Molecular Genetics and Dean of Science, School of Biological Sciences, University of Bristol. Member of Advisory Committee on Genetic Modification (ACGM). Member of the Council of the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC).

Dr. Philip Dale

Senior Research Scientist, John Innes Centre. Consultant to EC DGX1 and United Nations Industrial Development Organisation

Dr. Ian Garner

Assistant Director of Research, PPL Therapeutics, Roslin. Member of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council's Genes in Developmental Biology Network.

Professor Alan Gray

Head of Furzebrook Research Station, NERC Institute of Terrestrial Ecology. Honorary Professor, University of Southampton.

Ms Julie Hill

Programme advisor to Green Alliance. Member of the advisory committee for the Pesticides Trust, Environmental Law Foundation, centre for Ecology and Hytrology and environmental advisory bodies for Shanks and McEwan plc and Southern Electricity.

Dr. Julian Kinderlerer

Senior lecturer, Department of Molecular Biology and Biotechnology, University of Sheffield. Assistant Director, Institute of Biotechnology Law and Ethics, University of Sheffield. Member of ACGM. Consultant to UNIDO.

Mr. John MacLeod

Director of National Institute of Agricultural Botany. Member of UK Plant Varieties and Seeds Committee. President of Groupe Consultatif International de Recherche sur le Colza.

Professor Bev Moseley

Retired, former head of the Institute of Food Research Reading Laboratory.

Professor David Onions

Head of the Department of Veterinary Pathology, University of Glasgow. Honorary Director of the Leukaemia Research Funds Human Virus Centre. Consultant to Q-One Biotec. Advisor to Intervet International BV.

Professor Nigel Poole

External and Regulatory Affairs Manager, Zeneca Plant Science. Bracknell Honorary Professor, University of Aberdeen Honorary Professor, John Moores University.

Dr. David Robinson

Principal Research Scientist, Scottish Crop Research Institute. Honorary Lecturer, University of Dundee. Member of Genetic Manipulation Safety Committee at Nickerson Seeds Castleton of Eassie site.

Dr. Katherine Venables

Senior lecturer in epidemiology, Imperial College School of Medicine at the National Heart and Lung Institute. Honorary consultant physician at the Royal Brompton Hospital. Honorary Consultant in Public Health, Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority.

Dr. Ingrid Williams

Principal scientist, leader of the Insect-Plant Interactions Group, Institute of Arable Crops Research, Rothamsted. Honorary Research Associate, Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research. Visiting Professor, Estonian University of Agriculture. Chairman of International Commission for Plant-Bee Relationships. Council member and company director of International Bee Research Association.

Dates of appointment

The chairman and members are appointed for three years, most recently with effect from 17 June 1996.

Resources allocated

The costs of ACRE for 1997–98 were as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Members' fees | 8,805 |
| Travel subsistence and meetings | 7,338 |
| Estimated staff costs for servicing ACRE and processing cases (salaries, accommodation and overheads) | 144,097 |

Published reports

Annual reports for ACRE are placed in the Library. DETR/ACRE have also produced a series of guidance notes and DETR has produced a number of research reports to inform ACRE's advice. These are all listed in the annual reports.

Biosafety Protocol Meeting, Colombia

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who will represent his Department at the Biosafety Protocol meeting in Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [72229]

Mr. Meacher: I am being represented by officials at the Biosafety Protocol meeting in Colombia. The only European Union Minister to attend, that I am aware of, is the German Health Minister, representing the EU Presidency.

The Protocol is being prepared by an Open Ended Ad Hoc Working Group which has met five times and is meeting now in Colombia to complete its work. The negotiating brief was agreed by ministers in detail beforehand and is being monitored by ministers throughout the negotiations to ensure it is strictly adhered to. An extraordinary Conference of the Parties will be held immediately afterwards for the adoption of the Protocol. There is to be no high level segment in Colombia and my official acting as Head of Delegation in Colombia will sign for the UK.

Assuming the Protocol is adopted, I shall sign it at the official ceremony in New York in three months' time.

Maritime Industry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the tonnage of UK (i) owned and (ii) registered vessels in the maritime industry; and in each case what the figure was (a) 10 years and (b) 20 years ago. [72074]

Dr. Reid: Information on a consistent basis is not available prior to end-1986 because vessels registered in the UK cannot be distinguished from those registered in the Crown Dependencies (Isle of Man and Channel Islands). The information that is available is as follows:

Tonnage of UK-owned and UK-registered vessels[1]

000 deadweight tonnes

| | UK-owned vessels | | UK-registered vessels | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Trading vessels | All vessels | Trading vessels | All vessels |

Lloyd's Maritime Information Services Ltd.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many UK (a) officers and (b) ratings are currently employed in the maritime industry; and how many there were (i) 10 years and (ii) 20 years ago. [72073]

Dr. Reid: There is no consistent series of UK nationals employed in the maritime industry. The Chamber of Shipping collects data on employment on vessels operated by its members, and this is shown for selected years in the table. It is known that many UK nationals, especially officers, work on non-member vessels, but precise figures for earlier years are not known.

| Year | Officers | Ratings |
|---|---|---|
| 1978 | 32,188 | 25,570 |
| 1986 | 10,871 | 12,706 |
| 1988 | 8,885 | 12,114 |

Years refer to 31 December, except 1978 which is 31 September. From 1991 statistics of crew serving as back-up for non-UK flag vessels were specifically included.

Agricultural Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money his Department has spent supporting the research and development of agricultural biotechnology since 1 May 1997. [72068]

Mr. Meale: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has not spent any money supporting the research and development of agricultural biotechnology since 1 May 1997.

DETR-funded research has however been conducted to assess the risks and potential impact of genetically modified organisms on the environment. The annual budget for such work is of the order of £500,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Siemens Business Services

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation his Department has (a) requested and (b) received from Siemens plc following delays to the development of a new casework system by Siemens for the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [70907]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate Casework Programme is a privately financed business change programme supplied by Siemens Business Services (SBS). Although development of the full Information Technology application has been delayed, many elements of the Programme, and much new Information Technology, have been delivered.

Some payments are made to SBS for services provided and milestones achieved, but SBS's earnings depend mainly on casework productivity improvements. The programme delay means that productivity has not improved as fast as expected.

A commercial agreement has also been negotiated with SBS for changes to the contractual payments to reflect the delay in full implementation.

The payments made to SBS up to the end of 1998 were 4.5 million less than the contract target levels. SBS's earnings will continue to be depressed until the full Information Technology is delivered and productivity and output increase.

Private Sector Criminal Justice Services

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the last date for which figures are available, how many former employees of his Department have taken new employment with companies involved in the provision of private sector criminal justice services which have contracts with his Department; if he will list those former employees by their position in his Department and their current position; and if he will make a statement. [71928]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office does not maintain comprehensive records on the employment destinations of members of staff who leave the Department. Subject to the constraints of the Business Appointment Rules, staff are free to seek and take employment outside the Civil Service without the need to seek permission. We are aware of 12 applications within the last two years under the rules, by staff managed by the Prison Service, for permission to work in the private sector. In the same period, elsewhere in the Department, applications were received from two former members of staff for permission to provide advice to private companies, one in connection with a project outside the United Kingdom.

| Grade | Position in Department | Company |

| Senior Civil Service | Director (Enforcement), Immigration Service | Group 4 Securitas |
| Grade 7 | Police Science and Technology Unit | Forensic Alliance |

Colchester Young Offenders Institute

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisional conclusions from the research of Dr Kate Painter into the experimental regime at Colchester Young Offenders Institute are available; and if he will publish them. [72607]

Mr. George Howarth: No conclusions will be drawn from the research into the experimental regime at Colchester until all the data have been collected and analysed. It is our intention to publish the final research report.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the rules are concerning the rights of prison officers employed in prisons in England and Wales to take in cigarettes, alcohol, food and other items for prison inmates; and if he will make a statement; [72546]

(2) what private outside purchases paid for by the prisoners are being approved and made by prison officers at prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [72547]

Mr. George Howarth: All items provided to prisoners must be provided through the prison shop or the catering department only. No other external shopping on behalf of any prisoner is allowed, but the Governor may authorise shopping for ethnic minority goods where these would not otherwise be available.

Crime Victims

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve services for victims of crime and witnesses; and if he will make a statement. [73168]

Mr. Straw: The Government are committed to improving the position of victims and witnesses within the criminal justice system. We are increasing very substantially our annual grant to Victim Support to enable them to establish in magistrates' courts a support service for victims, witnesses and other court users to complement the highly successful service they have already established at all Crown Court centres. Up to an additional £2.8 million a year will be provided for this purpose in 1999–2000, rising to up to £4.5 million in 2001–02.

We shall also be providing an additional £1.8 million a year from 1999–2000 onwards to enable Victim Support further to develop their community based schemes and the support services provided at the Crown Court.

By 2001–02, therefore, our grant to Victim Support will have risen to some £19 million a year, an increase of 50 per cent. over the current figure of £12.7 million. This substantial injection of new money will enable Victim Support to provide a more complete and seamless service for victims and witnesses, from the reporting of the offence through to the conclusion of the case in the courts and, as appropriate, beyond.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason the recent date set for the publication of a Freedom of Information Bill has been postponed. [72241]

Mr. Straw: Freedom of Information is a complex subject. There have been a great number of detailed issues to resolve before the Government could publish their draft Bill. It is essential to take the time to get this detail right so as to provide for an effective and workable Freedom of Information Act.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases sent to the Criminal Cases Review Commission to date (a) have been dealt with, (b) are under consideration and (c) are awaiting consideration. [70852]

Kate Hoey: I understand that, at the end of January, the Criminal Cases Review Commission had completed 701 cases, had 482 under active review, and 1,055 awaiting review.

Mink-keeping Licences

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions have been brought and (b) convictions have been secured against individuals holding a mink-keeping licence or employed by the holder of such a licence for offences related to that activity in the last five years. [71313]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

Two prosecutions have been brought by this Department in the last five years against the categories of defendant identified. Both were for animal welfare offences. One conviction was secured. The second case has yet to be concluded.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Economy

10. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last held discussions with representatives of the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland on the development of the Scottish economy. [70829]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend the Minister with responsibilities for business and industry meet regularly with CBI Scotland. My noble Friend last met senior officials of CBI Scotland on 26 October.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

12. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met Scottish Enterprise to discuss the Scottish economy. [70831]

Mr. Dewar: I meet the Chairman, Chief Executive and Members of Scottish Enterprise regularly to discuss a range of issues relating to the Scottish economy, most recently on 2 November. My noble Friend the Minister with responsibilities for business and industry meets the Chairman and Chief Executive on at least a monthly basis to discuss a range of issues relating to the Scottish economy.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

14. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland to discuss the economy in Scotland. [70833]

Mrs. Liddell: Both my right hon. Friend and the Minister with responsibility for business and industry discuss economic matters with CBI Scotland from time to time. Arrangements for my right hon. Friend's next meeting have yet to be made, but the Minister with responsibility for business and industry is due to attend a CBI Scotland event on 12 March.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Redundancies

11. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of local authority funded organisations created to overcome social exclusion which are currently issuing precautionary redundancy notices to their staff. [70830]

Mr. McLeish: While the Government acknowledge the valuable role that can be played by such organisations in the fight against social exclusion, decisions on the staffing levels of local authority funded projects are made by local authorities themselves, and information about such decisions is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999 funding for local authorities will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Council Housing

13. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with Scottish local authorities relating to their provision of council housing. [70832]

Mr. Macdonald: I discussed aspects of policy relating to the provision of council housing when I met representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities yesterday to brief them on the Green Paper on Housing. I am sure that CoSLA will participate fully in the consultation process which now commences.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Lockerbie

15. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the latest position in relation to starting criminal proceedings on the Lockerbie bombing. [70834]

Mr. McLeish: The arrest warrants which were obtained in respect of the two Libyans accused on 13 November 1991 remain outstanding. We continue to look to the Libyan government to respond positively to the UK initiative of 24 August 1998 by arranging for the delivery of those two accused to the authorities of the Netherlands. Once the accused become available to the Scottish authorities, the arrest warrants can be executed and the criminal proceedings can follow their usual course, subject only to the changes necessarily made to reflect the exceptional location of the proceedings.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Education

16. Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for education in Scotland. [70835]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's plans for improving pre-school and school education were set out in our White Paper "Targeting Excellence: Modernising Scotland's Schools", which was published on 27 January. Our priorities for post-16 education and training are set out in our Green Paper "Opportunity Scotland", published in September 1998. Copies of both documents are available in the Library of the House.

Sewage Disposal

17. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with water and drainage authorities on their plans for methods of sewage disposal other than dumping at sea; and if he will make a statement. [70836]

Mr. Macdonald: Ministers have regular discussions with the water authorities about their plans to dispose of sewage in safe and appropriate ways.

Following the ending of sea disposal on 31 December 1998 each authority has put in place alternative disposal methods which fully comply with the relevant regulations and protect public health.

Responsibility for these matters will pass to the Scottish Parliament.

Electricity (Jobs)

18. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the number of jobs in Scotland which depend on the sale of electricity from Scotland to other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [70837]

Mr. Macdonald: The information is not held in the form requested. This is a commercial matter for the Scottish electricity generators but the Government welcome the contribution made by the electricity industry to the Scottish economy.

Business Survey

19. Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the most recent business survey by the Scottish Chamber of Commerce. [70838]

Mr. Macdonald: I have noted the results of the most recent Scottish Chamber's Business Survey, which were released on 13 January 1999.

No country is immune from the effects of the current instability in the world economy. We fully appreciate the difficulties that this is causing for Scottish businesses and we are taking action to build a stable economy capable of sustained and steady growth. The recent reductions in interest rates are possible because of the tough decisions we have taken. The publication of the Competitiveness White Paper is further evidence of the Government's determination to create a strong and vibrant economy.

From 1 July economic development in Scotland will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Reid Kerr Further Education College

20. Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the consultants' report into the management of Reid Kerr Further Education College. [70839]

Mrs. Liddell: I am acutely concerned about the financial position at Reid Kerr College. That is why I agreed to the appointment of consultants last autumn. This report describes a number of steps to be taken by the College's Board of Management in order to draw up a recovery plan aimed at securing the College's future. We have offered financial assistance to the Board, but attached stringent conditions to ensure that the College's problems are addressed immediately, and have sought to ensure that the Board has access to appropriate expertise to assist in framing and implementing the recovery plan.

Timber

21. Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of log movements in Scotland are currently transported by B class roads; and if he will estimate the percentage which over the last 10 years has been transferred from carriage by sea to carriage on B class roads. [70840]

Mr. Macdonald: Most of the timber grown in Scotland is transported along 'B' or 'C' class roads for part of its journey from the forest. While "preferred haulage routes" are usually agreed with local authorities, no detailed records are kept of how much timber is transported along individual roads. The amount of timber carried by sea has not changed significantly over the past 10 years.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Agriculture

22. Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the National Farmers Union of Scotland to discuss the problems facing the agricultural sector. [70841]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my noble Friend Lord Sewel met the National Farming Union for Scotland and other industry bodies on 31 January 1999 to discuss agricultural policy.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Criminal Justice System

23. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Law Society to discuss the criminal justice system in Scotland. [70842]

Mr. McLeish: The Government meet regularly with representatives of the Law Society of Scotland to discuss aspects of the legal system. I met the Law Society on 13 January.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

University Applications

24. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the current level of university applications. [70843]

Mrs. Liddell: Figures released by the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service indicated that 59,702 applications to Scottish higher education institutions had been made as at 15 December 1998.

This will become a matter for the Scottish Parliament from 1 July 1999.

Social Exclusion Unit

25. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Social Exclusion Unit in Scotland. [70844]

Mr. Macdonald: We have been developing a social inclusion strategy for Scotland to ensure that the action already underway achieves the greatest possible impact. We have established the Social Exclusion Network to co-ordinate policy and action to promote social inclusion across The Scottish Office, and have also set up the Scottish Social Inclusion Network to assist us in preparing a statement of our strategy which we aim to publish shortly.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Trunk Road Maintenance Contracts

26. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the method of awarding trunk road maintenance contracts in Scotland. [70845]

Mr. Macdonald: I am satisfied that The Scottish Office's procedures for the award of trunk road maintenance contracts are fully in line with HM Treasury and European Union guidance.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Council Tax

27. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate his Department has made of this year's percentage rise in council tax bills in Scotland. [70846]

Mr. McLeish: The council tax level for each council will depend on local circumstances and decisions and it is not possible to make reliable estimates at the individual council level. Provided councils heed the Expenditure Guidelines we have issued however, the Scottish average council tax increase should be no more than 5 per cent. in 1999–2000.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Parliament

28. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responsibilities will be given to the European office to be opened in July in Brussels to represent the Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [70847]

Mr. McLeish: There are no plans to open an office to represent the Scottish Parliament in Brussels. That possibility will be a matter for consideration by the Scottish Parliament itself.

Arrangements are in hand to establish a representative office for the Scottish Executive, to be in operation when the Parliament assumes its full powers on 1 July 1999. The precise functions of that office will be determined by the Scottish Executive in due course.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on what date the Scottish Executive will take responsibility for those matters currently the responsibility of his Department which are to be devolved under the Scotland Act 1998; [72512]

(2) what the arrangements will be in respect of accountability to Parliament for matters which are currently his responsibility but which are to be devolved under the Scotland Act 1998, between 6 May and 1 July; [72513]

(3) on what date he will cease to be responsible to the UK Parliament for those matters devolved to the Scottish Parliament. [72514]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The Scotland Act 1998 (Commencement) Order 1998 (S.I. 1998/3178), which was made on 16 December 1998, provides that 1 July 1999 will be the principal appointed day for the purposes of the Act. It is on this day that the Scottish Parliament will acquire its powers to make laws and that functions will be transferred to the Scottish Ministers. Until the principal appointed day the Secretary of State for Scotland will remain accountable to Parliament for the matters within his responsibility which are to be devolved.

The arrangements for financial accountability are set out in The Scotland Act 1998 (Transitory and Transitional Provisions) (Finance) Order 1999, a draft of which was approved by each House recently. The Secretary of State will render accounts to Parliament for expenditure up to the principal appointed day; and the Scottish Ministers to the Scottish Parliament for the period thereafter.

Integrated Transport Network

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to work in partnership with local authorities to deliver an integrated transport network in Scotland. [70822]

Mr. McLeish: Last year's Scottish Transport White Paper recognises that local authorities will play a key role in the delivery of integrated transport.

We have recently issued consultation documents on Regional Transport Partnerships and Local Transport Strategies, and we are allocating £90 million over three years for a Public Transport Fund to assist local authorities in funding appropriate developments.

Dental Services

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for (a) an initial appointment with and (b) treatment by an NHS orthodontist in Scotland; how much has been allocated to the Scottish Dental Access Initiative; which health boards have applied for funds to date and for how much; how many applications have been successful in each health board area; and how much total funding has been approved and distributed to date. [69272]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 9 February 1999]: A major proportion of orthodontic treatment is undertaken in general dental practice, rather than in hospitals or the Community Health Service and no information is held centrally on patient waiting times for such treatment. Most orthodontic treatments carried out within the Hospital and Community Health Service settings are undertaken on an outpatient basis. Provisional figures show that, at 30 September 1998, the mean waiting time for a first orthodontic outpatient appointment was 103 days.

Funding of £1 million has been allocated to the Scottish Dental Access Initiative in 1998–99. Dentists, not Health Boards, apply for funds under the Initiative. Information on the number of applications for funding, offers and payments made, is given in the table. To respect the anonymity of the applicants, information on the Scottish Dental Access Initiative is not provided on an individual Health Board basis.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

| Scottish Dental Access Initiative | |
|---|---|
| Number of applications received | 28 |
| Amount applied for (£000) | 970 |
| Number of offers made[1] | 13 |
| Amount offered (£000) | 379 |
| Payments made (£000) | 134 |

[1] Offers number 6 in western, 5 in northern and 2 in eastern Health Board areas.

NHS Managers

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many managers have been seconded to implement the new NHS structures in Scotland. [71887]

Mr. Galbraith: Five managers have been seconded to the NHS in Scotland Management Executive on a full or part-time basis to help with implementation of the new structures in Scotland. This represents 2.8 whole time equivalents.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fixed Penalties

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fixed penalties were imposed by Scottish courts last year in (a) Scotland as a whole and (b) each individual sheriffdom, broken down by offence; and what was (i) their total value and (ii) the total amount of money recovered. [71872]

Mr. McLeish: Scottish courts do not impose a conditional offer of a fixed penalty. The decision whether to offer an alleged offender a fixed penalty (fiscal fine) is a matter for the Procurator Fiscal. The police or the Procurator Fiscal can also offer a fixed penalty for certain road traffic offences.

The numbers of criminal reports concluded by way of a fiscal fine in each of the sheriffdoms in Scotland and in total for 1997–98 are as follows:

| Sheriffdoms | Number |
|---|---|
| Grampian, Highland and Islands | 2,136 |
| Tayside, Central and Fife | 3,003 |
| Lothian and Borders | 1,582 |
| North Strathclyde | 2,651 |
| South Strathclyde Dumfries and Galloway | 4,088 |
| Glasgow and Strathkelvin | 5,501 |
| All Scotland | 18,961 |

This information cannot be broken down by offence.

In 1997–98 approximately £527,000 was collected by the district courts from the payment of fiscal fines.

The 1997 provisional figures for fixed penalties dealt with by the police by force area and type of offence are as follows:

| Force area | Moving vehicle offences[1] | Stationery vehicle offences |
|---|---|---|
| Central | 6,943 | 16,349 |
| Dumfries and Galloway | 8,003 | 7,206 |
| Fife | 5,543 | 17,779 |
| Grampian | 14,938 | 30,279 |
| Lothian and Borders | 22,305 | 117,644 |
| Northern | 5,902 | 11,138 |
| Strathclyde | 51,536 | 210,567 |
| Tayside | 8,444 | 27,719 |
| Scotland | 123,614 | 438,681 |

[1] Includes speeding vehicle excise licence, parking, motorway traffic, seat belt and other motor vehicle offences

Information on conditional offers of a fixed penalty made by the Procurator Fiscal for road traffic offences is not held centrally.

In 1997–98, the district courts received approximately £6.7 million in fixed penalty payments.

From 1 July, Procurator Fiscal conditional offers (fiscal fines) will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament. Fixed penalties for road traffic offences will be reserved.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases where a fixed penalty was imposed civil diligence was initiated in 1998 in (a) Scotland as a whole and (b) each individual sheriffdom; how much money was so recovered; and if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to recover the amount owing from fines. [71873]

Mr. McLeish: The district courts in Scotland collect fixed penalty payments. In 1997–98, civil diligence was used to collect unpaid fixed penalties (including fiscal fines) in 34,071 cases.

Information on the amounts recovered by diligence is not held centrally.

Recovery of unpaid fixed penalties can be done in a number of ways. It is for the courts to determine how best to recover these fines taking account of the individual circumstances of each case.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Nurses

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time nurses are employed by the NHS in Scotland. [71867]

Mr. Galbraith: The latest provisional data available indicate that as at 30 September 1998 there were 24,936 nurses and midwives employed on a full-time basis by the NHS in Scotland.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of nurses who have completed nursing training in Scotland since May 1997 have then taken up a nursing job in the NHS in Scotland. [71866]

Mr. Galbraith: This information is not held centrally.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many nurses have been (a) recruited and (b) trained in Scotland since May 1997. [71875]

Mr. Galbraith: The available information is as follows:

(a) According to provisional figures, there were 2,845 nurses and midwives employed in the NHS in Scotland at 30 September 1998 who had joined since September 1997.

(b) 2,855 student nurses have successfully completed basic training since 1 May 1997.

The 2 sets of data are not comparable because they derive from different sources, and in particular because the figures on recruits to employment:

(i) includes midwives as well as nurses

(ii) includes rejoiners as well as new entrants

(iii) excludes nurses working in general practices, banks and agencies.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Temporary Sheriffs

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of those holding commissions as temporary sheriffs on 15 January, including details of when each of the temporary sheriffs was first appointed. [71886]

Mr. McLeish: I have arranged to have placed in the Library a list of those holding commissions as temporary sheriffs on 15 January, showing dates of first appointment in that capacity.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many temporary sheriffs held commissions on 15 January; and of these, how many were (a) solicitors, (b) advocates, (c) female, (d) under the age of 40 (e) 60 to 64 and (f) 65 years of age or over. [71888]

Mr. McLeish: On 15 January 131 commissions as temporary sheriffs were in force. Of these (a) 84 were solicitors, (b) 47 were advocates, (c) 16 were female, (d) 7 were under age 40, (e) 5 were aged 60 to 64 and (f) 7 were aged 65 or over.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money listed by each NHS trust in Scotland has been directed into the Waiting List Initiative. [71889]

Mr. Galbraith: An additional £44.5 million was made available to tackle waiting lists and waiting times. £40 million was allocated to Health Boards to enable them to implement their plans for achieving reductions. The funding issued to each Health Board is set out in Table 1. The remaining £4.5 million was issued to those NHS Trusts which had achieved waiting list reductions. The awards to NHS Trusts are set out in Table 2.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Table 1: Waiting lists funding to Health Boards

| | 4,500,000 |

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what indicators have been used to measure value for money gained from funds directed towards the waiting list initiative in Scotland. [71871]

Mr. Galbraith: Health Boards, in conjunction with NHS Trusts, prepared detailed plans for achieving reductions in waiting lists and waiting times. A clinical and professional Support Force examined the plans and discussed them with representatives of Health Boards and NHS Trusts. Prior to recommending the plans for approval, the Support Force ensured that they were robust, deliverable and would achieve value for money, through an assessment of the project costs and the anticipated impact on waiting lists. Monitoring of expenditure by Health Boards on their plans, and the outcomes achieved, is ongoing.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the money spent to reduce waiting lists in Scotland over the last year was allocated specifically for that purpose. [71870]

Mr. Galbraith: An additional £40 million was issued to the NHS in Scotland in 1998 specifically to tackle waiting lists and waiting times. In February 1999, an additional £4.5 million was issued as awards to those NHS Trusts which had achieved waiting list reductions.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been directed towar reducing waiting list figures in the last three months in Scotland. [71884]

Mr. Galbraith: An additional £20 million was issued to the NHS in Scotland in April 1998 for action to secure early reductions in waiting lists, and a further £20 million was issued in September/November 1998 to fund over 190 strategic projects designed to secure sustained reductions in waiting times and waiting lists. In February 1999, £4.5 million was issued as awards to those NHS Trusts which had achieved early reductions in waiting lists.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Hospital Beds

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital beds there are per 1,000 of the population in Scotland. [71869]

Mr. Galbraith: Provisional figures for the year ending 30 September 1998 indicate that there were 7.3 NHS inpatient beds per 1,000 population.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average percentage of beds occupied in Scottish hospitals. [71868]

Mr. Galbraith: In the year ending 30 September 1998, provisional figures show that the average percentage of all NHS inpatient beds occupied was 79.9 per cent.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland with reference to the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland's report to him on the Second Statutory Review of Electoral Arrangements, in which local authority areas consultants were engaged (a) to complete, (b) to validate and (c) to examine the local authorities' initial proposals to the Commission; and what was the cost of such work to the Commission. [71891]

Mr. McLeish: No consultants were engaged by the Commission for the purposes mentioned for any local authority area.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

HIV

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the anonymised programme of HIV surveillance in Scotland, setting out for each survey currently in operation or planned the (a) location, (b) targeted populations, (c) clinical reasons for initial collection of specimens, (d) number of specimen collection venues, (e) annual specimen numbers and (f) most recent prevalence data. [71910]

Mr. Galbraith: The statistical information is set out in the tables.

The two principal targeted populations are genito-urinary clinic attenders and neonates. For the latter, prevalence of HIV antibody positivity among neonates is an indicator of the prevalence of HIV infection among childbearing women. Up to 1997, additional unlinked anonymous HIV testing was performed on pregnant women in Edinburgh and Dundee. Because HIV prevalence among this group has remained relatively low and stable, these additional surveys were discontinued as at December 1997.

Genito-urinary clinic attenders having a syphilis serology test or presenting with a new sexually-transmitted disease for the first time in a calender quarter are eligible for entry into the survey. HIV testing of neonates is performed on dried blood spots collected on Guthrie cards used for neonatal metabolic screening tests for conditions such as hypothyroidism and phenylketonuria.

For genito-urinary clinic attenders the collection venues are two genito-urinary clinics in Glasgow, one in Edinburgh, one in Dundee, one in Aberdeen, one in Falkirk and one in Stirling. For neonates, all Guthrie cards are sent directly to the neonatal metabolic screening laboratory at Stobhill General Hospital, Glasgow.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Gaelic Medium Units

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Gaelic-medium units in Scottish primary schools and the number of pupils studying them in each year since 1985. [71674]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The table shows numbers of Gaelic-medium units in Scottish primary schools and the total number of pupils in each year since 1985:

| | Units | Pupils |

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71844]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 22 February 1999]: In common with other departments, the work of press officers in my department includes responding to and correcting any misinformed or inaccurate media reporting of Government policy or activity. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

This is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks.

Solicitors (Payments)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the criteria he has applied (a) in selecting the areas in which solicitors will receive an enhanced fixed payment for summary criminal legal aid cases and (b) in determining the level of the enhanced payment. [71860]

Mr. McLeish: The criteria were chosen to reflect a combination of small numbers of cases dealt with and time taken to travel to the court.

The 15 Sheriff courts in Scotland with the lowest throughput of cases were therefore identified. Any courts which were less than 40 miles from the nearest other sheriff court and which could be reached without a sea crossing were eliminated from the list. The resultant list of courts for which an additional payment will be available is Campbeltown, Stornoway, Lockmaddy, Kirkwall, Lerwick, Oban, Portree, Lochgilphead and Rothesay Sheriff courts.

The additional fee of £50 was determined to provide reasonable remuneration to solicitors who have to represent clients in these courts. The Sheriff Court core fee has also been increased to £500 for all courts. From 1 July 1999 legal aid in Scotland will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Foundation for Sports and Arts

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been granted by the Foundation for Sports and Arts in Scotland over the past five years. [72267]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The information requested is set out in the table.

| Year | Sport | Arts |
|---|---|---|
| 1994 | 2,937,337.13 | 1,634,091.00 |
| 1995 | 1,867,394.00 | 1,223,425.00 |

| Mr. Ritchie Campbell | December 1998 | Rt. Hon. Donald Dewar MP |
| Miss Fiona Reid | December 1998 | Rt. Hon. Donald Dewar MP |

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff are employed by the Scottish Sports Council; and where they are based. [72274]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 22 February 1999]: In 1997–98 the Scottish Sports Council employed 187 staff at its headquarters in Edinburgh and at its three national centres at Aviemore, Largs and Cumbrae. More detailed information is contained in the Council's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98, a copy of which is in the Library.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much grant money was given or is planned to be given to (a) Scottish sports in total and (b) each sport in Scotland over (i) the past three years and (ii) the next three years. [72273]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The amount of grant aid given to governing bodies of sport by the Scottish Sports Council for the past three years is set out in the table. The projected total grant-in-aid, and the grant-in-aid to be made available to individual governing bodies of sport, for the next three financial years has not yet been agreed by the Scottish Sports Council.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

European Union Fraud

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to respond to the request dated 14 January from the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), asking him to publish the letter he sent to Pauline Green MEP concerning the European Parliament's vote on EU fraud and the motion of censure. [70664]

The Prime Minister: I have not been able to identify any such request. However, I have replied in full to the letter of 18 December from the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) about the European Commission's vote not to accept the recommendations of its Budgetary Control Committee to grant discharge to the Commission for its implementation of the 1996 Budget. If the right hon. and learned Member wishes me to do so, I would be glad to put copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 313, what is his policy towards each of the criticisms of the Civil Service set out in the second report of the Foreign Affairs Committee on Sierra Leone (HC116 of Session 1998–99). [71687]

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will review the guidelines for the management of Departments by Ministers following the publication of the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone (HC116 of Session 1998–99). [71828]

The Prime Minister: A formal reply to the Foreign Affairs Committee Report HC116 is being prepared by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and will be submitted to Parliament in due course.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the statement by the Foreign Secretary that the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone uncovered no evidence which was not contained in the Legg report and if this statement will be included in the formal Government response to the report. [71826]

The Prime Minister: I agree with my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. As I told the House on 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 313–14, the facts to which the Foreign Affairs Committee Report drew attention had already been covered by Sir Thomas Legg's inquiry, which confirmed that there was no conspiracy or cover up. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is preparing a formal reply to the Report which it will be submitting to Parliament shortly.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister on what date and at what time (a) he, (b) other departmental Ministers and (c) his officials first had access to the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone. [72603]

The Prime Minister: My Office received advance embargoed copies of the report from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office at approximately 0830 hours on Tuesday 9 February 1999.

Notes of Dissent

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1979 permanent secretaries have filed a formal note of dissent registering their disapproval of a ministerial instruction. [71681]

The Prime Minister: No central record is kept of any formal notes of dissent except where they lead to the issuing of a Ministerial instruction (or "Direction") as provided for in the procedures set out in paragraphs 12–15 of the Treasury document The Responsibilities of an Accounting Officer. Under these procedures the Treasury is informed when a Ministerial Direction is issued. Until December 1994 Departments were required to inform the Treasury about Ministerial Directions concerning propriety and regularity only, and not those concerning value for money. From December 1994 Departments were required to inform the Treasury of both kinds of Directions. Treasury records show that since 1981 the Treasury has been informed of 28 Directions. No central record is held of notes (if there are any) recording an Accounting Officer's dissatisfaction at a Ministerial Direction.

Select Committees

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the future relationship between Ministers and parliamentary Select Committees. [71825]

The Prime Minister: In their dealings with Select Committees, Ministers will continue to abide by the Resolution on Ministerial Accountability adopted by the House on 19 March 1997.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken to establish an international test day for the millennium compliance of computer systems; and if he will make a statement. [72156]

The Prime Minister: It is clear that testing is the cornerstone of a successful Year 2000 programme. As such all Government Departments and agencies are required to have testing strategies in place. Testing is also highlighted in the advice on tackling the millennium bug that Action 2000 makes available to small businesses. We have also been encouraging other countries to take testing seriously. However, decisions on the appropriate level of testing are for individual organisations to make, whether they are in the public or private sector, depending on the business risks faced if a particular system, or the interfaces between that system and other organisations, fails. In a number of sectors, there has been a co-ordinated approach to testing.

However, organising an international test day would not only be extremely difficult but might risk diverting resources away from on-going work.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 521, concerning Iraq, if he will seek to have the work of the Security Council's panel on the humanitarian situation in Iraq expedited. [72503]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The humanitarian panel is expected to start work on 1 March. In the interest of identifying measures to make the provision of humanitarian relief more effective and thereby improve the situation of the Iraqi people, the panel will wish to give full consideration to all the relevant issues. Meanwhile we are continuing to work with the United Nations to improve the present "oil for food" arrangements.

Visits (Wales)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his visits to Wales over the past four months, and the cost of these visits. [72254]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 February 1999]: I have visited Wales on three occasions over the past four months. These were:

Friday 27 November—Cardiff

Friday 15 January—Mold and Clwyd

Wednesday 3 February—Cardiff.

It is not possible to give full costs for these visits as some of the invoices have not yet been processed.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the representations he has received during the last six months on genetically modified crops. [72206]

The Prime Minister: In the last six months my office has received over 100,000 items of correspondence from members of the public. Of these approximately 1,000 have related to biotechnology issues and of these approximately 50 have related specifically to genetically modified crops.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if he has been present at meetings between members of the Government and representatives of the companies promoting genetically modified crops. [72235]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 February 1999]: I and my Ministers are in regular contact with representatives of all those with an interest in biotechnology—including environmental groups, consumer groups and biotechnology companies.

Delegations

Ms Keeble: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the changes in the composition of the United Kingdom Delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of the Western European Union. [73079]

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friends the Members for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson) and for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright) have been appointed as substitute representatives in place of my hon. Friends the Members for Bristol, North-West (Dr. Naysmith) and for Stourbridge (Ms Shipley).

Genetic Modification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) on how many occasions he or officials of his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Cathy McGlynn of Bell Pottinger; [72061]

(2) what was the (a) purpose and (b) outcome of the meeting between officials in the No. 10 Policy Unit and representatives of Monsanto; and if he will make a statement; [72243]

(3) on how many occasions (a) he and (b) officials in his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Mr. Stan Greenberg of Greenberg Research; [72246]

(4) on how many occasions he or officials in his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Dave Hill of Bell Pottinger. [72063]

The Prime Minister: I and my officials are in regular contact with representatives of all those with an interest in biotechnology—including environmental groups, consumer groups and biotechnology companies. It is not the normal practice of Governments to give details of specific meetings with private individuals or companies.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

County Court Closures

35. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his policy on county court closures. [70856]

Mr. Hoon: In considering the future of any county court, the Lord Chancellor must take into account a variety of factors including accommodation, workload, the number of personal callers, judicial sittings, costs, and the alternative arrangements that could be made for court users after closure.

House of Lords

37. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the role of his Department in respect of Government proposals for the future of the House of Lords. [70858]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has had a prominent role in the formulation of the Government's proposals, as chairman of the Cabinet Committee on House of Lords Reform. I am helping to steer the House of Lords Bill in its passage through this House.

38. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on recent discussions which he has had with the Church of England bishops on proposals for a reformed House of Lords. [70859]

Mr. Hoon: Neither I nor the Lord Chancellor has had such discussions.

Adjudicators

39. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will reform the system of selecting adjudicators. [70860]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to change the present system of selecting Immigration Adjudicators. Immigration Adjudicator posts may be occupied on a full or part-time basis. There are no statutory qualifications for appointment as an Immigration Adjudicator. However, in practice the Lord Chancellor will normally consider only persons who hold a seven year general qualification within the meaning of section 71 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, who are advocates or solicitors in Scotland, or barristers or solicitors in Northern Ireland, of not less than 7 years' standing. Part-time posts are filled by application and interview following an open advertised competition, save on a few occasions the Lord Chancellor had directly seconded serving Circuit Judges and Recorders on the recommendation of the Chief Immigration Adjudicator, His Honour Judge Dunn QC. Full-time Immigration Adjudicators are normally appointed, following application and interview, from the ranks of those who have gained sufficient experience through service as part-time Immigration Adjudicators or part-time legal members of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal.

Legal Aid

40. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to publicise his reform of the legal aid system. [70861]

Mr. Hoon: The Government's planned reforms were first outlined in October 1997. Since then, my Department's and the Legal Aid Board's efforts to publicise them have included numerous speeches; interviews and articles in the national and legal media; consultation papers on various aspects of the reforms; and, most importantly, the White Paper "Modernising Justice", which was published last November. The full text of the White Paper is available on the Internet, and a shortened summary has been widely circulated. In addition, the Explanatory Notes for the Access to Justice Bill are publicly available, and set out details of the Government's intentions for the reformed scheme.

Information Meeting Pilot

41. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his assessment of the work of the information meeting pilot for Merseyside and North Wales. [70862]

Mr. Hoon: The Merseyside and North Wales Information Meeting pilot is making a valuable contribution to an extensive pilot programme of information meetings. The pilots are being fully and independently evaluated by a research team from the Centre for Family Studies at the University of Newcastle.

Young Offenders

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made in the fast tracking of young offenders through the magistrates courts. [70857]

Mr. Hoon: In the youth court the average number of days from charge or summons to "completion" fell from 87 days in June 1997 to 77 days in June 1998.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, column 724, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71031]

Mr. Hoon: [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I am not aware of any such expenditure by task force or review bodies. The review of civil justice and legal aid, by Sir Peter Middleton, was published by the Lord Chancellor's Department in-house print unit.

Commonhold

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions his Department has had with (a) Ministers in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and (b) others on the preparation of a consultation document on the introduction of commonhold. [72313]

Mr. Hoon: I have spoken to colleagues in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to ensure that any possible overlaps between commonhold and the Government's policy on leasehold reform do not obstruct progress.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what timetable he has set for public consultation on the introduction of commonhold. [72314]

Mr. Hoon: Introducing commonhold is a manifesto objective to which the Government remain strongly committed. We are at present considering how best to consult the public whether by way of a general policy paper or a draft Bill, or both. Once that decision is taken, I will set and publish a timetable for consultation.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average age of a QC on appointment in each of the last five years. [72612]

Mr. Hoon: The average age of a QC on appointment in each of the last five years is as follows:

| Year | Age |
|---|---|
| 1994 | 43.8 |
| 1995 | 43.8 |
| 1996 | 43.9 |
| 1997 | 43.6 |
| 1998 | 43.5 |

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the article in The Lawyer magazine of 15 February 1999, indicating that the Bar Council is prepared to meet the cost of administration of the QC system. [72516]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has seen the article. He notes that, according to the article, the General Council of the Bar would like to see the costs of processing silk applications being recoverable from all silk applicants. He will continue to review the matter.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will (a) list the public inquiries conducted by (i) Government departments and (ii) local authorities over the last three years which were chaired by QCs, (b) list the name of the QC in each case and (c) indicate the fee paid to the QC for his or her services. [72515]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not collected centrally and, therefore, my hon. Friend's question could not be answered without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many QCs have had that distinction withdrawn in each of the last 10 years; and in each case, for what reason. [72613]

Mr. Hoon: There has been no occasion in the last ten years when my noble and learned Friend or his immediate predecessor has advised Her Majesty to revoke the award of Queen's Counsel.

Community Legal Service

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to ensure equality of access to the proposed community legal service for those on low incomes. [70896]

Mr. Hoon: The Community Legal Service will be of particular benefit to people with low incomes, as its aim is to improve access to information and help with potential or actual legal problems through developing a comprehensive network of legal service providers of consistently good quality. This network will involve a variety of providers, including lawyers in private practice, Law Centres, Citizens Advice Bureaux, and other advice centres, and will look to meet the needs and priorities of the local community, and not simply those currently eligible for civil legal aid.

Asylum Appeals

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) how long on average people who (a) were refused leave to remain in the United Kingdom in (i) March 1997, (ii) June 1997, (iii) September 1997, (iv) December 1997, (v) March 1998 and (vi) June 1998, (1) for a year on the grounds of marriage, (2) indefinitely on grounds of marriage, (3) indefinitely as a child of parents settled here, (4) indefinitely as the parent of children settled here and (5) for a longer period as a student and (b) were refused asylum in the United Kingdom waited between the date of refusal and the date of determination of their appeal by an adjudicator or special adjudicator; and how long he estimates those refused in each category in (x) September 1998, (y) December 1998 and (z) January 1999 will wait; [71795]

(2) how long, on average, people who were refused entry clearance at a British post abroad in (i) March 1997, (ii) June 1997, (iii) September 1997, (iv) December 1997, (v) March 1998 and (vi) June 1998 (a) to join a British or settled spouse in the UK, (b) to join a British or settled parent in the UK, (c) as the elderly parent of a British or settled adult child in the UK, (d) to come to follow a course of studies for more than six months, waited between the date of lodging the appeal and (1) the appeal papers being sent to the UK and (2) the date of the adjudicator's determination of their appeal; and how long he estimates those refused in each category in (x) September 1998, (y) December 1998 and (z) January 1999 will wait. [71783]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

Information is available only for the waiting times between asylum refusals and adjudicator appeal determinations. This is given in the table. Based on this information, it is projected that similar cases lodged in September 1998, December 1998 and January 1999, are likely to take approximately seven months.

I regret that information on the total time period between refusal and the appeal hearing in non-asylum cases could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Average time to appeal determination in asylum refusal cases[1], March 1997, June 1997, September 1997, December 1997, March 1998 and June 1998

| Month of asylum decision | Average time to appeal determination (months) |
|---|---|
| March 1997 | 8 |
| June 1997 | 8 |
| September 1997 | 9 |
| December 1997 | 8 |
| March 1998 | 6 |
| June 1998 | 5 |

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70027]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and Learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom departments are expected to use for the rest of the government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Christian Broadcasters

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what regulations have been introduced which would implicitly exclude Christian broadcasters from the process of obtaining a national radio frequency. [71551]

Janet Anderson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 11 February 1999, Official Report, columns 301–02.

Beefeaters

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the remuneration of the Beefeaters at the Tower of London. [72221]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 February 1999]: Including rostered overtime and allowances, the total salaries of Yeoman Warders at the Tower of London are typically in the region of £18,000 to £19,000 per annum. They occupy accommodation at the Tower for which they pay 8.5 per cent. of their basic pensionable salary. The Yeoman Warders also have a long established practice of receiving gratuities freely offered by visitors. These gratuities are shared by the Yeoman body, declared to the Inland Revenue and a small percentage is given to charities. This practice is under review.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72004]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The services provided by KPMG for the Department for Culture, Media and Sport were as follows:

(a) no services for the period 1 May 1997 to date.

(b) for the corresponding period prior to 1 May

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Performance Appraisal Training | 12,225 |
| Pay Delegation Consultancy | 9,554 |
| Research for Benchmarking Small Hotels | 110,673 |
| Research for Contracting Out Public Libraries | 2,954 |
| Research for Museums Documentation Association | 12,500 |
| Review of Broadcasting Standards Commission and Broadcasting Complaints Commission | 44,680 |
| Review of RCHME | 4,406 |

Museums, Galleries and Libraries

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage the use of National Lottery funds to help (a) museums, (b) galleries and (c) libraries add to their collections. [72021]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) has already contributed, and will continue to provide, a large amount of capital investment to museums, galleries and libraries. The HLF is currently preparing its strategic plan; funding for the addition of important collections or single objects to museum and gallery collections and the acquisition of library collections of heritage importance will continue to be a significant part of its overall support for the heritage.

The Government are committed to ensuring that every public library has access to the extensive resources of the National Grid for Learning. The New Opportunities Fund will be providing £70 million to assist in the development of new digital resources and the provision of relevant training for public library staff.

Film Industry

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what measures his Department is taking to develop craft skills in the film industry; [72215]

(2) what plans he has to improve the technical skills base of the film industry; [72219]

(3) what plans he has to encourage the provision of apprenticeships in the film industry. [72216]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 22 February 1999]: One of the recommendations made of the Film Policy Review Group was for the formulation of an integrated training strategy for film and a Skills Investment Fund for training made up of voluntary contributions from film production. The training strategy we have now developed includes proposals for new provision for craft skills, the technical skills base and apprenticeships in the film industry. We are currently working towards agreement with the industry on the detail of how the Fund will work and how the training strategy will be implemented.

TREASURY

Electronic Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what difficulties have been encountered with the new electronic correspondence system in his Department; and to what extent they have been resolved. [71732]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The Treasury, Inland Revenue and Custom and Excise have recently introduced a new electronic correspondence handling system which will strengthen the systems for processing and monitoring ministerial correspondence. The technical problems encountered at the outset have now been tackled.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71456]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The information is as follows:

Number of press releases issued

| Department | Year 1990 | 1991 | 1992 | 1993 | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 | 1998 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Treasury[1] | 86 | 107 | 153 | 140 | 162 | 185 | 187 | 184 | 239 |
| Inland Revenue | 170 | 240 | 173 | 271 | 252 | 270 | 235 | 138 | 168 |
| Customs and Excise | 88 | 77 | 62 | 76 | 52 | 62 | 59 | 37 | 31 |
| Office for National Statistics | 181 | 181 | 193 | 193 | 285 | 308 | 282 | 372 | 441 |

[1] The numbers include press releases issued on Budget and Pre-Budget Report days.
[2] The Debt Management Office was launched on 1 April 1998.
[3] Includes only press releases issued in the UK.
[4] The Valuation Office started issuing its own press releases in April 1998. Before this they were issued by the Inland Revenue.
[5] Includes Building Societies Commission and Friendly Societies Commission.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71471]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Rules governing the work of the Government Information and Communications Service (GICS) were set out in guidance published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House.

Since May 1997 (May 1997-December 1998) the Treasury has been billed a total of £22,819 for the services of the Central Office of Information, which distribute press releases electronically, by fax and by courier service. This figure does not include postage. The same information requested of the Treasury's agencies and non-departmental bodies is not held centrally and could be obtained only a disproportionate cost.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71857]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 February 1999]: In common with other departments, the work of press officers in the Treasury includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this is a routine part of a Department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

"Getting Ready for the Euro"

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the second edition of the six monthly report "Getting Ready for the Euro". [72995]

Ms Hewitt: It is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Fuel Duty

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the levels of tax payable by way of duty and VAT on the current average price of a litre of (a) unleaded, (b) diesel and (c) leaded fuel in (i) the UK and (ii) each other EU state. [72294]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 February 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Essex, North (Mr. Jenkin) on 10 November 1998, Official Report, columns 152–53.

The levels of tax payable by way of duty and VAT on the current average price of a litre of (a) unleaded, (b) diesel and (c) leaded fuel in (i) the UK and (ii) each other EU state are:

Pence per litre

| | Unleaded petrol | | Standard diesel | | Leaded petrol | |

| United Kingdom | 43.99 | 9.44 | 44.99 | 9.61 | 49.26 | 10.43 |

The Excise duty rate in the United Kingdom for low sulphur diesel is 42.99 pence per litre, and the VAT on the current average price is 9.76 pence per litre.Rates of excise duty and VAT on low sulphur diesel are not available for the countries of the European Union other than the United Kingdom.

Film Industry

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made on the impact of changes to tax relief on travelling and subsistence expenses on the British film industry. [71743]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The tax rules on employee travel expenses, introduced in April 1998, followed lengthy and thorough public consultations. Since the legislation, the Inland Revenue has had extensive contacts with film industry representatives to provide guidance for the industry on the operation of the new rules.

Overseas Investment Exchanges

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if United States investment exchanges have applied to be recognised over the past year as overseas investment exchanges in the United Kingdom under sections 37 and 40 of the Financial Services Act 1986. [72996]

Ms Hewitt: The Cantor Financial Futures Exchange (CFFE) applied for recognition in September 1998 and, with effect from today, has been granted recognition as an Overseas Investment Exchange, having satisfied the conditions under sections 37 and 40 of the Financial Services Act 1986. CFFE is therefore able to carry out investment business in the UK.

Married Couples Tax Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue monitors (a) whether customers receiving the married couples tax allowances are living permanently together and if this is required before they receive the married couples tax allowance and (b) if customers receiving the additional personal tax allowance in respect of dependent children are living with those children, and if it is a condition of the tax allowance that those claiming it live with such children. [71892]

Dawn Primarolo: The married couples allowance is available to a married couple who live together at some time during a year of assessment. A husband and wife are treated as living together for income tax purposes unless they are separated under a court order or by a deed of separation, or they are in fact separated and the separation is likely to remain permanent.

The additional personal allowance is available to people who are not living with a spouse (or who live with a spouse who is totally incapacitated) and who have one or more qualifying children resident with them at some time during a year of assessment.

The Inland Revenue treat claims to personal tax allowances in much the same way as other claims to relief. Revenue staff apply risk assessment procedures in order to identify potentially incorrect claims. If the Revenue have a reason to believe that an allowance is being falsely claimed, they have powers to make appropriate inquiries and recover any tax lost.

Income Tax (Construction Industry)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax deducted from annual earnings in each £2,000 band between £10,000 and £30,000 by tax paying sub-contractors and individual craft workers in the construction industry. [69745]

Dawn Primarolo: The available data for 1997–98 are not yet of sufficient quality to yield estimates in such detail. The following estimates are for each £5,000 band of annual turnover.

| Gross annual turnover of sole trade business | Total amount deducted, 1997–98 (£ million) |
|---|---|
| £10,000 to 15,000 | 240 |
| £15,001 to 20,000 | 240 |
| £20,001 to 25,000 | 130 |
| £25,001 to 30,000 | 60 |

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average annual expenses claimed against taxable gross earnings of £25,000 by tax paying sub-contractors and individual craft workers in the construction industry. [69746]

Dawn Primarolo: For the tax year 1996–97 the average value of annual allowable expenses (including materials) plus capital allowances claimed by a subcontractor with annual turnover of £25,000 was about £10,600.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will calculate (a) the tax deductible and (b) the tax payable for a sub-contracting carpenter/joiner with a turnover of £25,129, work expenses of £6,799 and personal pension payments of £3,470. [69747]

Dawn Primarolo: The maximum amount deductible on account of income tax and Class 4 national insurance contributions would be £5,780, depending on the amount of work outside the Construction Industry Scheme included in the turnover figure, and on the amount of expenses classified as materials for the purposes of the Scheme.

Assuming that only the single person's allowance is claimed and that tax relief is available on the whole of the personal pension contribution the liability to income tax and Class 4 national insurance contributions for the 1998–99 tax year would be £2,972.

If the deductions exceed the liability to income tax and Class 4 national insurance contribution then the individual can claim a repayment of the excess. If the business accounting period end date is early in the tax year, it should be possible to obtain some or all of this repayment within the tax year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of tax paying sub-contractors and individual craft workers earning less than £30,000 per annum to be included in the new tax system for the construction industry. [69744]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that, very roughly, half a million individual subcontractors will be issued with registration cards (and paid with deductions on account of income tax and Class 4 national insurance contributions) under the new Construction Industry Scheme. This broadly equates to those remaining in the scheme and who have annual turnovers (less materials) of under £30,000.

A more exact assessment is not possible because of the large number of formerly self-employed subcontractors who have moved into employment, and because of uncertainty about how many other individuals will decide to apply for registration cards.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total expenditure on the working families tax credit in Portsmouth in its first year of operation. [69689]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that such estimates are not available.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of family credit recipients will not be eligible for increased credit under the working families tax credit programme. [69753]

Dawn Primarolo: All family credit recipients will also be eligible for working families tax credit. Working families tax credit is more generous and will have a higher income threshold, and a slower taper than family credit. In addition, it will include a new childcare tax credit, which will provide up to 70 per cent. of eligible childcare costs up to maximum costs of £100 per week for one child and £150 per week for two or more children.

No family credit recipients will receive less under working families tax credit. Seventy-five per cent. of family credit recipients will gain.

Computerisation Projects

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many IT computerisation projects his Department has commissioned from the private sector; on which dates they were commissioned; what was the expenditure on such projects to date; and what was the termination date of the projects. [71785]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury has commissioned two IT computerisation projects from the private sector since the start of this Administration. The two systems are:

(i) an upgrade to the Ministerial Correspondence System which was commissioned in November 1997; and

(ii) a new Financial Information System, the underlying system for the Public Expenditure Survey information. This project was commissioned in January 1998.

The two projects are still ongoing. The precise costs of the contracts cannot be given for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

An IT computerisation project commissioned from the private sector has been taken to be one in which the software has been specifically written to address the particular needs of the Department. As such it excludes the purchase of small, general-purpose software packages.

Expenditure (Scotland)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will (a) estimate the total spending on housing within the Scottish Block in each year from 1994–95 to 2000–2001 in (i) current and (ii) constant 1998–99 prices, (b) estimate the annual percentage change (i) for each of these categories and (ii) in total, (c) estimate (i) the cumulative change and (ii) in total between the years 1994–95 and 2000–2001 and between the years 1996–97 and 2000–2001 and (d) estimate the same as requested in (a) (b) and (c) for the housing expenditure in England; [71773]

(2) if he will (a) estimate the total spending (i) by main category of expenditure and (ii) in total, across each of the main categories of the Scottish Block as determined by the Block and Barnett Formula arrangement in each year from 1994–95 to 2000–2001 in (1) current and (2) constant 1998–99 prices, (b) estimate the annual percentage change for (i) each of these categories and (ii) in total, (c) estimate the cumulative change (i) for each category and (ii) in total between the years 1994–95 and 2000–2001 and between the years 1996–97 and 2000–2001 and (d) estimate the same as requested in (a)(b) and (c) for the equivalent expenditure categories in England that form the basis for the determination of the Barnett Formula calculation, (i) for those categories that are available, (ii) and in total; [71772]

(3) if he will (a) estimate the total spending on health across the Scottish Block as determined by the Block and Barnett Formula arrangement in each year from 1994–95 to 2000–2001 in (i) current and (i) constant 1998–99 prices, (b) estimate the annual percentage change (i) for each of these categories and (ii) in total, (c) estimate the cumulative change (i) for each category and (ii) in total between the years 1994–95 and 2000–2001 and between the years 1996–97 and 2000–2001 and (d) estimate the same as requested in (a) (b) and (c) for the equivalent health expenditure in England. [71774]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested by the hon. Member on total spending on health, housing and other main categories of the Scottish Block for the years 1994–95 to 1998–99 can be derived from data in the Scottish Office Departmental Report, published in April 1998 (Cm 3914). The allocation of expenditure to these programmes for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 138–42; my right hon. Friend provided further information on allocations to programmes to the hon. Member on 10 November 1998, Official Report, columns 157–58. Further details will be available in the 1999 Scottish Office Departmental Report to be published at the end of March. Relative levels of spending on programmes funded by the Scottish Block are determined by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. From 1 July 1999 decisions on the allocation of expenditure will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Comparative data for public spending levels in England and Scotland were published in Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses (PESA) 1998–99 (cm 3901) in April 1998. New estimates up to 1997–98 will be published in PESA 1999–2000 at the end of March. The Reports of the Department of Health, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and other relevant departmental reports giving details of planned spending for 2000–01 and beyond will also be published at the end of March.

HEALTH

Health Authority Wages

Mr. Colleh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 324–26, on average wages, if he will list the actual average wage paid by each of the London health authorities in each year since 1995. [68962]

Mr. Denham: The precise information requested is not collected centrally. Information is collected about the annual total salaries and wages paid to National Health Service staff each year, and the number of directly employed staff at a single point in time, for example, 30 September. Workforce figures for individual health authority areas are not available centrally for 1995. The table uses these two pieces of information to produce estimates of average wages. These estimates should be interpreted with caution for the following reasons.

The number of staff employed by individual organisations will change over the course of a year. These changes are not reflected in the point in time estimate for workforce numbers, but are reflected in the total annual salaries and wages.

The coverage of the workforce numbers and salaries and wages differ slightly. For example, the costs of non-executive board members and non-nursing staff on short-term, flexible contracts who work on an "as and when" basis are included in the salaries and wages figures, but are excluded from the workforce figures.

The figures collected by the Department for individual NHS trusts and health authorities were collected to provide national estimates and were validated accordingly. For example, small inaccuracies in the figures for individual organisations may not have been identified.

Mental Health Services

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what joint finance moneys and project funding are being provided to district health authorities and local authority services by his Department in the current year to improve the range and quality of day care and other facilities for the mentally ill. [72584]

Mr. Hutton: Over £84.5 million in joint finance moneys and project funding are being provided to health authorities and local authority services by the Department in the current year to improve the range and quality of day care and other facilities for mentally ill people.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure has been authorised in (a) the current and (b) the next financial year in each health region for improved mental health training for general practitioners and others responsible for providing primary care; and if he will make a statement. [72586]

Mr. Hutton: This information requested is not available centrally. In 1999–2000, £146 million extra funding will be invested in mental health services of which £12 million will provide additional support for education and training of doctors and nurses. This will include those working in primary health care.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the Performance Assessment Framework for Personal Social Services promised in the White Paper, Modernising Health and Social Services. [72898]

Mr. Hutton: The Department of Health has today published the consultation document A New Approach to Social Services Performance setting out the details of our proposals for a new Performance Assessment Framework for social services and an associated set of 46 performance indicators. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The Framework and its indicators will help Government, Councils and local people to assess how well local social services are performing. Councils and Government will be able to use the framework and the indicators to identify areas of possible good practice and areas where improvement is required.

We are redefining and strengthening our approach to social services performance to improve the Department of Health's capacity to assess performance and to put in place the necessary structures to support Best Value in social services. The Performance Assessment Framework is one part of this. We will build upon the success of the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) Inspection programme and the SSI/Audit Commission Joint Reviews and enhance the performance role of the Regional Offices of the SSI.

A New Approach to Social Services Performance describes these new arrangements and how they will help to ensure Best Value is delivered in social services.

DEFENCE

Logistics Targets

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what targets he intends to set in the logistics area for the rationalisation of functions and processes on a defence-wide basis. [72049]

Mr. George Robertson: The Chief of Defence Logistics will, from 1 April 1999, take financial and management responsibility for the three Service logistics organisations. He will contribute to the SDR targets for reductions in the value of stockholdings and the rationalisation of purchasing procedures. How he will achieve rationalisation will not be the subject of separate targets. During the transition to a unified logistics organisation by April 2000, CDL will develop defence-wide logistics targets for delivering outputs.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the Strategic Defence Review, what criteria are to be set for (a) the Chief of Defence Logistics and (b) the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency for realising the benefits of SMART procurement in the logistics area. [72048]

Mr. George Robertson: Under the Smart Procurement Initiative, the Chief of Defence Logistics (CDL) will be creating Integrated Project Teams exactly as the Defence Procurement Agency will be doing. This will deliver support to in-service equipment and contribute to the overall savings for Smart Procurement Initiative. Each project team will be set performance targets. The criteria for these targets are still being developed. There are no specific procurement related targets for the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency.

Defence Research Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Defence Research Committee has met since 1 January 1998; and if he will place in the Library a list of items discussed at each of these meetings. [71959]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1 January 1998 the Defence Research Committee has met twice, on 31 March 1998 and on 16 November 1998. I will place a list of items discussed on each occasion in the Library of the House.

Joint Force 2000 Initiative

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further progress has been made on the development of the Joint Force 2000 initiative; and if he will make a statement. [72992]

Mr. George Robertson: On 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 979, I announced that we would be forming the joint Royal Navy/Royal Air Force Harrier force to be known as Joint Force 2000. Since last October, work has continued on the organisational changes necessary to take forward the Joint Force 2000 initiative. I can confirm that the new Headquarters will form in RAF Strike Command on 1 April next year under the command of a Rear Admiral. This Headquarters will be located at RAF High Wycombe. He will have two subordinate force commanders, both of whom will be RAF Air Commodores, one of whom will command the combined Harrier force, Joint Force 2000, and the other the RAF's existing forces of Nimrod Maritime Patrol aircraft and Search and Rescue helicopters. As importantly, we have also decided, subject to a period of consultation with Trades Unions and other interested parties which begins today, that the RN's Sea Harrier force, currently based at RNAS Yeovilton, will join the RAF's Harrier force at RAF Cottesmore and RAF Wittering in 2003.

We see the collocation of the existing Harrier fleets as realising significant operational benefits and as a practical and symbolic step toward the creation of a truly joint force. For the longer term, and when the Joint Force is re-equipped with the Future Carrier Borne Aircraft, we have identified RAF Cottesmore as its most suitable home. We are making real progress on the development and creation of Joint Force 2000 and we are doing it significantly earlier than originally anticipated. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the two Services concerned for their far-sighted and constructive attitude which has made this possible.

Courts Martial

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel court martialled in the last 10 years, (a) had joined the armed forces before their eighteenth birthdays, (b) were aged under 21 years at the time of the offence and (c) had applied unsuccessfully for discharge. [72615]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Military Corrective Training Centre

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of detainees at the Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester are held for offences covered only by military law with no civilian equivalent. [72614]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Of the 114 detainees held at the Military Corrective Training Centre on 19 February 1999, 55 (48.25 per cent.) were being held for offences covered only by military law, such as absence without leave, desertion, and disobeying a lawful command.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Public Bodies

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department publish (a) the minutes of meetings, (b) the agendas of meetings and documents for those meetings and (c) a register of members' interests; and whether in each case this is under a statutory requirement. [69832]

Clare Short [holding answer 10 February 1999]: The Development Awareness Working Group publishes the agenda, documents for, and minutes of its meetings and maintains a register of members' interests. There are no statutory requirements for it to do so.

There are no statutory requirements for the publication of documents or maintenance of a register of members' interests, and this is not done, in respect of:

The Overseas Services Pensions Scheme Advisory Board

The Indian Family Pensions Funds Body of Commissioners

The Know How Fund Advisory Board

The Advisory Committee on Overseas Economic and Social Research.

Land Mines

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial assistance was made available in 1998 to other countries for land mine clearance in those countries; and if she will make a statement. [72558]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) has committed over £6.2 million to humanitarian mine action, to date, in 1998–99. Clearance projects account for the major part of this programme.

DFID's progress report on humanitarian mine action for 1998 and its future plans will be published on 1 March, marking the passing into international law of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Landmines and on their Destruction.

Ambassadors for British Business

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the role of Ambassadors for British Business in the work of her Department; and how many such Ambassadors she has met since 1 May 1997. [72289]

Clare Short: My Department has begun to consult widely and developed new working relationships with the business community, both in-country and in the UK since 1997. As we make clear in our Development White Paper, business has a strong interest in successful development and the sustainable economic growth necessary to reduce poverty requires a thriving private sector. We consult through established business groups rather than on a company by company basis. I have so far met with six of the thirty-six Ambassadors for British Business to discuss areas of particular interest to my Department's objectives.

Agricultural Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money her Department has spent supporting the research and development of agricultural biotechnology since 1 May 1997. [72069]

Clare Short: Figures are not available in the form requested. My Department supports agricultural research which aims to generate benefits for poor people in developing countries by applying new knowledge to the management of their natural resources. Many forms of biotechnology are used as tools in this research but separate data are not maintained on their cost. Since May 1997 expenditure on agricultural research projects with some biotechnology content is estimated to be about £20 million. Expenditure over the same period on projects which involve genetic modification is estimated to be about £1.2 million.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to change the 1998–2000 External Financing Limit for the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [73221]

Clare Short: The External Financing Limit for CDC or 1998/99 will be reduced by £15,200 from zero to minus £15,200,000. This reduction takes account of an upward adjustment made last year to allow CDC increased borrowing in early 1998.

CABINET OFFICE

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70026]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The Department has spent £1,552,559 on legal advice since 1 May 1997. The detailed information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Scales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom Departments are expected to use for the rest of Government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not on one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the Government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example, where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71339]

Dr. Jack Cunningham [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The following constituencies have been visited in an official capacity either by my predecessor or me between 1 January 1998 and 5 February 1999:

Wansbeck; Cambridge; Manchester, Central; Bristol, West; Carlisle; Edinburgh, Central; Torbay; Lancaster & Wyre; Workington; Copeland; Cheadle; and Stockport.

Additionally, a number of constituencies in central and inner London were visited in the course of ministerial duties.

Policy Discussions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will invite all hon. Members to recommend policy areas for detailed discussions using the Joint Consultative Committee mechanism. [71636]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I am always happy to consider suggestions from hon. Members.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71519]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The reviews, task forces and advisory groups, which have been established by my Department since 1 May 1997 and reports they have published are as follows.

The costs incurred could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Open Government Initiative

Mr. Singh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the total number of releases under the open Government initiative. [73167]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The latest number of records released under the open Government initiative now stands at over 96,000 and relates to releases up to the end of September 1998. This represents an increase of about 13 per cent. over the previous total of over 85,000 which was announced by my right hon. Friend the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Dr. Clark) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 394, and related to the total figure as at the end of September 1997.

WALES

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70039]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 8 February 1999]: Welsh Office records indicate that during the years in question the following London barristers' chambers have been instructed directly by the Welsh Office or via the Treasury Solicitor's Office:

Breams Buildings
1 Sergeants Inn
Essex Street
1 Grays Inn Square
11 Kings Bench Walk
2 Hare Court
Monkton Court.

There may also be other chambers who have been instructed by Treasury Solicitor's Office on behalf of the Welsh Office but for whom records are not readily available in the Welsh Office.

No London Solicitors' firms have been instructed by or on behalf of the Welsh Office during the past four years. The Welsh Office does not maintain a central continuous record of fees paid to Counsel over the four year period. The Treasury Solicitor's Department does not have such a record either.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as first Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition, the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior Counsel whom Departments are expected to use for the rest of the Government's civil litigation. The panels currently comprise 103 barristers from 42 different sets of chambers. The Attorney-General will shortly appoint a third panel of very junior barristers. The Attorney-General's individual nomination is required before a barrister who is not one of the approved panels can be instructed to appear for the Government in litigation.

Departments may use firms of solicitors in addition to the Treasury Solicitor and their departmental legal advisers, for example where the relevant expertise lies in the private sector. The relationship is subject to the usual confidentiality which operates between lawyer and client.

Open Countryside

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much land held by his Department he estimates would fall within the definition of open country as set out in the consultation document "Access to the Open Countryside" of February 1998. [71635]

Mr. Michael: The estimated total area of land held by my Department and falling within the definition of open countryside as set out in the consultation document is 300 acres (122 Ha).

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to report on the performance of training and enterprise councils in Wales. [73080]

Mr. Hain: I am pleased to announce that the first annual report on Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) in Wales, covering the 1997–98 financial year, is being published today.

This report represents a significant step forward in explaining the work of TECs, and in making them more accountable to the people of Wales and their elected representatives.

The report notes that an increasing number of young people entered the Modern Apprenticeship Programme in 1997–98—723 more than in the previous year and 18 per cent. more than the target for the year. Youth credit starts, at 17,265, were 15 per cent. above target, although decreasing levels of unemployment resulted in only 9,001 adults starting on the Training for Work programme against a target of 11,456. NVQs per 100 leavers rose from 55 per cent. to 57 per cent. for the youth training programmes and from 38 per cent. to 44 per cent. for the adult training programmes, by comparison with 1996–97. 52 per cent. of the adult trainees found jobs on leaving training as compared with 48 per cent. the year before.

Support was given to 1,648 new business start ups (an increase of 10 per cent. on 1996–97) and the Sole Traders Initiative, which was launched on an all-Wales basis at the start of the year, resulted in some 293 first employees being taken on by hitherto singleton businesses.

Other significant achievements by the TECs in 1997–98 included:

the levering in of some £1 million of private sector funding—and some £2.8 million of European funding for local projects.

a good start to the implementation of the Action Plan for Manufacturing Training in Wales significant improvements in the rates of success of disabled young people and young people from ethnic minorities in achieving NVQs.

60,403 school children undertook a work experience placement, against a target of 59,396.

4,214 school teachers and further education college staff undertook an industrial placement, against a target of 3,068.

27,000 adults were provided with careers information under the Adult Guidance Initiative and 7,858 of these were given bespoke counselling.

In addition, the TECs supported a wide variety of projects from their Local Initiative Funds, including homework clubs, revision weeks, Saturday clubs offering contacts with local businesses, outreach work with disaffected young people and technician training to NVQ level 4 for adults in employment.

The report provides a synopsis of all these activities and of the overall financial position of TECs in Wales. Copies will be distributed to all Members with constituencies in Wales and placed in the Library of the House. Further details are to be found in the individual annual reports of each of the TECs which are available from their company offices.

Following the transfer of functions, this matter will be for the National Assembly.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 400, on Departmental asset sales, if he will list the location and previous use of the cottage sold by Cadw; and if he will make a statement. [71985]

Mr. Michael: This sale relates to two properties—21 and 23 Rosehill Street, Conwy. No. 21 was acquired in 1968, No. 23 acquired in 1969. The properties were subsequently converted into one unit to provide mess facilities and works depot to Cadw's workstaff.

On completion of works in the area, the property was declared surplus and sold through agents, Beresford Adams. The sale was completed on 18 April 1997.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Nations Act 1946

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will introduce measures to amend the United Nations Act 1946 so that delegated legislation made under section 1 is subject to affirmative resolution in both Houses of Parliament; [71824]

(2) if he will introduce measures to amend the United Nations Act 1946 so that any sanctions order approved by a Minister of his Department is brought to the attention of the Foreign Affairs Committee. [71823]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are considering our response to the Recommendations of the Foreign Affairs Committee contained in their Second Report HC 116. This includes the recommendation that the United Nations Act 1946 be amended so that delegated legislation made under section 1 is subject to affirmative resolution in both Houses of Parliament, and that any sanctions Order approved by an FCO Minister is brought specifically to the attention of the Foreign Affairs Committee. The Government will address this in the formal response that they will be submitting to Parliament.

Sierra Leone

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the changes to (a) communication procedures and (b) intelligence procedures made in response to the Legg report. [71838]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have acted on Sir Thomas Legg's recommendations. Guidance has been issued on communications with Ministers when overseas: these include ensuring that papers needing immediate attention are sent to Ministers when they are travelling and that time is built into Ministers' schedules abroad to deal with urgent papers from the UK. Guidance has also been issued to ensure that if more than one Minister needs to be aware of a paper it is specifically drawn to each Minister's attention. News Departments have clear guidelines to avoid using press lines that are misleading or incomplete. Procedures are also in place to ensure that reports received out of hours from the Ministry of Defence are correctly received, logged and distributed.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Liberia about the breaching of the UN arms embargo on Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [71817]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have on several occasions expressed our deep concern to the Liberian Government that shipments of arms have been made to Sierra Leone in breach of the UN Arms Embargo. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised this matter with the Liberian Foreign Minister on 4 February, and has sent strong personal messages to President Taylor demanding that he withdrew support for the rebel forces.

It is of vital importance for peace and security in the region that the arms embargoes on both Sierra Leone and Liberia are fully implemented. We will continue to support regional organisations in their efforts to address threats to stability in the region.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what disciplinary action he is taking against his Department's employees who have been criticised in the recent Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone (HC 116 of Session 1998–99). [71830]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in the House on 27 July 1999, Official Report, columns 19–34.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will respond to the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone (HC 116 of Session 1998–99). [71818]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Shortly.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statements, relating to matters contained in the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone and his response to that report, were released by representatives of his Department to the media prior to the publication of the report; and if he will place in the Library copies of these statements. [71836]

Mr. Robin Cook: My office received in the second week of January a copy of a draft of the report. Shortly before the publication of the report, and at around the same time as leaks critical of FCO officials appeared in The Independent, Financial Times and The Times (on 5 and 6 February), we were also made aware of certain key conclusions of the report.

Neither I nor any FCO Minister, official or special adviser took any action to publish or disclose any part of any version of the report; or to interfere with the Committee's deliberations or the report's preparation. In advance of the publication of the report on 9 February, we made no comment to the media about the report, except in response to leaks by others to the press.

Copies of the report—embargoed until publication at 10.00—were released to officials from the Parliamentary Relations Department of the FCO at 0800 on 9 February. I was immediately sent a copy. An FCO spokesman subsequently briefed the press orally, under the same embargo, on my initial response to the report. After publication of the report, the FCO News Department released copies to the press of a minute from me to the Permanent Under-Secretary. A copy of that minute has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will publish the texts of the press briefings he or his Department gave on 8 February and before 8 am on 9 February relating to the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone; [72601]

(2) if (a) he, (b) other departmental Ministers or (c) his officials have ever had access to (i) a draft report, (ii) a list of tabled amendments or (iii) other unpublished committee documents relating to the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone; [72604]

(3) on what date and at what time (a) he, (b) other departmental Ministers and (c) his officials first had access to the Foreign Affairs Committee report on Sierra Leone. [72602]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave today to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan).

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on what date and at what time he, a ministerial colleague, a special adviser or departmental official were first shown a copy of the Foreign Affairs Committee's report on Sierra Leone; [72277]

(2) if he, a ministerial colleague, special adviser or departmental official were shown (i) a draft of or (ii) amendments to the Foreign Affairs Committee's report on Sierra Leone; [72275]

(3) what information from the Foreign Affairs Committee's (a) report and (b) draft report on Sierra Leone was given to (i) him, (ii) a ministerial colleague, (iii) a special adviser or (iv) a departmental official before 8 am on Tuesday 9 February. [72276]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 22 February 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave today to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan).

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes within his Department (a) were made following the publication of the Legg Report and (b) he proposes to make following the publication of the second report 1998–99 of the Foreign Affairs Committee (HC 116). [71877]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have acted on the recommendations in the Legg Report. This action includes new procedures to improve communications inside the FCO; new guidelines for contracts with private military companies; new arrangements for the handling of intelligence; and a set of measures targeted at the rigorous enforcement of sanctions. A wider programme of modernisation involving sixty separate initiatives has also been launched.

We are considering our response to the recommendations of the Foreign Affairs Committee contained in their Second Report HC 116. The Government will be submitting their formal response to Parliament.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to establish why the error in the minute of a Meeting held on 3 December 1997 was never reported to Sir Thomas Legg. [71878]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The error referred to, the abbreviation in one sentence of the minutes of what was said at the 3 December 1997 meeting, was drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in December 1998. Sir Thomas Legg was informed that month. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary drew the Foreign Affairs Committee's attention to this abbreviation in his evidence to the Committee on 16 December 1998.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of those officials in his Department named in the Second Report of the Foreign Affairs Committee of Session 1998–99 (HC 116) have been promoted since 1 January 1998. [71879]

Mr. Fatchett: Of the eleven officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office named in the Report, five have been promoted since 1 January 1998.

Disciplinary Actions

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the instances from 1 May 1997 to date where his Department has taken disciplinary actions against employees and the reasons for those actions. [71831]

Mr. Fatchett: Forty-four employees have been disciplined since 1 May 1997. Questions of staff discipline are matters of confidence between employer and employee. It would be wrong to breach confidence by giving further details.

Mr. Peter Penfold

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has investigated the delay in providing Mr. Penfold with secure communications equipment after his move to Conakry; and what factors underlay the delay. [71815]

Mr. Fatchett: Mr. Penfold arrived in Conakry on 5 June 1997. He discussed his communications needs with the FCO on 11 June. Equipment enabling him to send and receive material marked "restricted" was sent to Conakry on 26 June 1997, arriving on 7 July. For security reasons, the equipment needed to be housed in a protective steel cabinet. The slight delay arose from the need to assemble the various components (some of which had been returned for repair from other posts) and test them before dispatch.

Mr. Penfold has said that staff in Conakry at that time, after consulting him decided not to use the equipment as it was too large for the hotel room. Mr. Penfold and his staff continued to use the commercial facilities available in the hotel.

Ministerial Briefings

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what mechanisms exist within his Department to ensure ministers are properly briefed for parliamentary debates. [71832]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Revised Guidance covering the need to brief Ministers fully was circulated to all FCO Departments in July 1998.

UN Arms Embargoes

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that UN arms embargoes will be agreed to by the UK only if he determines the authorising resolution to be clear and unambiguous. [71822]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom works actively in the Security Council to ensure that resolutions relating to arms embargoes are clear and unambiguous.

Secure Communications Equipment

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's policy of providing secure communications equipment to diplomatic missions forced to relocate through war or natural disasters. [71814]

Mr. Fatchett: We are considering our response to the Recommendations of the Foreign Affairs Committee contained in their Second Report HC116. This includes the recommendation that all appropriate steps are taken to ensure that overseas posts are fully and properly supported in future if obliged to move temporarily from their normal office premises. The Government will address this in the formal Response that they will be submitting to Parliament.

Working Hours

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his officials working in the United Kingdom have worked more than (a) 50 hours, (b) 60 hours, (c) 70 hours and, (d) 80 hours in any one working week since 1 May 1997. [71835]

Mr. Fatchett: The Department does not have this information.

Select Committees

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish his Department's guidelines for co-operating with select committees. [71821]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office follows the guidance on Departmental Evidence and Response to Select Committees circulated by the Cabinet Office in January 1997. Copies are in the Libraries of the House.

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the impact on employment levels in his Department of compliance with the Working Time Directive. [71816]

Mr. Fatchett: The Department will study the operational impact of the Directive and of the Working Time Regulations 1998 once their effect on working patterns becomes clear.

Military Companies

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish his Department's rules on contacts with military companies (a) as they were at 1 January 1998 and (b) as amended in line with his press release of 9 February 1999. [71837]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Prior to 24 July 1998, there were no general requirements for Foreign Office officials to record contacts with private military companies. The guidelines introduced on 24 July were intended for internal use only pending preparation of more detailed guidance in consultation with other Government Departments.

We intend to make this revised guidance available to Parliament and to companies or individuals who request it.

East Timor and Indonesia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of his discussion with the Indonesian Government on issues of the human rights in (a) East Timor and (b) Indonesia. [72232]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 22 February 1999]: During my visits to Jakarta last year I stressed our commitment to the process of political reform and support for the changes that have taken place in Indonesia since

May 1998. There have also been other positive developments (progress in the negotiations over East Timor, political prisoner releases, trade union reform and greater freedom of expression), but we remain concerned about the overall human rights situation in Indonesia and East Timor. Last October we arranged a Human Rights Workshop in Jakarta, whose participants included Indonesian Ministers, members of the armed forces, NGOs, academics and human rights activists. We continue to work for practical progress. We are looking at ways in which we can further assist democratic change in Indonesia.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72008]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 22 February 1999]: KPMG provided the FCO with the following Consultancy Services in July 1996:

(i) A study on pension compensation for DS spouses. Total remuneration paid £37,600;

(ii) FCO Pay and Grading Review. Review of Specialist Salaries. Total remuneration paid £8,225.

No Consultancy Services have been provided since 1 May 1997.

Nigeria

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what practical measures he proposes to support the electoral process in Nigeria. [72897]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully support the democratic process in Nigeria. The FCO and DfID have spent around £900,000 on projects to support the electoral process.

The FCO have funded a BBC World Service project on responsible journalism and voter education. We are working with the Westminster Foundation for Democracy to provide training for the new political parties and politicians. We have helped pay the cost of freighting ballot papers to Nigeria.

We have funded a Commonwealth team which has provided training to electoral officials. With the UN and EU, we are providing observers to the National Assembly and Presidential elections on 20 and 27 February.

DfID involvement has covered a wide number of projects. These include: a Commonwealth Local Government Forum observer mission; training for up to 1,200 local election monitors; a seminar to discuss the draft constitution; and the production of a manual for polling officials.

China

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the human rights advances which have followed the introduction of his policy of constructive engagement with the Chinese Government. [72242]

Mr. Fatchett: Since the UK/China human rights dialogue was established in September 1997, and the EU/China human rights dialogue resumed in October 1997, China has taken several positive steps. These include signature of two international covenants and agreement to report to the UN under those covenants in respect of Hong Kong. It has received visits by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, as well as allowing a visit to Tibet by EU Troika Ambassadors. It has also extended an invitation to visit to the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture. We have been able to discuss issues of serious concern including the death penalty, religion, Tibet and individual cases. China has begun to collaborate with the UK and EU on human rights cooperation programmes, which include projects in the areas of Civil and Political as well as Economic and Social rights, and has hosted two EU/China legal affairs seminars and a seminar on the rights of women.

Spanish Fishing Vessels

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated value of fish caught by Spanish vessels fishing in British waters, out to 200 miles or the median line, in the last year for which figures are available. [71698]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available in the form requested. Under the Common Fisheries Policy, Member States are required to collect data only on the activities of their own vessels or in relation to other landings in their ports. In addition, catch information is required only by species and by ICES statistical areas, which may cover the waters of several countries.

Furthermore, TACs and quotas are set by ICES areas, rather than by reference to national zones. Spanish vessels do not have access to all waters within British fishery limits.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Welfare Reform

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place the responses to the Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare" in the Library. [71101]

Mr. Darling: Lists of those organisations and academics who responded to our consultation papers, excluding those who requested confidentiality, have been placed in the House Library. Copies of their responses are available on request from the Department.

The Library advises that it is not standard procedure for them to hold such responses. The Department will willingly make them available should the Library request copies. I am also today placing copies in the Library of summaries of the responses received to "New ambitions for our country: A New Contract for Welfare" (Cm 3805), "A new contract for welfare: Support for Disabled People" (Cm 4103) and "A new contract for welfare: Support in Bereavement" (Cm 4104).

Benefits Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the policy of the Benefits Agency in respect of telephoning people outside office hours; [71126]

(2) if it is the policy of the Benefits Agency to comply with requests from people not to be telephoned with inquiries; [71128]

(3) if he will make a statement on (a) access which the Benefits Agency has to ex-directory telephone numbers and (b) its policy on their use; [71125]

(4) if it is the policy of the Benefits Agency when making telephone calls to people to give a reference number and contact address if requested. [71127]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 22 February 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking, what is the policy of Benefits Agency (BA) in respect of telephoning people outside of office hours; the policy in respect of complying with requests from people not to be telephoned with inquiries; access which the BA has to ex-directory telephone numbers and policy on use; and the policy on making telephone calls to people, to give a reference number and contact address if requested.

Studies have identified that people prefer to use the telephone as a means of conducting day to day business. We therefore seek to use this as a means to improve upon accessibility and provision of a quality service.

BA does not have a policy on telephoning people outside Office Hours. For operational reasons, the vast majority of calls will be made during the day, Monday to Friday. However, offices do operate flexible working hours resulting in calls potentially being made outside of 'normal' working hours. It is also the case that certain units within BA will need to telephone people in the evening or weekends, for example, where we are seeking to contact people who are no longer in receipt of benefits, or where there is a time difference, eg, people abroad who need to be contacted by our Pensions and Overseas Directorate. In providing a quality service, staff will be sensitive to keep unsociable calls to a minimum.

BA would seek to respect the wishes of people requesting not to be contacted by telephone and would attempt to deal with the business by other means, e.g. by letter or interview. The Income Support computer system includes a notes pad where these details could be incorporated, however, this service is not replicated across our current IT systems, clerical notes to this effect would be made however.

The BA has no direct access to ex-directory numbers. The telephone number would have to be given to the Agency. If the number has been given to us, eg, in respect of a previous benefit claim, it will be held on the Departmental Central Index computer system, which supports our mainframe benefit systems. This would result in the telephone number being available across the BA.

It is policy for BA staff when dealing with customers over the telephone to answer identifying their unit or section. If staff are asked at any time during the telephone call to give their name, or it becomes apparent that the customer needs a contact name to help progress their claim or business, staff are required to give their name. This can be first name only, surname, or full name, and staff can use a pseudonym as long as it is a name used in all their customer contacts, so they can be identified by colleagues.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Tribunals (Medical Evidence)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to ensure that all medical evidence submitted by his Department in tribunal cases is legible; and if he will ensure that all such evidence is typewritten. [70659]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 22 February 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what steps are taken to ensure that all medical evidence submitted to a tribunal is legible; and whether an assurance can be given that such evidence be typewritten.

The Benefits Agency ensures that documents containing medical information used as part of the decision making process are clear and legible. Where the information is obtained from the Agency's Medical Advisors, contact specifications dictate that the information must be legible. Staff are advised to return information for clarification that falls below this criteria, before it is used to decide entitlement.

Information provided from an outside organisation such as a hospital or customer's General Practitioner is also scrutinised for legibility. Should such reports contain illegible information confirmation would be sought from the author.

There are no plans to introduce a requirement that all medical evidence should be typewritten.

I hope the information is helpful.

Lone Parents

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in Paisley, South were on income support in the periods (a) May 1995–96, (b) May 1996–97 and (c) May 1997–98. [71432]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Douglas Alexander, dated 22 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the numbers of lone parents on Income Support in Paisley South in the periods (a) May 1995–96, (b) May 1996–97 and (c) May 1997–98.

The information is not available in the format requested. The information that is available is included in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Lone Parents in receipt of Income Support in Renfrewshire Local Authority District

| | Number |
|---|---|
| May 1995 | 4,100 |
| May 1996 | 3,900 |
| May 1997 | 4,000 |
| May 1998 | 3,700 |

Notes:

1. Lone Parents are defined as single people with dependants who are not in receipt of a disability or pensioner premium. Some Lone Parent customers may also be included in load counts for Pensioner premiums and Disability premium. The number of Lone Parents is therefore potentially understated.
2. Please note that Renfrewshire Local Authority District will also include claimants from other constituencies, e.g. Renfrewshire contains claimants from both Paisley South Constituency and Paisley North Parliamentary Constituency.
3. The information has been provided by the Analytical Services Division 1 of the DSS.
4. Figures are based on 1 5% sample and therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.

5. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred.
6. The information has been taken from the Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry in May of each relevant year.

SERPS

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice his Department provides upon request to individuals with SERPS pensions with regard to the change of conditions of the pension on the death of a spouse from April 2000. [72018]

Mr. Timms: Information on the changes to the inheritance of Additional Pension (also known as SERPS) has been included in leaflets NP 45, "A Guide to Widow's Benefit", and NP 46, "A Guide to Retirement Pensions" available from April 1996.

An internal bulletin highlighting the changes and directed at weekly training sessions was issued in January 1999 to Benefits Agency staff.

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of paying the full entitlement to SERPS to widows/widowers whose spouse dies on or after 6 April 2000 based on the deceased contribution record to 5 April 1996. [72552]

Angela Eagle: The estimated cost is £50 million in 2000–2001, increasing to £2 billion by 2020.

Notes:

1. Estimates, provided by the Government Actuary's Department, are in 1998–99 prices and are rounded to the nearest £50 million.
2. Estimates are gross, i.e. means-tested benefit offsets have not been taken into account.
3. Estimates have been made on the basis of current legislation.
4. Long term real earnings growth of 1.5 per cent. has been assumed.

Annuities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the sum required to purchase an annuity of (a) £116 per week rising in line with average earnings for a couple aged 65 years with £75 rising with average earnings for a survivor and (b) £65 per week, rising in line with average prices for a female aged 50 years. [72610]

Mr. Timms: Annuities which increase in line with national average earning are not generally available.

An estimate has been made on the basis of current rates for annuities which increase in line with prices, adjusted to reflect assumed earnings growth relative to prices of 1.5 per cent. a year. It is estimated that a sum of £135,000 would be required to purchase an annuity of £116 a week, increasing in line with national average earnings, payable to a man aged 65, with an annuity of £75 a week payable on his death to his wife (assumed to be aged 62), also increasing in line with national average earnings.

On the basis of current rates for annuities which increase in line with prices, it is estimated that a sum of £85,000 would be required to purchase an annuity of £65 a week, increasing in line with prices, payable to a woman aged 50.

Note:

Both capital sums quoted are rounded to the nearest £5,000.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if Benefits Agency staff will review all new and repeat claims for jobseeker's allowance received since 20 June 1998, and cleared (a) on the basis of information from his Department's systems other than NIRS II and (b) on the basis of information from the claimant. [72370]

Mr. Timms: A special exercise will be carried out to identify all new and repeat claims (system and clerical) to Jobseeker's Allowance processed during the NIRS closure period (20 June to 8 November 1998). Each claim identified will then be reviewed to ensure correct entitlement was paid. The special exercise will ensure that those claims paid on the basis of information provided by jobseekers are identified and reviewed.

A date has not yet been finalised when the special exercise will commence, but it is not expected to be before April 1999. The position will be kept under review but, depending on other work priorities impacting on the field, the intention is to clear the relevant cases by the end of this year.

Claims made since 9 November (the date NIRS2 became "live" for Jobseeker's Allowance) are automatically reviewed by the Jobseeker's Allowance computer system upon confirmation of contribution information supplied by NIRS2. These cases therefore will not require a special exercise to review entitlement.

Claims made from January which could not be assessed using information from NIRS2 have been assessed using other evidence. These cases will be reviewed on an ongoing basis, when contribution information is updated to NIRS2, as NIRS2 automatically notifies the JSA computer system of the revised details.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Legal Services

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the London barristers' chambers and (b) the London solicitors' firms that have performed services for his Department (i) since 1 May 1997 and (ii) in the equivalent period preceding that date, indicating the remuneration paid in each particular case. [70025]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 February 1999]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General appointed Philip Sales as First Junior Treasury Counsel (Common Law) and Jonathan Crow as First Junior Counsel (Chancery) to advise and represent the Government in their important civil cases. In addition the Attorney-General maintains at present two London panels of junior counsel from whom the Ministry's Legal Department instructs counsel to assist with its civil litigation. When the Ministry wishes to instruct counsel who are not on the panel, a nomination is obtained from the Attorney-General. The Ministry also obtains such nominations from the Attorney-General in all criminal cases where representation by counsel is necessary.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71284]

Mr. Morley: MAFF's Programme of Action for Equality of Opportunity includes a number of provisions for staff with disabilities.

Managers are required to provide funding to meet reasonable adjustments for staff with disabilities from their own local budgets. This may be supplemented by funding from a central budget where there is a need for specialist equipment or additional help beyond the means of local budgets. No central record is kept of expenditure on staff with disabilities by local managers. The budgetary provision for central funding for 1998–99 is £67,500.

In addition to the funds available to meet adjustments for individual members of staff, audits have been undertaken of the accommodation in which staff work to identify where improvements in access or the provision of facilities for people with disabilities are needed. A programme of work is underway on which £1.1 million has been spent in the last three years. The budget for this programme for 1998–99 is £450,000. This expenditure is of benefit to both staff and MAFF's customers.

The Department also participates in the Employment Service's Supported Employment Scheme which provides work opportunities for people with severe disabilities. The 1998–99 budget is £53,000.

As responsibilities and operations related to disability are spread throughout the Department it is not possible to give the proportion of total departmental spending.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many press releases have been issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each of the years 1990 to 1998. [71443]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The number of press notices issued by MAFF, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each of the years since 1990 was as follows:

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1990 | 408 |
| 1991 | 475 |
| 1992 | 436 |
| 1993 | 473 |
| 1994 | 493 |
| 1995 | 484 |
| 1996 | 430 |
| 1997 | 418 |
| 1998 | 499 |
| 1999 | [1]57 |

[1] As at 17 February 1999

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the conventions governing the propriety and cost of press releases issued by his Department, its agencies and non-departmental bodies; and what is the total cost of the press releases issued since May 1997. [71458]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Rules governing the work of the GICS are laid down in the guidance on the work of the Government Information Service published by the Cabinet Office in July 1997. More specific guidance on the writing and issuing of press releases is given in the Working Guide for Government Information Officers. Copies of both documents are in the Libraries of the House.

The estimated total cost of press releases since May 1997 by MAFF and the agencies and the non-departmental public bodies for whom it distributes press releases is £55,000.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71845]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 22 February 1999]: In common with other departments, the work of press officers in my department includes responding to any misinformed allegations concerning Government policy or activity which are published in the media. They are supported in this work by other officials as necessary.

Because this is a routine part of a department's work and it is not separately recorded from other tasks, to provide the further information requested would involve disproportionate cost.

Brandy and Rum Butters

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure that traditional British brandy and rum butters can continue to be marketed in the European Union. [73078]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that, following discussions with the industry, the European Commission and other Member States, we have managed to secure a derogation that will lower the minimum milkfat content of brandy, rum and sherry butters from 34 per cent. to 20 per cent., thereby ensuring that these traditional alcoholic butters can continue to be made using the traditional recipes enjoyed by the UK consumers for many years.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Ofsted Annual Report

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools identified in the Ofsted annual report for the academic year 1997–98 which, through Ofsted inspection and performance in examinations and assessments, are providing a good quality education and achieving high standards. [70931]

Ms Estelle Morris: In his annual report for 1997–98, which was published on 9 February, HM Chief Inspector named schools in three categories: schools which were shown by inspection to be providing a good quality of education and achieving high standards; secondary schools which stand out amongst the many re-inspected during 1997–98 which had improved the quality of education and standards achieved by pupils since the previous inspection; and schools which had been removed from special measures during 1997–98 having made substantial improvements.

I warmly congratulate and thank all those who have played a part in the successes achieved by these schools.

The schools named by HM Chief Inspector are shown in a list, a copy of which I have placed in the Library.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to ensure that the computer systems of (a) schools, (b) colleges and (c) higher education centres, are millennium compliant. [71680]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department for Education and Employment has urged all Local Education Authorities in England to offer help and guidance to all the schools in their area, building on Local Authorities' own Year 2000 compliance programmes. We are about to write again to spread information on good practice, including on contingency planning. The Department is working with the Further Education Funding Council and Higher Education Funding Council for England to ensure that action is being taken in colleges and higher education institutions to reduce the threat to systems posed by the date change. The funding councils have conducted surveys in their respective education sectors and have issued guidance. If necessary, they are prepared to impose conditions of grant to secure an acceptable state of readiness.

Durham County Council (Grants)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what grants have been made by his Department to Durham County Council in addition to the revenue support grant in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [71555]

Ms Estelle Morris: Details of the grants, in addition to revenue support grant, made available by the Department for Education and Employment to Durham County Council in 1997–98 and 1998–99 are shown in the following tables. For the Standards Fund, the figures shown include the grant made by the Department and the contribution made by the local education authority.

Students (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate (a) how many students resident in Newcastle are educated in local education authorities outside Newcastle, (b) how many students are educated in Newcastle local education authority schools who are resident in other local education authorities, (c) how many school students resident in Newcastle were educated in non-local education authority schools in 1996–97 and (d) how many school students resident in Newcastle who will be educated in local education authority schools in 1999–2000 in each local education authority in the City of Newcastle. [71703]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table sets out the estimated information requested for (a) and (b) for 1996–97, although the figures should be treated with caution since, following the reform of inter-authority recoupment in 1995–96, many authorities made representations that it was no longer possible for them to collect robust data on cross-border pupil movements. There are no comparable data for 1999–2000 and information on the residence of pupils attending independent schools has never been collected centrally.

| Local education authority | Estimated exports aged 5–15 | Estimated imports aged 5–15 |
|---|---|---|
| Gateshead | 591 | 608 |
| Newcastle upon Tyne | 1,377 | 1,076 |
| North Tyneside | 807 | 757 |
| South Tyneside | 185 | 362 |

Note:
1. The figures are derived from the form 8A/539F returns received from local education authorities in respect of the 1996–97 financial year. Several authorities expressed reservations about the quality of the data or made incomplete returns based on estimates derived from previous years.

"Public Relations Toolkit for Employers"

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those who attended the launch of the New Deal "Public Relations Toolkit for Employers"; and what was the cost. [71367]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The reception for small and medium-sized enterprises is estimated to have cost £1,400. It provided an opportunity to recognise and thank small and medium-sized enterprises for their involvement in New Deal. The Public Relations Toolkit was prepared to help them publicise their company through that involvement, or more widely, should they wish to do so. The following is a list of the companies and representative organisations that attended.

New Deal (Vietnamese and Chinese Nationals)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individuals of (a) Vietnamese nationality and (b) Chinese nationality have (i) participated in the New Deal and (ii) found jobs through the New Deal. [71094]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Maclean, dated 23 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the numbers of people of Vietnamese and Chinese nationality who are participating and have found jobs through New Deal. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

While details of an individual's nationality are not held, people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance are invited to indicate their ethnic origin.

In the period to the end of November 1998, 374 clients who declared their ethnic origin as Chinese entered the New Deal for 18–24 year olds. In the same period, 59 of these clients left the Gateway for unsubsidised jobs and a further 11 for subsidised jobs. There may also be some people of Chinese origin among those who chose not to declare their ethnic origin.

Vietnamese claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance are not identified as a separate ethnic group. It is not therefore possible to produce figures for New Deal participants and job starts for this group.

Asylum Seekers (Children)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children of asylum seekers are currently attending school in the United Kingdom; and if he will estimate the cost of their attendance. [71092]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Local Education Authorities are funded to provide education for school-aged children of asylum seekers on the school roll, in the same way as they are for all other children on roll. We estimate that there are about 45,000 children of asylum seekers currently receiving education in the United Kingdom at a cost of around £97 million in the current financial year.

New Deal (Gateway)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons individuals may stay on the Gateway to the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds for longer than four months. [71133]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Maclean, dated 17 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the reasons why the length of the Gateway period for those participating in New Deal for 18–24 year olds may be extended beyond four months. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

There are four main categories of young people whose stay on the Gateway may properly extend beyond the normal four month maximum. The first category covers young people who are not required to go on to an option at the end of four months because they are clearly intending to cease claiming Jobseeker's Allowance in the very near future. Examples include young people who are due to start full time work; emigrate; or leave Jobseeker's Allowance to claim maternity allowance. The second category covers situations where entry to a New Deal option is, by agreement with a Personal Adviser, delayed for a short period where there is good reason. Examples include circumstances where a young person has suffered a bereavement; suffers a short-term illness; or where their planned provision is unexpectedly not available.

The third category covers young people who refuse to enter a New Deal option. In these circumstances their case will normally be referred to an adjudication officer for a decision on the individual's benefit entitlement during which time the young person is regarded as still being on the Gateway. The fourth category covers returners to the Gateway. If a young person leaves the Gateway and subsequently returns within 13 weeks, they will re-enter the Gateway at the point which they left.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71277]

Ms Hodge: We are acting to ensure that the Department's policies meet the needs of disabled people and that we comply with our legal requirements. The Department already takes positive steps to make it easier for disabled people to make use of its services. We shall continue to do so, not only by complying fully with new duties in the Disability Discrimination Act but by aiming to exceed them where appropriate.

The Department issued internal guidance recently on mainstreaming which ensures that all new and existing policies and programmes are assessed for any adverse impact not only on disabled people, but on any minority or disadvantaged group. That includes the need to ensure that our policies and their outcomes comply with the law. Where necessary we shall act to remove or reduce the impact on these groups. This complements the guidance "Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment" which the Cabinet Office issued to all Government Departments in November 1998, and which was signed jointly by the Minister for Women, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, and the Home Secretary.

The Departmental Board monitors the Department's performance and will publish information on the progress being made in this area, as will other Government Departments.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71289]

Mr. Mudie: Approximately £290 million of this Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed directly to spending on disabled people. This represents 1.9 per cent. of the Department's total budget for 1998–99.

In addition, disabled people are able to benefit from the Department's mainstream expenditure on education, employment and training, but it is not possible to identify separately the amount of this.

Education Action Zones

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the Education Action Zones have applied to disapply (a) the national curriculum and (b) national terms and conditions for teachers. [68935]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 2 February 1999]: 11 schools in EAZs have informed QCA that they have disapplied the National Curriculum under Section 363 of the Education Act 1996 to provide wider opportunities for work-related learning at Key Stage 4 from September 1998. As regulations only came into force in September 1998, it is likely that more schools will take advantage of this provision during the remainder of this academic year and next academic year.

A further two schools are currently considering making an application under Section 362 from September 1999 to disapply aspects of the National Curriculum for the purposes of curricular experimentation and development.

There have been no applications to disapply the national terms and conditions for teachers.

Planning Assessments

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many staff in his Department are responsible for assessing local education authorities' (a) early years development plans, (b) asset management plans and (c) education development plans; and how much time is given on average to the assessment of each such plan. [70118]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 9 February 1999]: We estimate that the amount of staff time expected to be spent on assessing local education authority plans (expressed as full time equivalent) is as set out in the following table.

| Type of plan | Average staff time per plan (hours) | Staff numbers (as FTE) |
|---|---|---|
| Early years development plans | 11 | 1.10 |
| Asset management plans | — | — |
| Education development plans | 16 | 1.59 |

Detailed assessment methods for asset management plans have not yet been determined.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will describe the procedure followed by the Employment Service for tracking claimants of jobseeker's allowance who are (a) unemployed for more than two years (i) in the 18 to 24 age group and (ii) aged over 25 years and (b) lone parents. [70740]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Paul Keetch, dated 17 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the procedure for tracking claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The procedure for monitoring claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance starts when they make their first claim. The jobseeker is seen by an adviser for a New Jobseeker Interview and is subsequently seen fortnightly until they cease claiming Jobseeker's Allowance. The progress in finding work for jobseekers who remain unemployed is reviewed with them after 13 weeks, after six months and every six months thereafter. For those young people aged between 18 and 24 the six month review triggers their entry on to the New Deal.

I should explain that Lone Parents do not normally claim Jobseeker's Allowance, since they are normally entitled to Income Support. New Deal for Lone Parents is a voluntary programme and participants continue to claim Income Support whilst participating on it. The only Lone Parents who claim jobseeker's Allowance are therefore those who voluntarily join the New Deal for 18–24 year olds or for those aged over 25, and those who are willing to meet the Jobseeker's Allowance benefit conditions by making themselves available for and actively seeking work.

All claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance are recorded by the Employment Service on its Labour Market Computer System. This is used to record their progress in line with the structure of fortnightly attendance and regular reviews. In addition, jobseekers who are on New Deal are tracked by their Personal Adviser throughout their time on the programme.

I hope this is helpful.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70412]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The total value of money realised from the sale of assets by the Department, its agencies, and associated public bodies since the publication of the information in the National Assets Register is £13,391,196.

Asset management is kept under close review, and those which are surplus to requirements are disposed of as quickly as possible, subject to value-for-money considerations. They are normally disposed of on the open market by public auction or tender. The exception to this rule is that in DfEE, good working IT equipment is gifted to education and employment bodies and projects via third-party organisations. The following table lists items reported as sold by the Department, its agencies and associated public bodies since the information on assets was published in the National Assets Register of November 1997.

Under the partnership agreement, ES computer equipment (with the exception of telecommunication equipment) transferred to EDS for a nominal charge. The assets had a net book value of approximately £20 million at the date of transfer. They were exchanged for equivalent savings in the net present value of service charges over the term of the agreement.

Gateway Interviews (Training)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what specific training will be given to personal advisers conducting interviews for the Single Work-Focused Gateway on advising people with learning disabilities. [71584]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Single Work-Focused Gateway Personal Advisers will have access to training materials to equip them with the skills and knowledge to help them identify people with learning disabilities.

This training material will also equip Personal Advisers to refer people with learning disabilities to the most appropriate specialist support.

The content of the training material includes the following:

how to identify people with disabilities, including learning disabilities;

the sensitivities around dealing with people with disabilities; specialist programmes available for people with disabilities; and the specific help specialist support can offer, e.g. through the Disability Employment Adviser.

Education SSAs

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what representations he has received on the SSA level for the education provision in North Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement; [72165]

(2) what plans he has to visit North Yorkshire to discuss the SSA settlement for North Yorkshire County Council. [72160]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from concerned schools and parents complaining about the possibility that North Yorkshire County Council may not use all of the £13 million increase in the education SSA to support education. He has no plans to visit North Yorkshire, but has written to the Leader of the County Council to make it clear that we expect the County Council to set a budget which uses all of the education SSA increase to support education services, especially schools. I understand that the County Council will now do this.

Departmental Cash Limits

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes he plans to make to cash limits and running costs limits within his responsibility for 1998–99. [72993]

Mr. Mudie: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services), Vote 3 (Employment Service), and Vote 4 (Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in England), will be amended as follows:

| Class | Vote | Existing cash limit (£) | Change (£) | New cash limit (£) |
|---|---|---|---|---|

The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) will be increased by £94,807,000 from £10,381,602,000 to £10,476,409,000. This is the net effect of the take up of £17,356,000 of the end-year flexibility eligibility on running costs and £5,265,000 of that on the New Deal for Schools announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36; a claim on reserve of £38,000,000 to cover European Social Fund payments in the current financial year for which the receipts from the EC will not arrive until next year; transfers of £8,300,000 from Class IX, Vote 4 (Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools) and £19,200,000 from Class IX, Vote 3 (Employment service) in connection with Books for Schools and Key stage 2 revision classes, of £20,000 from Class XIII, Vote 3 (the Scottish Office) for compensation due to a change in the student support funding regime and cross border flows of students, and of £102,000 to Class XII, Vote 3 (the Department of Social Security) for publicity of the National Childcare strategy; a switch of £4,224,000 from Supplementary Credit approvals in connection with the provision of schools capital; and an increase of £6,348,000 for Welfare to Work publicity and running costs of which £1,718,000 is transferred from Class IX, Vote 3 (Employment Service) and £70,000 from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security), and £4,560,000 is extra provision financed from the windfall tax; offset by transfers of £250,000 to Class XIV, Vote 2 (the Welsh office) and £230,000 to Class XV, Vote 1 (the Northern Ireland Departments) for the University for Industry, of £470,000 to Class XII, Vote 1 (the Department of Social Security) for Bridging Allowances, of £4,260,000 of gross provision and £1,702,000 of receipts to Class IX, Vote 3 (the Employment Service) for restructuring and Grays Inn Road property, and of £500,000 to Class XI, Vote 1 (the Department of Health) for professions allied to medicine.

The running cost provision within the control total has been increased by £25,791,000 from £250,548,000 to £276,330,000. This is as a result of the £17,356,000 take up of end-year flexibility and the transfers of £20,000 from the Scottish Office and £4,260,000 to the Employment Service mentioned above, plus the reclassification of £3,000,000 from capital to running costs and an addition of £9,500,000 to take account of the change to the treatment of VAT receipts on contracted out services and of £175,000 for EC related initiatives which are offset by receipts. The Welfare-to-Work running costs provision (outside the control total) will increase by £1,479,000 form £1,283,000 to £2,762,000. This is as a result of the transfer of £219,000 from the Employment Service, the virement of £130,000 from the Millennium Volunteers programme and additions of £494,000, £70,000, £370,000 and £196,000 for the New Deals on Young People, Lone Parents, the Disabled and Partners respectively.

The non-Voted cash limit DfEE/LACAP has also been decreased by £4,224,000 from £44,940,000 to £40,716,000 as a result of increase in provisions of schools capital.

The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 3: Employment Service will be increased by £25,811,000 (of which £15,311,000 is in respect of the Welfare-to-Work programme and is outside the control total) from £1,749,858,000 to £1,775,669,000.

The £15,311,000 for the Welfare-to-Work programme is the net result of the following: a transfer of £10,350,000 from Class XII, Vote 1 (Central government administered social security benefits and other payments) for the New Deal for lone parents; £4,871,000 direct from the Windfall Tax for the New Deal programmes to help people with disabilities and partners of unemployed people into work; the take up of £1,808,000 under the Welfare-to-Work end year flexibility scheme as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 131–36; a transfer of £1,718,000 to Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) to cover the cost of work on New Deal programmes undertaken by Department for Education and Employment.

The balance of the increase to the cash limit, £10,500,000, is the net result of the following: an increase of £19,957,000 in capital provision due to the sale of Information Technology assets; the transfer of £19,200,000 to Class IX, Vote 1 (Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services) in respect of additional spending on books for schools and Key Stage 2; the transfer from Class XII, Vote 3 (Department of Social Security; administration) of £7,108,000 for the recalculation of JSA core funding and other work ES undertakes for the Benefits Agency; a transfer of £4,260,000 in running costs and £1,702,000 in appropriations in aid from Class IX, Vote 1, to cover the transfer of the lease for 236 Grays Inn Road, London and the restructuring costs of surplus staff; and from Class XVIII, Vote 1 (Cabinet Office: other services), £77,000 in respect of accommodation costs of The Pithay, Bristol.

The running cost provision within the control total for Class IX, Vote 3 will be increased by £24,873,000 from £777,673,000 to £802,546,000. This increase results from the transfers of £7,108,000 from the Department of Social Security, £4,500,000 from capital provision to fund additional expenditure on Information technology services now undertaken by an external provider; £4,260,000 from the Department for Education and Employment and £77,000 from the Cabinet Office and an addition of £8,928,000 to take account of the change to the treatment of VAT receipts on contracted out services which are offset by receipts.

The Welfare-to-Work running costs provision, outside the control total for Class IX, Vote 3 will be increased by £14,291,000 from £122,500,000 to £136,791,000. This is the result of the transfer of £9,725,000 from the Department of Social Security, the additional £4,476,000 from the Windfall Tax, the take up of £1,808,000 of end-year flexibility and the transfer to the Department for Education and Employment of £1,718,000.

The gross running costs limit for the DfEE (comprising Class IX, Vote 1 and Vote 3) inside the control total has increased by £32,236,000 from £1,028,221,000 to £1,060,457,000 and outside the control total by £15,770,000 from £123,783,000 to £139,553,000. The gross running costs limit is net of the VAT changes of £9,500,000 on Vote 1 and £8,928,000 on Vote 3.

The cash limit for Class IX, Vote 4 (Ofsted) will be reduced by £8,300,000 from £118,641,000 to £110,342,000 as a result of the transfer to Class IX, Vote 1 in connection with Key Stage 2 revision classes.

Increases to all Votes mentioned above will be offset by transfers and charges to the reserves and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Age Diversity

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the consultation on the draft Code of Practice on Age Diversity. [72994]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We received a range of responses from individuals, employers, employers' organisations and campaigning organisations. For the most part, respondents felt the Code was clear, useful and covered the right areas, though a number of suggestions were made about how the Code could be further improved. With these comments in mind, we will be developing more detailed guidance on implementing the standards recommended in the Code, together with providing illustrative case studies.

I have placed copies of the report on the consultation and a summary of its main outcomes in the Library.

TREASURY

Office for National Statistics

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what decisions he has taken on the findings of the review into the efficiency of the Office for National Statistics. [73284]

Ms Hewitt: Having considered the findings of the efficiency review of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) and met with the trade unions to discuss their reactions, I have decided to accept the recommendations made by the efficiency review Steering Group.

The findings of the review indicate that there is scope within ONS to achieve efficiency savings rising to around £20 million per year. The achievement of such savings, which will be reinvested within ONS, will enable the Office to focus resources and management attention on improving the range and quality of the statistical information it produces. I have asked Dr. Tim Holt, the Director of ONS, to prepare and implement a programme of action designed to deliver these savings, in consultation with ONS staff and trade unions.

I am today publishing a copy of the full report which was commissioned from the consultants KPMG by the review Steering Group. The recommendations made by the Steering Group draw on many of the KPMG proposals, but they do not include them all. In particular, the potential savings identified as a result of the outsourcing of data collection and processing are not part of the package of efficiency savings which the Steering Group recommended.

I have also today accepted proposals from Dr. Holt to strengthen the senior management structure of ONS. This will involve the establishment of a restructured ONS Management Board comprising the Director of ONS and four other members: a Director of Economic Statistics, a Director of Social Statistics, a Director of Quality Assurance and Methodology, and Director of Finance and Corporate Services. This final post will be advertised externally, with business and commercial experience a key requirement.

These changes to the management structure of ONS reflect the importance which the Government attach to implementing this programme of work. Ensuring the quality of ONS outputs is a key part of the Government's commitment to enhance the integrity of official statistics.

Engineering

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the engineering profession since May 1998 on investment in the UK's engineering base. [70704]

Mrs. Roche: The Chancellor has had frequent discussions with representatives from business since May 1998, many of whom have been members of the engineering profession. The Chancellor has focused particularly on the UK's productivity record and how business and Government can work together to improve it. Investment by business, including the engineering sector, has featured as one of the key areas for improvement.

Registration Records (Access)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the Registrar General's options paper on access to registration records to be published. [72597]

Ms Hewitt: I have now considered the Registrar General's options paper on access to civil registration records. It is proposed that a limited amount of prior consultation with stakeholders should be undertaken over the next few months. The outcome of this consultation will be taken into account when the proposals for reform arising from the Civil Registration review are published in the summer.

Budget (Explanatory Leaflet)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to issue an explanatory leaflet following his budget in March for delivery to each household in the United Kingdom. [72621]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 724.

Air Passenger Duty

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what powers the EU is seeking to require Her Majesty's Government to double the current air passenger duty for return domestic flights within the United Kingdom; what powers Her Majesty's Government have to resist the demand; and if he will make a statement. [68210]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 1 February 1999]: The UK Government have an obligation to ensure that taxes are compatible with EU treaty obligations but how compatibility is achieved is entirely a matter for the Government.

Amusement Machine Licence Duty

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses were affected by the amusement machine licence duty announced in the 1998 Budget; and if he will estimate the average cost per business. [70672]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 15 February 1999]: No figures are available for the number of businesses involved in the amusement machine industry.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Sitting Hours

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the average number of hours the House sat daily in (a) January 1979, (b) January 1989 and (c) January 1999. [72701]

Mrs. Beckett: The House sat for a daily average of: 9 hours and 11 minutes in January 1979; 9 hours and 9 minutes in January 1989; and 8 hours and 59 minutes in January 1999. Not including sitting Fridays, the House sat for a daily average of 9 hours and 51 minutes in January 1979; 9 hours and 59 minutes in January 1989; and 8 hours and 59 minutes in January 1999.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

European Investment Bank

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's policy towards the European Investment Bank Third World loan packages, with particular reference to environmental impact assessments. [72288]

Clare Short: The Government scrutinise proposals coming to the European Investment Bank Board of Directors to assess their developmental soundness. This includes consideration of environmental issues. The European Investment Bank itself reviews all projects for environmental impact as an integral part of its appraisal process.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the additional costs to local authorities of having Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty within their boundaries; and if he will make a statement. [72598]

Mr. Meale: No central assessment of additional costs has been made. However, a study undertaken last year for the Countryside Commission, the Government's statutory advisors on landscape protection, suggested that some £4.8m may be spent annually by local authorities in England on the core costs of the management and protection of Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs). The same study suggested that a further £9.5m may be spent annually on local authority countryside management services within AONBs.

The Countryside Commission has provided advice to the Government on various aspects of the care of protected landscapes. We are considering the recommendations very carefully, together with all the other information available, before taking any final decisions. There are some complex issues involved but we hope to be able to announce some conclusions soon.

We have already announced an additional £2.5m for the new Countryside Agency to spend in AONBs and similar landscape areas in 1999–2000.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the problems experienced in obtaining planning permission for the Jubilee Line extension; and what assessment he has made of practice in this respect in Hong Kong. [71116]

Dr. Reid: In only one case, namely the development of the Canada Water bus station, was London Underground obliged to take steps to appeal against the refusal by the local planning authority to approve certain reserved planning matters relating to the development.

I am not in a position to comment on practice in this respect in Hong Kong.

Driving Licences (Women)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of women in each age group hold driving licences; and what assessment he has made of the consequences of differences between the percentage in each age group for the rate of growth in road traffic. [71117]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The table shows the percentage of women in each age group who held driving licences in Great Britain, over the period 1995–97.

| Age | Percentage |
|---|---|
| 17–20 | 36 |
| 21–29 | 67 |
| 30–39 | 74 |
| 40–49 | 74 |
| 50–59 | 61 |
| 60–69 | 46 |
| 70 or over | 22 |
| All ages | 57 |

Source:
National Travel Survey

Analysis of licence-holding by age band, for males and females separately, led to the published forecast that total licence-holding would increase from 67 per cent. to 73 per cent. of the adult population over a ten year period (1996–2006). This increase is one of the factors underlying the predicted growth in car ownership within the 1997 National Road Traffic Forecasts.

The forecasts are in the process of being revised in the light of the measures announced in the Integrated Transport White Paper. More detailed modelling of the impact of increasing licence-holding is one of the options under consideration.

Transport Networks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to evaluate networks of transport on a regional basis; and what proposals he has had from the Professor of European Economics in the University of Kent on this topic. [71111]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the new arrangements published on Monday 15 February, in draft Planning Policy Guidance Note 11 (PPG 11) on "Regional Planning", major transport network improvements are to be planned as part of the overall regional transport infrastructure, taking all modes into account. Regional planning bodies will be in the lead in this, working with the Government Offices and transport operators, providers and users.

I am unaware of any representations on this topic from the Professor of European Economics in the University of Kent.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated of how advanced technology and better information could help to make possible more seamless journeys using different modes of transport. [71113]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following reports contain the results of studies commissioned by my Department which address aspects of the contribution of advanced technology and/or better information to improving travel by different transport modes.

| Study | Report |
|---|---|
| The potential benefits of road transport telematics | TRL Report 220 1996 |
| Institutional and financial aspects of traveller information systems | WS Atkins 1997 |
| Review of technologies for moving people in cities | UCL Centre for Transport Studies 1997 |
| Review of telematics relevant to public transport | TRL Report 342 1998 |
| Transport Interchange—Best Practice | Colin Buchanan and Partners 1998 |

Work is going on in a number of different projects to help local authorities and others make use of these results. For example, the Department is supporting work to assist local authorities identify and plan for the deployment of new transport technologies. We are also part funding research to enable electronic journey planning systems to communicate with each other automatically so facilitating 'seamless' journeys.

The Department has not undertaken any recent work purely to evaluate studies on this subject by other organisations. Account was however taken of such studies as appropriate in the commissions referred to.

Road Building Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account he takes of the predicted growth of road traffic in determining the road building programme. [71114]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our recent Roads Review was conducted against the high levels of predicted traffic growth forecast. Forecasts of the effects of schemes were an important part of the Review, but we did not follow a "predict and provide" approach. We have moved away from exclusive reliance on road building by looking at other, more sustainable ways of tackling traffic problems, finding ways of making better use of the existing trunk road network along with a smaller, targeted programme of improvement schemes where these have been proved to be necessary.

Families (Average Space Occupied)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what data his Department has collated on the average amount of space occupied per family in the United Kingdom in 1999; and if he will make a statement on past trends in this respect. [71115]

Mr. Raynsford: Floor space data for dwellings in England are collected through the English House Condition Survey, which is carried out every 5 years. The most recent survey was carried out in 1996. This shows that households had 84 sqm on average in England. This is little different from 1991 when the average was about 81 sqm.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the new Countryside Agency is scheduled to begin work; [72674]

(2) if he will list the Chairman, Deputy Chairman and board members of the new Countryside Agency. [72676]

Mr. Meacher: The Countryside Agency will come into existence on 1 April 1999. Work to establish the Agency successfully has been going on for some time, led by a Merger Steering Group comprising the Chairmen, board members and Chief Executives of the two existing Commissions.

We will make an announcement about the Chairman, Deputy Chairman and board members of the Agency shortly.

British Airways

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met representatives of British Airways; what was discussed; what help his Department is receiving from British Airways, and if British Airways is financially sponsoring initiatives run by his Department or its agencies. [72809]

Dr. Reid: I and my officials are in regular contact with representatives of all those with an interest in aviation. It is not normal practice of Governments to give details of specific meetings with private individuals or companies.

Other than advice relating to official correspondence in relation to passenger services, this Department receives no help from British Airways. Neither am I aware of any initiative of this Department which receives financial support from British Airways.

Road Accidents

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of (a) deaths and (b) serious accidents on the roads which are due to snow or icy road conditions. [72706]

Dr. Reid: Information on the cause of road accidents is not available. However, the numbers of reported accidents occurring on icy or snowy road surfaces are contained in the following table:

Number of casualties

| Severity | Year of accident 1995 | 1996 | 1997 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Casualties on snowy or icy road surface | | | |
| Fatal | 77 | 87 | 43 |
| Serious | 1,206 | 1,363 | 612 |
| Slight | 7,323 | 9,654 | 4,414 |
| Total | 8,606 | 11,104 | 5,069 |

Number of casualties

| Severity | Year of accident 1995 | 1996 | 1997 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Accidents on snowy or icy road surface | | | |
| Fatal | 69 | 81 | 41 |
| Serious | 993 | 1,136 | 526 |
| Slight | 5,188 | 6,949 | 3,115 |
| Total | 6,250 | 8,166 | 3,682 |

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of (a) deaths and (b) serious injuries on roads for each month of the last five years. [72709]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Fatal and serious casualties by month: Great Britain 1993–97

Casualties

| Severity | January | February | March | April | May | June | July | August | September | October | November | December |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|

Pollution (London)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he has collated on pollution in London caused by (a) buses and (b) cars. [72673]

Dr. Reid: The London Atmospheric Emissions Inventory, prepared by the London Research Centre, indicates that in 1995, emissions from buses and cars in London were as described in the following table. All figures are given in terms of tonnes of pollutant per annum.

| | Buses | Cars |
|---|---|---|
| Nitrogen oxides | 5,464 | 64,091 |
| Fine particulate matter ($PM_{10}$) | 558 | 1,497 |
| Carbon monoxide | 2,703 | 473,895 |
| Non-methane volatile organic compounds | 419 | 64,381 |

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 156, on the standard spending assessment, what plans he has to review the weather stations whose records are used in the calculation of local authorities' standard spending assessment. [71589]

Ms Armstrong: We have no plans for such a review.

Concrete Flues

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the safety of concrete flues in dwellings. [73567]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been made aware of concerns about the safety of certain flue liners, which are intended for use in chimneys serving appliances burning solid fuel. They are made of concrete, although those solely comprising kiln-burnt aggregate, pumice and cement (other than products used to facilitate manufacture) are not known to give rise to any problems.

Despite these concerns, the two principal housing warranty providers have reported no change in the frequency of claims relating to defective chimneys and my Department is unaware of any marked change in the frequency of soot fires requiring chimney reconstruction.

However, a number of chemical analyses and performance tests of thermal insulation, thermal shock resistance and gas tightness of concrete flue components have been carried out independently by flue component manufacturers and by building control enforcement bodies over the last few months attempting to prove or disprove the adequacy of certain manufacturers' components. These tests have so far proved inconclusive. Nevertheless they have shown that building control enforcement bodies and warranty providers may have grounds for concern, and that further investigation would be prudent.

My Department has already asked the expert technical committee within the British Standards Institution (BSI) to consider how the issues being raised impact on existing British Standards and prospective harmonised European Standards (ENs). These ENs will eventually become the performance criteria for compliance with the Construction Products Regulations which ensure that products are sufficiently safe to be placed on the market. The BSI Committee have also been asked for their opinion on the standards of performance presently referred to in the relevant Approved Document to the Building Regulations and whether these can be improved. I have asked the Committee to consider these matters swiftly and impartially and I look forward to their response with interest.

My Department has also listened to the collective views of manufacturers, importers, building control bodies and housing warranty providers. There appears to be insufficient evidence at present to warrant advising householders to take any additional care in the ways that they use their fireplaces and that for the time being there is only the possibility that some chimneys lined with concrete may need attention to ensure satisfactory service life. However these uncertainties cannot be allowed to continue.

I have therefore decided that the issues being raised should be explored by way of an expert risk assessment, and my Department is now proceeding to engage a suitable contractor. The aims of this study will be to establish how many dwellings already built or under construction have chimneys with potentially risky concrete components, to establish the nature of the risks to householders, to collect together and appraise the results of the tests on flue components carried out by the various parties, to seek national expert technical opinion on the ways that the risks to householders can be resolved into quantifiable flue component performance standards, to evaluate to what extent, if any, the possible problems raised are real, and to provide advice on possible remedial measures.

At the same time I have asked my Department in conjunction with the Building Regulations Advisory Committee to consider with builders, building control professionals, warranty providers, the Building Research Establishment and others what amendments it might be necessary to make to Part J of the Building Regulations and the supporting Approved Document to address these issues more directly for the future.

I shall make a further announcement as soon as I can.

Oil Extraction (Heritage Sites)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions have taken place between his Department and the DTI regarding oil extraction in the UK's world heritage sites; and if he will make a statement. [70753]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

None. The Scottish Office is, however, considering its response to UNESCO's request for information about the impact of oil exploration near St. Kilda and has discussed this matter with the DTI.

DEFENCE

Gulf Veterans

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the Gulf Veterans Medical Assessment Programme; and if he will make a statement. [67462]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Gulf veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP) was established in 1993 to provide as full a diagnosis as possible to UK veterans of the 1990–91 Gulf conflict who are concerned about their health. So far, just under 3,000 Gulf veterans have been referred to the MAP, which continues to offer patients an appointment within six weeks of their referral. Fewer than 40 patients are currently waiting to be seen by the MAP for the first time.

A paper describing the clinical findings from the first 1,000 patients examined at the MAP was published in the British Medical Journal on 30 January. A copy of the paper is available in the Library of the House.

A full audit of the MAP, covering patient care and the service provided by the Programme, is currently under way. The results of this will be published in due course.

Correspondence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the letter dated 29 September 1997, from the hon. Member for West Derbyshire, written on behalf of his constituent, Mrs. Watt. [67969]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I wrote to the hon. Member earlier this week.

Gibraltar

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Spanish citizens ordinarily domiciled in Spain and previously employed in HM Dockyard Gibraltar are in receipt of British pensions; and at what cost in the last year for which figures are available. [71694]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are currently no Spanish citizens, ordinarily domiciled in Spain and previously employed in HM Dockyard Gibraltar, in receipt of pensions paid by the Ministry of Defence.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency published its report for 1998–99; and what was the cost of production of the report. [71906]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Evaluation and Research Agency has not yet published its Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99. DERA's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98, which the Agency also uses as a marketing brochure, was published on 30 June 1998 at a cost of £135,000 excluding VAT.

Training Exercises

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were deployed on the jungle training exercises in Belize carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [71897]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of personnel who were deployed on jungle training exercises in Belize carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998 was 1,003.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the value of the air defence exercise in central Europe carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [71895]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Several air defence exercises are conducted in central Europe each year. The major annual air defence exercise held in the region is the NATO exercise Central Enterprise. In 1997 Exercise Central Enterprise took place from 9–20 June. RAF participants comprised Tornado GR1, Harrier GR7 and VC10 aircraft, and flew a total of 18 sorties per day. The exercise offered a number of valuable training opportunities, particularly in the area of operations involving other NATO Nations.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the six armoured battlegroup exercises in Canada carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [71893]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Due to the deployment to Bosnia of a unit scheduled to take part in the armoured battlegroup exercises in Canada, only five armoured battlegroup exercises were carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. The cost of these five exercises was £73.46 million.

Unfair Dismissal

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs have been incurred in each of the last five years on (a) damages paid out and (b) solicitors' costs relating to members of his Department's civilian staff who have been dismissed following disciplinary proceedings, despite a recommendation following appeal that they should be reinstated and who have then won industrial tribunal cases for unfair dismissal. [72319]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Aircraft Flying Hours

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 21, for what reasons the average number of flying hours for Canberra aircraft was lower in 1998 than in 1997. [71978]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Canberra fleet is relatively small and flew fewer hours in 1998 than in 1997 because the fleet was undergoing modification.

HMS Vernon

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 November 1998, Official Report, column 358, on the sale of HMS 'Vernon' in Portsmouth, on the basis of what advice he decided to withhold the information on the sale; and on how many occasions since 1 November 1997 his Department has withheld information under that exemption. [72203]

Mr. Spellar: It is currently the MOD policy to withhold such commercial information relating to property sales. Since 1 November 1997, such information has been withheld on two occasions under Exemption 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Departmental Land Disposals

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sites have been disposed of by his Department in each of the last three years; and in relation to which of the sites he has withheld information concerning the value of the receipts in an answer to a parliamentary question. [71977]

Mr. Spellar: Details of the sites disposed of in 1996–97 are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The number for the Financial Year 1997–98 was approximately 200 and to date in the current Financial Year, 120 properties have been sold. The hon. Member would wish to note that individual married quarters are not counted separately but rather, a Married Quarters estate is counted as one property.

There have been five occasions since 1997 when information has been withheld concerning the value of receipts.

Atomic Weapons Establishment (Reports)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 18, if he will place in the Library a list of the 130 reports in the two series of papers produced by the Mathematical Physics Division of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, indicating the title of each paper and the date on which each paper was produced. [71960]

Mr. Spellar: Yes. I have asked for a list to be compiled. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will explain the abbreviations and acronyms (a) QA 175, (b) PZT software, (c) MOD QAR, (d) 1700 Series, (e) DSD, (f) DTech, (g) QA 303s, (h) COSHH, (i) SED, (j) DPR, (k) DSAC, (l) NAMAS, (m) NAFEMS, (n) NSC and (o) MMS, referred to in unclassified AWE Company Security, Quality, Environment, Safety and Health Systems Analysis reports, indicating in each case the function of the item to which they relate. [72599]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is as follows.

| | Abbreviation | Explanation | Function of item |
|---|---|---|---|
| a | QA 175 | MOD Quality Deficiency Report | Form 175 is used by the MOD QAR to record quality deficiency |
| b | PZT software | PZT is Lead Zirconium Titanite | The software is used in the manufacture of PZT |
| c | MOD QAR | Ministry of Defence Quality Assurance Representative | The MOD quality assurance representative at AWE |
| d | 1700 series | A section of the AWE Quality Manual | Covers handling, storage, packaging, preservation, labelling and delivery |
| e | DSD | Director Sites Development | Post/Directorate title |
| f | Dtech | Director Technology | Post/Directorate title |
| g | QA 303 | A form used by AWE Quality Assurance | Form 303 is used in the audit and review process to record non-conformances and other observations |
| h | COSHH | SI 1994/1248—Control of Substances Hazardous to Health | SI 1994/1248—this is a Statutory Instrument under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 |
| i | SED | Systems Engineering Director | Post/Directorate title |
| j | DPR | Director Physics Research | Post/Directorate title |
| k | DSAC | Directorate Safety Assurance Committee | An AWE committee |
| l | NAMAS | National Accreditation of Measurement and Sampling—now superseded by the UK Assessment Service | Responsible for setting standards for the calibration of equipment within the UK |
| m | NAFEMS | National Agency for Finite Element Methods and Standards | The agency promotes the use of finite elements as an engineering analysis technique, providing benchmarks and techniques for use in such work |
| n | NSC | Nuclear Safety Committee | An AWE committee |
| o | MMS | Manager Media Services | Post/Directorate title |

Defence Agencies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which targets the Defence Estate Organisation did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring he has undertaken for those targets in 1998–99. [72794]

Mr. Spellar: The following Key Targets set for 1997–98 were either part achieved, or were not achieved in full:

a. Key Target 1.

b. Key Target 2.

c. Key Target 5.

d. Key Target 7.

e. Key Target 8.

Subsequently, a set of interim targets for 1998–99 was published. These targets began the process of setting output driven targets which are measurable, within the Chief Executive's control, and incentivise performance to meet the needs of the department. This set of interim targets has allowed the Chief Executive to establish a baseline against which to measure progress in 1999–2000.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which targets the Defence Postal and Courier Service Agency did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring he has undertaken for those targets in 1998–99. [72792]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Brigadier B. J. Cash to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 24 February 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about which targets the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency did not meet in 1997–98; and what monitoring has been undertaken for those targets in 1998–99, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility at Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency.

The Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency did not meet the following Key Targets in 1997–98:

a. To complete the implementation of the Triennial Review by 31 March 1998.

b. To rationalise the technical funding and responsibility across MOD Top Level Budgets following the Triennial Review.

Progress against these targets is reviewed monthly by myself as Chief Executive at Board level.

The two Key Targets failed were set on the assumption that the Prior Options Review of DPCSA would be completed during the course of the year 1997/98. As a result of the General Election and the subsequent Strategic Defence Review, the Prior Options process was delayed and continued agency status was not confirmed until 19 January 1999.

Following agreement of the new framework document and proposed re-launch of the Agency on 1 July 1999 and after reorganisation under the Chief of Defence Logistics; technical funding and responsibility across MOD Top Level Budgets for Postal and Courier Services will be rationalised.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Army Personnel Centre; and what was the figure at its inception. [71899]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of personnel, civilian and military, employed by the Army Personnel Centre (APC) at 31 December 1998, the most recent date for which full staffing figures are available, was 1,277. The number of personnel involved in Army personnel functions at the time of the launch of the APC as a Defence Agency on 2 December 1996 was some 1,655 civilian and military personnel.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Army Base Repair Organisation published its report for 1998–99; and what was the cost of production of the report. [71902]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Army Base Repair Organisation report for 1998–99 will be published following the end of the financial year, probably in July 1999. The report for 1997–98 was published in September 1998. It was produced under contract by The Stationery Office; the cost of the contract is commercially confidential information, but was less than £2.50 per copy.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Army Base Repair Organisation; and what the figure was at its inception. [72807]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. F. Drew to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 24 February 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about how many people are currently employed by the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO); and what the figure was at its inception, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of ABRO.

As at 1 January 1999, 2,625 people were employed by the Army Base Repair Organisation. 3,800 were employed by the Agency at its launch on 1 April 1993.

I hope that this is helpful.

REME Depot (Stirling)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the sale of and development plans for the REME depot at Stirling. [72753]

Mr. Spellar: Agreement for the phased purchase of part of the former REME Depot at Forthside in Stirling was signed by MOD and Stirling Council on 23 September 1998. The land is to be used as part of Stirling Council's Town Centre Redevelopment. The MOD retained site at Forthside is currently used by the Army Base Repair Organisation, the Army Base Services Distribution Agency and other small MOD units.

Environmental Management Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the awards and commendations which his Department has received over the past five years for good environmental management of its estates and wildlife, indicating the sites so commended. [72736]

Mr. Spellar: The following is the information.

Shell Best of Better Britain (1994)—Salisbury Plain Training Area-East-Barn Owl Project.

Campaign for the Protection of Rural Wales, Brecknock Branch—Rural Wales Award (1994) in recognition of the groups' contribution to conservation on the ranges at Mynydd Epynt, Sennybridge Training Area.

Royal Borough of Kingston Upon Thames—Environmental Pride Awards (1994) Category Environmental Management by Industrial Concern. First place awarded to MOD at Chessington.

British Gas Grassroots Action Award (1994)—Foxglove Covert, Catterick Garrison.

Hampshire County Council—Countryside Award (1995) Commended for restoration and management of Eelmoor Marsh by grazing with Prezewalski's horses, (in conjunction with Marwell Zoo).

Taunton Deane Borough Council—Conservation Commendation (1995) for conversion of stables at Norton Manor (Royal Marines).

The Forestry Authority—1996, Centre of Excellence to Longmoor Army Training Area. Awarded in four Categories, for improving the quality of the landscape, creating benefits for wildlife, providing access for people, and growing timber in environmentally sound ways.

Shell Best of Better Britain Commendation (1996) Foxglove Covert, Catterick Garrison.

Britain in Bloom (1998)—Aldershot Garrison won Southern England in Bloom.

BTO Commendation (1998) for Constant Effort Site Ringing Station—Foxglove Covert, Catterick Garrison.

Forestry Authority Commendation (1996) (Parkwood (Catterick)) for sound management of a renewable resource.

English Nature—Site of Special Scientific Interest Managers Award (1998) to Liz Peace, Chairman of the Farnborough Conservation Group.

Sanctuary Award—Judged annually with English Nature, for best conservation project on MOD land.

1998 winner—Bovington Training Area for Longterm heathland and wetland management.

1997 winner—Sennybridge—Disgwlfa Visitor Centre.

1996 winner—Porton Down—management of Chalk Grassland habitat for the benefit of the Stone Curlew population.

1995 winner—DERA Farnborough for use of Prezewalski's Horse to graze the lowland heath.

1994 winner—Royal Naval Air Station, Yeovilton—conservation management of Langport Rifle Range, Breech Wood and Merryfield Airfield.

Ford—Environmental Management Energy Plan (1994) Commendation—Boscombe Down.

Northumberland County Council Trees and Hedgerow Cup Competition (1996) Commendation in the broadleaved woodland category for Grasslees Oakwood and Yardhop Wood—Otterburn AFTC.

Submarines and Diving (Women)

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the outcome of his review of the possible employment of women in submarines and in mine clearance diving. [73578]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are committed to equality of opportunity in the Armed Forces. In the course of the Strategic Defence Review we examined the opportunities for maximising opportunity for women in each of the Services provided that this would not damage combat effectiveness. The results of this work were set out in the report on the Strategic Defence Review (Cmd 2999), in which we also announced our intention to review the exclusion of women from service in submarines and Royal Navy mine clearance.

We have now completed our review of these matters and concluded that we should maintain our policy of excluding women from service in submarines and mine clearance diving for medical reasons.

In reaching this conclusion I considered all the evidence very carefully and looked hard for options which might enable us to open service in submarines to women despite the medical risks involved. I was not able, however, to put to one side the MOD's statutory duty of care under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

All RN submarines currently in service may remain submerged for up to 90 days for operational reasons. In the course of such deployments, contaminants build up in the internal atmosphere. Although there is careful control of the materials allowed aboard and atmospheric filtration, the build up of contaminants such as carbon dioxide in this closed environment cannot be prevented. Such an atmosphere is not harmful to adults, but medical studies by the Institute of Naval Medicine show that for some contaminants the levels exceed those considered safe to the foetus of a pregnant woman, and therefore also place the woman's health at risk. In other cases there is insufficient data available to recommend with confidence maximum exposure limits which would prevent harm to the foetus and the woman.

A woman, in at least the first days after conception, may not be aware that she is pregnant. If she were serving in a submarine there is, therefore, the small possibility that she might unknowingly expose here unborn child to levels on contamination above those considered safe. Even if some women were prepared to accept the risks and volunteer to serve in submarines the MOD could not compromise its duty of care by allowing them to do so.

In the specialised area of mine clearance diving, (where there are far fewer posts involved), there are also substantial medical risks to an unborn child and, therefore, the mother, caused in this case by the very high pressures to which these divers are subjected. As far as women who are not pregnant are concerned, the medical risks are less well understood, but there may be a risk to a woman during menstruation. I have accepted the medical advice that women should, therefore, be excluded from working as Mine Clearance Divers at least until more definitive medical advice is available.

The Government and the Armed Forces are determined that the widest possible employment opportunities should be available to women in the Armed Forces. The position on service in submarines and mine diving clearance will, therefore, be kept under review.

Alternative Assumptions Budget Programmes

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the programmes earmarked under the Ministry of Defence alternative assumptions budget; and what is the estimated cost of each programme; [72196]

(2) if he will list the programmes earmarked in the Ministry of Defence alternative assumptions budget in the years (a) 1997–1998 and (b) 1998–1999 indicating how many of these programmes have been actioned. [72195]

Mr. George Robertson: The Ministry of Defence does not have an alternative assumptions budget. Alternative assumptions are part of the department's Long Term Costing (LTC) process and provide the mechanism by which possible changes to the core Defence programme can be costed and assessed.

The LTC represents projections which inform internal advice to Ministers on the affordability of the defence programme. It has been the policy of successive Administrations that such advice should not be disclosed, consistent with Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Bombs

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the (a) 1,000 pound and (b) 540-pound free-fall bombs will receive an upgrade package; how much his Department expects to spend in 1999–2000 on the upgrading of the stock of free-fall conventional bombs; and if he will make a statement on the Staff Target Air/Sea 1248 programme; [72198]

(2) what is his assessment of the accuracy of the Air Force and Navy's 540-pound and 1,000-pound bombs (a) currently and (b) after the proposed upgrade package. [72197]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The UK's current 540lb and 1000lb bombs are ballistic weapons deliverable either guided or unguided. The accuracy with which they can be delivered depends on many variables including the aiming system used by the delivery aircraft, the speed, dive angle, height and range from the target at release from the aircraft and type of attack profile. The weather conditions may also be a significant factor.

The possibility of an upgrade programme is currently being examined. No decisions have, however, yet been taken.

Cooking and Catering Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the major cooking and catering awards won by the (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) Air Force over the past five years. [72740]

Mr. Spellar: Awards have been won by individual Service participants and teams as shown in the following table.

| Year | RN | Army | RAF |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1994 | | Expogast LuxembourgGold Medal—Hot BuffetSilver MedalGold Medal in Wedding CakeHotelympiaNational Chef of the YearLa Parade de Chefs—Gold Medal and overall winners18 Senior and Junior open awards | Hotelympia2 Gold Medals8 Silver Medals9 Bronze Medals |

In 1998 a Combined Services Culinary Arts Team was formed to rationalise available resources in the interests of efficiency and economy. The Team competed at Expogast in Luxembourg and won 9 Gold Medals and 3 Silver Medals.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71515]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The information requested is in the table. Departmental costs (including the cost of around £75,000 for the review of civil justice and legal aid included in Lord McIntosh of Haringey's answer of 7 July 1997, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 51–55), are being met from existing Departmental budgets. External costs, where applicable, are shown in the table.

Reviews, task forces and advisory groups

| Review/task force | Report(s) published | External costs |
|---|---|---|
| Review of Civil Justice and Legal Aid | Reported published October 1997 | — |
| Review of Welfare Services to the Courts | — | — |
| Review of Procedures consequent on the Decision to Transfer or Commit Fraud Trials | — | — |

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the numbers of mortgage repossession cases (a) commenced and (b) executed since 1997 and of the likely trend in such numbers in 1999–2000. [72317]

Mr. Hoon: The number of cases issued and executed since 1997 is as follows:

| | Mortgage possession actions entered | Possession warrants executed |
|---|---|---|
| January 1997-December 1997 | 67,073 | 46,865 |
| January 1998-December 1998 | 78,865 | 59,701 |

[1] Figures for local authority mortgages have been estimated since the third quarter of 1998 at 3 per cent. of the total figure; historically since 1996 local authority mortgages have represented between 1 per cent. and 5 per cent. of the total.

The trend is upwards; but it is difficult to forecast with any accuracy for forward periods because of the factors which may affect the housing market.

Mediation Services (Cumbria)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received on funding for mediation services in Cumbria. [72667]

Mr. Hoon: None. I have received two letters, one from the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border and one from my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) about funding Mediation UK, a national umbrella organisation for community mediation.

Land Registry

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the operation of the Land Registry. [72720]

Mr. Hoon: The Land Registry maintains and develops authoritative and effective land information systems for England and Wales. It was established as a separate government department in 1862, became an Executive Agency in 1990 and a Government Trading Fund in 1993. It is required by statute to cover all expenditure from its fee income and makes no call on moneys voted by Parliament. The Land Registry has joined with private sector and other government organisations to develop a National Land Information Service. This has led to an innovative conveyancing pilot, based in Bristol, which is effectively a one-stop conveyancing shop, reducing overall transaction times when buying a house. In November 1998 the pilot won a British Computer Society award which recognises excellence in computing.

The Land Registry has also recently won an award from the Society for Computers and the Law for its on-line Direct Access Service. In January, the Land Registry became one of only 18 organisations in the United Kingdom to be awarded a third Charter Mark.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72691]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply the Under-Secretary for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Minister for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) has given to this question today, Official Report, column 311-12.

Justice and Internal Affairs Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the issues for discussion before the Justice and Internal Affairs Council on 12 March, indicating the position he proposes to take on each issue. [72737]

Kate Hoey: I have been asked to reply.

Agendas for Justice and Home Affairs (JHA) Councils, which are determined by the Presidency of the day, are nearly always finalised only very shortly before Council meetings themselves. The agenda for the JHA Council on 12 March is still in draft form, and is very likely to undergo substantial further revision. Current indications are that major items are likely to be Europol, questions relating to the transition from the Maastricht to the Amsterdam Treaty with regard to Conventions, and preparation of a meeting with central and eastern European countries and Cyprus, which will take place in the afternoon.

An annotated agenda will be sent to the Select Committee on European Scrutiny in the normal way, as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EEA Residents' Permits

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the average and (b) the longest time taken to determine applications for European Economic Area residents' permits in each year from 1995 to date. [70761]

Kate Hoey: I regret I am unable to provide the statistical information requested as it is not readily available in the form requested. Collation of the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for European Economic Area residents' permits were (a) granted and (b) refused for each month in the years from 1995 to 1998; and how many such applications are currently outstanding. [70719]

Kate Hoey: Monthly figures for grants and refusals of residence permits from January 1996 to August 1998 are listed in the table. A total figure for 1995 has been included as the monthly figures for that year are not readily available. The number of applications outstanding (as at October 1998) was 5,500.

Grants/refusals of EEA residence permits 1995–98

| | Granted | Refused |

Female Prisoners (Drug Offences)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners convicted of offences involving possession, supply or trafficking of controlled drugs were serving sentences of (a) less than three months imprisonment, (b) three to six months imprisonment, (c) six to 12 months imprisonment and (d) more than 12 months imprisonment. [72359]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information is given in the table.

Population of sentenced females in prisons in England and Wales by principal drugs offence on 31 January 1999, by sentence length

| Offence | less than 3 months | 3 months to less than 6 months | 6 months to less than 12 months | 12 months and over | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| All drugs offences | 5 | 5 | 33 | 782 | 825 |
| of which: | | | | | |
| Unlawful supply | – | – | 14 | 153 | 167 |
| Possession with intent | 3 | 3 | 13 | 138 | 156 |
| Possession | 2 | 2 | 7 | 38 | 49 |
| Unlawful import/export | – | – | – | 448 | 448 |
| Other drugs offences | – | – | – | 5 | 5 |

Provisional figures

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female foreign nationals are serving sentences for drug related offences. [72360]

Mr. George Howarth: The latest available provisional information is for 31 January 1999. On that date, there were 274 female foreign nationals serving sentences for drug-related offences in prisons in England and Wales.

Prisoner Releases (Home Detention Curfew)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners released subject to home detention curfew have been returned to custody; and how many so returned to custody had been subject to supervision. [72361]

Mr. George Howarth: As of 22 February, 1,289 offenders have been placed on Home Detention Curfew. 23 curfewees have had their licenses revoked by the Secretary of State, and 21 have been returned to custody. 15 of those returned to custody were subject to supervision whilst in the community.

Justice and Internal Affairs Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the issues for discussion before the Justice and Internal Affairs Council on 12 March, indicating the position he proposes to take on each issue. [72727]

Kate Hoey: Agendas for Justice and Home Affairs (JHA) Councils, which are determined by the Presidency of the day, are nearly always finalised only very shortly before Council meetings themselves. The agenda for the JHA Council on 12 March is still in draft form, and is very likely to undergo substantial further revision. Current indications are that major items are likely to be Europol, questions relating to the transition from the Maastricht to the Amsterdam Treaty with regard to Conventions, and preparation of a meeting with central and eastern European countries and Cyprus, which will take place in the afternoon.

An annotated agenda will be sent to the Select Committee on European Scrutiny in the normal way, as soon as possible.

Female Prisoners (Offence Categories)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female prisoners are serving sentences for (a) theft and handling, (b) fraud and forgery and (c) other offences; and if he will give a breakdown of these categories into sentences of (i) three months, (ii) three months to six months, (iii) six months to 12 months and (iv) more than 12 months. [72368]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information is given in the table.

Population of sentenced females in prisons in England and Wales on 31 January 1999 by offence and sentence length

| Offence | Less than 3 months | 3 months | Over 3 months to less than 6 months | 6 months to less than 12 months | 12 months and over | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Theft and handling | 31 | 25 | 48 | 100 | 134 | 338 |
| Fraud and forgery | 6 | 3 | 10 | 46 | 75 | 140 |
| Other offences | 36 | 25 | 37 | 156 | 1,659 | 1,913 |
| Total | 73 | 53 | 95 | 302 | 1,868 | 2,391 |

Provisional figures

Immigration and Asylum Bill

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if hon. Members and their staff who give immigration advice or perform immigration services are exempt persons under the meaning of Clause 63(4)(a) or (b) of the Immigration and Asylum Bill 1999. [72148]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Hon. Members and their staff may provide immigration advice in the course of their Parliamentary work without needing to meet any of the requirements of Clause 63 of the Immigration and Asylum Bill because under Clause 61(2)(b), such advice is not provided in the course of a business.

Metropolitan Police Funding

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the 1999–2000 income of the Metropolitan Police will come from the areas that will be transferred out of the Metropolitan Police District on 1 April 2000; and what percentage of (a) the total income and (b) the total amount paid by council tax payers this represents. [71931]

Kate Hoey: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that precept income in 1999–2000 from the areas that, subject to enactment of the Greater London Authority Bill, will cease to be part of the Metropolitan Police District on 1 April 2000 will be £16.7 million. This represents 0.9 per cent. of the total income of the Metropolitan Police for the year 1999–2000 from police and revenue support grant, redistributed non-domestic rates and precepts on local authorities. It is 7.4 per cent. of total police precept income.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the 1999–2000 income of the Metropolitan Police will come from the Borough of Spelthorne; and what percentage of (i) the total Metropolitan Police income and (ii) the total amount paid by local authorities this represents. [71940]

Kate Hoey: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District tells me that precept income for 1999–2000 of £2,971,605.12 will come from the Borough of Spelthorne. This is 0.14 per cent. of the total income of the Metropolitan Police for the year 1999–2000 from police and revenue support grant, redistributed non-domestic rates and the precept on local authorities and is 1.31 per cent. of total police precept income.

Deportation

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the deportation of families where there are children who have spent a long time in the United Kingdom. [73568]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: For a number of years, it has been the practice of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate not to pursue enforcement action against people who have children under 18 living with them who have spent 10 years or more in this country, save in very exceptional circumstances.

We have concluded that 10 years is too long a period. Children who have been in this country for several years will be reasonably settled here and may, therefore, find it difficult to adjust to life abroad. In future, the enforced removal or deportation will not normally be appropriate where there are minor dependent children in the family who have been living in the United Kingdom continuously for 7 or more years. In most cases, the ties established by children over this period will outweigh other considerations and it is right and fair that the family should be allowed to stay here. However, each case will continue to be considered on its individual merits.

Essex Police

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources will be allocated to Essex Police in order that they can fulfil their duties, after reorganisation, in the areas of Essex presently covered by the Metropolitan Police. [72803]

Mr. Boateng: Police funding allocations are determined by a needs-based formula. The formula to be applied in 2000–2001 will take into account the changes to the boundaries of the Essex Police. The allocation of resources thereafter within the force area is a matter for the Chief Constable.

The Government have recognised that the Essex Police Authority will incur transitional costs in the year preceding the boundary changes. In order to achieve a smooth implementation of the changes we have, in addition to Essex Police Authority's normal funding for 1999–2000, allocated an extra £2 million to the Police Authority for special transitional costs associated with boundary changes.

Lawrence Inquiry

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the way Mr. Justice Macpherson conducted the Lawrence Inquiry. [72675]

Mr. Straw: During the proceedings of the Inquiry I received representations from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and from the parents of the five suspects in the case expressing concerns about some aspects of the Inquiry.

The conduct of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry was a matter for the Chairman, Sir William Macpherson and I believe that he conducted the Inquiry with complete fairness.

I have placed on the record my deep gratitude to Sir William Macpherson and his Inquiry team in my statement to the House today.

Police Efficiency

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to measure the efficiency of police forces in order to determine if they have reached his target of a two per cent. efficiency gain. [R] [72719]

Mr. Boateng: Monitoring and review of police efficiency plans from April 1999 will be undertaken jointly by the Home Office, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) and the Audit Commission. Forces will be expected to demonstrate that they have achieved the two per cent. efficiency gains demanded, and that the resources released have been reinvested to improve delivery of national and local frontline policing priorities. At the end of 1999–2000, efficiency plans will be audited and certified against actual outturn. Ministers will receive regular reports on forces' progress towards achieving the two per cent. target.

Kurds

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Kurdish population in north London; how many came to Britain as asylum seekers; how many are still waiting to have their asylum status determined; and how many are estimated to be involved in serious crime. [72717]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that information on the number and immigration status of persons of Kurdish origin currently resident in north London is not available.

The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that information about victims and offenders in the Metropolitan Police District is not aggregated under the definition of "the Kurdish Community".

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the level of crime in London emanating from the Kurdish community. [72712]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that information about victims and offenders in the Metropolitan Police District is not aggregated under the definition of "the Kurdish Community".

Anti-drugs Co-ordinator

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) initiatives taken and (b) advice received from the Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator over the last 12 months. [72699]

Mr. George Howarth: The United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator and his Deputy report to the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Drug Misuse, chaired by my right hon. friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office. The role of the Co-ordinator is to provide day-to-day leadership and focus on implementing and developing the Government's drugs strategy, published in April 1998, for which £217 million of new money has been provided for the next three years. The Co-ordinator will produce his first annual report and a national plan in the spring.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72669]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Development of Government policy takes place with close co-operation between the Departments concerned. This can be through formal arrangements, such as those established between the Home Office, Lord Chancellor's Department and the Law Officers', Department, or via Ministerial or Official Groups or Working Parties. Less formally, they can be through close consultation with experts in the relevant areas and with those affected by the proposed measures, normally against a background of regular in-house or specially commissioned research. The Home Office works closely with the Cabinet Office or other Government Departments on the crime implications of policy developments.

Our determination is that the implications for crime and disorder of any new measures are properly taken into account. This commitment is reflected in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Section 17(1) requires local and police authorities to exercise their functions with due regard to the likely effect on preventing crime and disorder.

Greater emphasis is now being given to building up our knowledge of policies that work in tackling crime. The Crime Reduction Programme, supported by £250 million from the Comprehensive Spending Review, is based on systematic evidence of what is effective in reducing crime and tackling its causes, not just dealing with its effects. All the parts of the Crime Reduction Programme will be independently evaluated to assess their effectiveness and cost-effectiveness in reducing crime and improving the operation of the criminal justice system. Those parts which are successful will form the basis of future mainstream programmes and those which are not will be dropped.

Police (Sparsity)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when research by his Department on the sparsity factor for policing was initiated. [72732]

Mr. Boateng: External research to examine whether there are any additional costs associated with the policing of sparsely populated rural areas was commissioned in March 1998. The results will be available shortly.

Prison Service (Dogs)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 February 1999, Official Report, column 764, how many active drug dogs are on active service at (i) Princeton Prison, Dartmoor, and (ii) Channings Wood Prison, Denbury; and if he will introduce a passive drug dog in Pritchton Prison, Dartmoor. [71880]

Mr. George Howarth: There are four active drug dogs at Dartmoor prison, and two active drug dogs at Channings Wood prison. Funds have been approved to provide Dartmoor prison with one passive drug dog and one handler.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas Levy

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses were affected by the change in the gas levy announced in the 1997 budget; and what is the average reduction in the levy per business. [70671]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The Chancellor announced in his July 1997 Budget that the Government proposed to cut the gas levy to zero, with full effect from April 1998. As he announced in the March 1998 Budget, the Government decided to implement this by abolishing the levy with effect from 1 April 1998, with a backdated reduction from four pence per therm to three pence per therm applying to 1997–98. Levy was paid by nine producers or purchasers of gas during 1997–98 and each of them has benefited from repayment of one quarter of the levy paid by them in respect of that year.

Export Licences

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of applications for export licences were processed by the Export Control Organisation in accordance with their targets as to time in the four-week periods in (a) July 1998, (b) September 1998 and (c) January 1999. [71842] to provide a substantive response to an application within 20 working days of receipt for applications that need to be circulated to other Government Departments according to their policy requirements as determined by them ('circulated' cases).

Dr. Howells: The Export Control Organisation (ECO) of DTI measures its performance against two aims:

to provide such a response within 10 working days of receipt for applications that are dealt with by DTI itself ('non-circulated' cases).

In each case, full documentation in support of the application must be provided by the applicant at the outset for these targets to apply.

ECO management data on the processing of licence applications are compiled on the basis of four-week periods. The period closest to July 1998 is 27 June 1998 to 24 July 1998; for the period closest to September 1998 it is 22 August 1998 to 18 September and for the period closest to January 1999 it is 9 January 1999 to 5 February 1999.

To the nearest point, the percentage of licence applications completed within the published targets were as follows:

| | Circulated (20 day target) | Non-circulated (10 day target) |
|---|---|---|
| 27 June 1998 to 24 July 1998 | 43 | 83 |
| 22 August 1998 to 18 September 1998 | 38 | 82 |
| 9 January 1999 to 5 February 1999 | 62 | 82 |

This information was taken from the Export Control Organisation's management data, which are compiled in order to monitor performance at processing applications for Standard Individual Export Licences. The performance measures do not apply to applications for Open Individual Export Licences (due to the very wide variations between goods and country coverage of such licences), or for licences covering Iran or Iraq, or exports subject to control solely because of United Nations Sanctions.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licence applications were refused by the Export Control Organisation during each of the four-week periods used by his Department since March 1998. [71841]

Dr. Howells: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the number of applications for individual export licences refused in full for each period are as follows:

| Period | Standard Individual Export Licence applications | Open Individual Export Licence applications |
|---|---|---|
| 7 March 1998 to 3 April 1998 | 4 | 1 |
| 4 April 1998 to 1 May 1998 | 8 | 0 |
| 2 May 1998 to 29 May 1998 | 8 | 0 |
| 30 May 1998 to 26 June 1998 | 9 | 0 |
| 27 June 1998 to 27 July 1998 | 4 | 0 |
| 25 July 1998 to 21 August 1998 | 10 | 0 |
| 22 August 1998 to 18 September 1998 | 10 | 0 |
| 19 September 1998 to 16 October 1998 | 10 | 0 |
| 17 October 1998 to 13 November 1998 | 9 | 0 |
| 14 November 1998 to 11 December 1998 | 11 | 0 |
| 12 December 1998 to 8 January 1999 | 6 | 0 |
| 9 January 1999 to 5 February | 32 | 0 |

This information should be considered in the light of the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (a) how many defence export licence applications have been withdrawn since 1 May 1997 and (b) if he will estimate the total value of the goods to which they related. [71839]

Dr. Howells: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 2 May 1997 and 8 February 1999, 779 applications for Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) covering the export of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List, were withdrawn by the applicants. The total value of the goods as stated on these applications was £399 million. In the same period, 11 applications for Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) covering such exports were withdrawn. There is generally no cumulative limit to the quantity or value of exports permitted under OIELs, so no corresponding figure for the aggregate value can be determined.

This information does not cover any applications for Media OIELs that may have been withdrawn during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

Some applications may have been withdrawn before a determination had been made as to whether or not the goods were listed in the Military List. Such applications are not included in this answer.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997 Official Report, columns 870–71

An application may be withdrawn for a number of reasons. For instance, an application for a SIEL may be withdrawn on issue of an OIEL or an Open General Export Licence that covers the proposed export; or the potential export may simply fail to materialise. There is no requirement that the applicant should give the Department of Trade and Industry a reason for withdrawal.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licence applications were processed by the Export Control Organisation in each of the four-week periods used by his Department since March 1998, broken down by (a) those circulated to other Government departments and (b) those not circulated. [71840]

Dr. Howells: The information, beginning with the four week period nearest to the date specified, is as follows:

| Period | Application circulated to other departments according to their policy requirements and completed during the period | Applications not circulated to other departments and completed during the period |
|---|---|---|
| 7 March 1998 to 3 April 1998 | 1,039 | 111 |
| 4 April 1998 to 1 May 1998 | 704 | 145 |
| 2 May 1998 to 29 May 1998 | 771 | 94 |
| 30 May 1998 to 26 June 1998 | 670 | 77 |
| 27 June 1998 to 24 July 1998 | 564 | 119 |
| 25 July 1998 to 21 August 1998 | 858 | 123 |
| 22 August 1998 to 18 September 1998 | 718 | 93 |
| 19 September 1998 to 16 October 1998 | 675 | 99 |
| 17 October 1998 to 13 November 1998 | 836 | 86 |
| 14 November 1998 to 11 December 1998 | 756 | 131 |
| 12 December 1998 to 8 January 1999 | 678 | 97 |
| 9 January 1999 to 5 February 1999 | 854 | 126 |

The information has been taken from the Export Control Organisation's management data which are compiled in order to monitor performance of processing applications for Standard Individual Export Licences. The above data do not include applications for Open Individual Export Licences, for applications to export goods to Iran or Iraq or exports which are subject to control solely because of United Nations Sanctions.

Hallmarks

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if articles of precious metal which have been hallmarked in Spain may be offered for sale in the United Kingdom without being further hallmarked in the United Kingdom; and if he will place in the Library illustrations of the Spanish hallmarks. [72588]

Dr. Howells: The Hallmarking Act 1973 was amended with effect from 1 January this year in accordance with Article 30 of the EC Treaty and European case law concerning the free circulation of goods, in order to allow articles of precious metal which have been struck with hallmarks by an independent body in an EEA State to be offered for sale in the United Kingdom without further hallmarking where the marks in question provide information which is equivalent to UK hallmarks and is capable of being understood by UK consumers.

It is ultimately a matter for the UK courts whether articles hallmarked by an assay office in Spain would meet these conditions, but the British Hallmarking Council—the body established by the 1973 Act—is of the opinion that they will. I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of the information about the hallmarks of other EEA States which has been published by the BHC. This includes illustrations of individual marks. The information is not yet comprehensive and DTI is currently attempting to obtain fuller information.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with his French energy counterpart on the Millennium-readiness of French nuclear power stations and on contingency plans and other related safety issues; and if he will make a statement. [72155]

Mr. Battle: Nuclear safety regulators regularly discuss Year 2000 issues both at international meetings and at bi-lateral meetings. A recent example was the OECD Nuclear Energy Agency's workshop on "The impact of year 2000 on the Nuclear Industry", in Ottawa on 8–10 February 1999. All nuclear safety regulators present there, including the French Nuclear Safety Authority—Direction de la surete des installations nucleaires (DSIN)—gave reports on the readiness of their nuclear sector on millennium issues.

The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in the British Health and Safety Executive is satisfied that the French Authorities are taking seriously Year 2000 issues and are dealing with them in an appropriate and effective manner.

Electricity Connections

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the average connection charge levied on domestic consumers by electricity suppliers. [72541]

Mr. Battle: Most of the public electricity suppliers charge in the region of £200 to £400 for a standard domestic connection. In all cases, charges will be made according to the degree of difficulty involved in the connection and this can make the cost considerably more. Some allowance may be made for future revenue received by the company as a result of a connection.

In all cases where customers feel that the costs involved are not reasonable those costs can be referred to the Director General of Electricity Supply for determination.

Travel Companies

Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the Office of Fair Trading to implement the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission made in December 1997 on the display of travel company ownership links on the fascias of trading premises and sales brochures. [72016]

Dr. Howells: My hon. Friend the Leader of the House, in her capacity as the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, asked the Director General of Fair Trading to seek undertakings from the major travel groups regarding undertakings on transparency of ownership links. He is still in discussions with them. He will provide me with advice on the matter in due course and I will make an announcement.

Genetically Modified Food

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the investments made by industry over the last five years in research by publicly and jointly funded laboratories into genetically modified foods and crops. [72038]

Mr. Battle: To answer the question it will be necessary to compile the information from the laboratories' records for the last five years, which will take some time. When the information is collected I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the answer in the Library of the House.

Agricultural Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money his Department has spent supporting the research and development of agricultural biotechnology since 1 May 1997. [72070]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 February 1999]: The Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, principally funded from the Science Budget for which the Office of Science and Technology is responsible, spent £13.8 million on agricultural biotechnology in the financial year 1997–98 and expects to spend some £14.5 million in the current financial year, 1998–99. The Department itself does not sponsor food or agriculture companies, and none of its funding is directed specifically at agricultural biotechnology.

DVD Video Disks

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action he is taking to prevent regional coding of DVD video disks; [72749]

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that consumers are made aware of regional coding of DVD video disks; [72743]

(3) what discussions he has had with PC manufacturers to ensure that purchasers of DVD video disks can change their regional codes indefinitely; [72745]

(4) what discussions he has had with manufacturers of consumer DVD video players to ensure that their machines will play disks from each of the six regions of the world; [72748]

(5) if he will make a statement on DVD video disk technology and how consumers can be protected from DVD video disk manufacturers and film makers (a) operating a pricing cartel and (b) designing machines and disks which are not compatible outside their region; [72746]

(6) what discussions he has had with Ministers in other countries on combating anti-competitive behaviour with regard to DVD video disks. [72799]

Dr. Howells: I understand that the region lock protection system to which the right hon. Member refers reflects the different release schedules for feature films in different areas, and that there are no proposals similarly to restrict blank DVDs or audio disks. Consumers can check that any disk they purchase will play on an appropriate player by matching up the regional code printed on the disk packaging with that shown on the front of their player.

Under UK competition law, in the first instance it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) to investigate allegations of anti-competitive behaviour. The market for DVDs is still young and the DGFT will be monitoring its development. To date he has seen no evidence of price cartels or any other anti-competitive behaviour. If the right hon. Member has any such evidence he should pass that direct to the DGFT. Neither I nor the Secretary of State have had discussions with PC manufacturers, or with Ministers in other countries, about the specifications for DVDs.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentinian Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what scholarships are made available by his Department to students from the Argentine to study at British universities; and if he will make a statement. [72545]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Chevening Scholarship Scheme (funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) and the Department for International Development (DfID) will provide some 20 new awards for Argentine Scholars to study in the UK in 1998–99 at a cost of about £270,000. The scholarships support postgraduate study in a range of fields from public administration to international law and environmental health. Argentine students are also eligible to apply for places on the FCO's central joint funded schemes co-sponsored with Dundee University and Rio Tinto plc, the Wessex Institute of Technology, the College of Petroleum Studies, and Oxford University and Citibank.

During President Menem's visit to the UK in October 1998 a new scholarships scheme co-sponsored by the FCO, the Argentine Foreign Ministry and Warwick University was established.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the name and position of the official to whom the Chilean Embassy spoke on 15 October with regard to Senator Pinochet's travel arrangements. [72278]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Chilean Embassy spoke to the Head of Latin America and Caribbean Department, Mr. Henry Hogger.

Orlando Da Costa

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the investigation into the shooting of Orlando Da Costa during the Troika Ambassador trip to East Timor. [72663]

Mr. Fatchett: We naturally very much regret the death of Orlando Marcelino Da Costa who was shot in Baucau in June 1998. We asked the Indonesian authorities to carry out a full investigation into the incident. We still await the report.

South Africa

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is giving the South African Government to combat Islamic terrorism. [72698]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office assists a number of countries each year to combat terrorism more effectively. A team of Whitehall officials will visit South Africa next month as a part of this programme for exploratory talks on counter-terrorism issues. This will be the first such contact with the South African Government since President Mandela's election.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of civil rights abuses perpetrated by the Nigerian forces in Sierra Leone. [72711]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are aware of reports of abuses by ECOMOG forces in Sierra Leone. We are concerned at such reports, and have made our views clear on this to the Government of Sierra Leone and to ECOMOG.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sierra Leone Government about the death sentence passed on Foday Sankoh. [72730]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government of Sierra Leone can be in no doubt about our opposition to the death penalty in Sierra Leone and elsewhere. I raised the case of Foday Sankoh when I met Dr. Jonah, the Sierra Leone Minister of Finance, Development and Economic Planning, on 4 November, and again on 18 January. We do not believe that further executions will promote national reconciliation in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has had with President Kabbah of Sierra Leone on the execution of 24 army officers. [72725]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I spoke personally to President Kabbah on 16 October about the military courts martial, to ask him to show clemency. I also wrote to President Kabbah on the same day to reiterate our concern. The Government of Sierra Leone can be in no doubt about our concern over the imposition of the death penalty.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the trial procedures to which the 24 executed officers were subjected in Sierra Leone. [72726]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: United Nations and other international observers monitoring the trials process in Sierra Leone have indicated that fair trials have been held under difficult circumstances. There are concerns, however, about the lack of a proper appeals process for the military courts martial. We have taken this up with the Government of Sierra Leone; and will continue to remind them of the need to provide fair trials for all those accused.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on destruction of property in Freetown following the ECOMOG invasion. [72735]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: ECOMOG have not invaded Sierra Leone; their forces were invited by the Government of Sierra Leone to assist in the restoration of peace and security. There has been significant damage to property during the current conflict. The most serious damage was caused in January, when rebel forces entered Freetown, and indulged in wanton destruction of property. The eastern areas of the city have suffered particularly: up to eighty per cent. of property has been reported as destroyed or damaged.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the support given by Britain to the (a) Nigerian military and (b) ECOMOG forces in Sierra Leone. [72714]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have not given any bilateral support to the Nigerian military, as they are subject to the EU Common position on Nigeria which bans military co-operation. ECOMOG in Sierra Leone comprises Nigerian, Ghanaian, Guinean and Malian contingents. We have provided it with practical support to enable it to protect the legitimate Government and people of Sierra Leone from rebel violence. We have provided £3 million worth of practical logistic support; this includes £1 million worth of vehicles and communications equipment, as well as emergency medical supplies for the people of Sierra Leone. On 19 January, the Foreign Secretary announced a further £1 million of logistic support for ECOMOG and humanitarian assistance. We have also funded the recent airlift of the Ghanaian contingent to ECOMOG.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the support given by Her Majesty's Government to President Kabbah since September 1998. [72731]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We continue to provide strong political and practical support to the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone. Since the restoration of President Kabbah's legitimate Government in March 1998, we have committed over £20 million for rehabilitation and reconstruction following the military junta, of which £11 million has been spent. We have provided further humanitarian assistance to the people of Sierra Leone this year in response to the deterioration in the security situation.

Usama bin Laden

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the whereabouts of Usama bin Laden. [72696]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There have been a variety of reports about the whereabouts of Usama bin Laden, who moved to Afghanistan in 1996; we have no confirmation of his current whereabouts.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the placement by President Mugabe of Zimbabwe of top army officers in key civilian Government positions. [72729]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I receive regular reports about developments in Zimbabwe, including on senior government appointments. In November 1998 Brigadier Muzonini (Rtd) and Brigadier Bonyongwe were appointed Director and Deputy Director respectively of the Central Intelligence Organisation.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will assess the report by the Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace on the murder and torture of civilians by the Zimbabwean Army and security agents. [72723]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are aware of the disturbing report by the Legal Resources Foundation and the Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace into the atrocities in Matabeleland during the 1980s. When I met President Mugabe in December 1998 I urged him to address the outstanding human rights issues, in the interest of national reconciliation.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the personal involvement of President Mugabe in civil rights abuses in Zimbabwe. [72722]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: President Mugabe has used emergency powers to curb industrial action, which we understand the Zimbabwean parliament has rejected. We have no reports that he was personally involved in the detention and apparent torture of journalists, but neither has he condemned these abuses. He has made a series of statements which undermine the independence of the Courts, Media, and civil rights groups.

Christians

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries about which his Department has received reports of Christians suffering civil rights abuses because of their religion. [72704]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We routinely receive information from our posts overseas and from a very wide range of academic, NGO, media and other sources, on the human rights situations worldwide, including religious freedom and the position of Christians. Over the past year we have received reports about countries including: Pakistan, India, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Egypt, Indonesia and China.

We always view such matters seriously and frequently take them up with the governments concerned.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72683]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given today Official Report, columns 311-12, by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend for North Warickshire (Mr. O'Brien).

Kenya

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Kenyan Government following the beating of Professor Wangare Maathai by security guards at Karura Forest. [72734]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As part of the Democratic Development Group of diplomatic missions in Nairobi, we supported a collective statement expressing our deep concern over the violence at the Karura Forest. The statement underlined that the right to demonstrate peacefully arises directly from basic human rights, including freedom of expression and assembly. However, it also condemned the destruction of private property and the accompanying violence by demonstrators, as with the excessive reaction of the police. It also called for greater transparency and respect for the law in the allocation of public lands in Kenya, including the Karura Forest, something which our High Commissioner regularly raises with President Moi and senior Government Ministers.

India

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indian Government about the (a) torture and (b) murder of Christians in India. [72707]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 395-96.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visits

Q15. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will pay an official visit to the River Dart to discuss oyster farming. [71242]

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners he expects to have incomes at least as great as the minimum income guarantee in their year of retirement once his pensions reforms are fully implemented. [71181]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72688]

Mr. Bayley: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) gave today, Official Report, columns 311-12.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Film and Television Freelance Training Courses

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many students are currently undertaking FT2 courses. [72217]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 22 February 1999]: I understand from FT2 that there are currently 32 students undertaking FT2 courses, 20 on the new entrants programme, 6 on the research scheme and 6 on the set craft apprenticeships scheme.

Internet (Public Libraries)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to monitor the terms under which free connections to the Internet for public libraries are being made; and if he will make a statement. [72084]

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for Library Authorities to negotiate the terms governing connection to the Internet.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the average (a) capital and (b) running cost per link to the Internet for public libraries; and if he will estimate the range of such costs. [72082]

Mr. Alan Howarth: This is a matter for individual Library Authorities to determine following commercial negotiation.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many and what percentage of public libraries have been connected to the Internet free of installation charge to date. [72086]

Mr. Alan Howarth: A survey conducted in 1997 suggested that 5 per cent. of service points had public Internet access. Information on the costs of installation is not held centrally.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the companies which have made connections to the Internet for public libraries free of installation charges; how many connections have been made in each case; and if he will publish the terms under which these connections have been made. [72085]

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held centrally.

Film Industry

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what encouragement his Department is providing to secure the making of large budget films in Britain. [72323]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 22 February 1999]: My Department is keen to create the conditions to secure the production of films of all types in Britain. In seeking to attract large budget films from overseas, my Department provides funding to the British Film Commission to promote the benefits of filming in the UK internationally. In addition, my Department jointly funds the newly created British Film Office in Los Angeles, which promotes the UK within Hollywood.

Recent large budget films made wholly or partly in this country include 'The Mummy' and 'Saving Private Ryan'. The new James Bond film 'The World is not Enough' is currently shooting here.

WALES

Education, Flintshire

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect of the 1999-2000 revenue support grant on the provision of educational services in Flintshire. [72028]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend in his statement to the House on 11 February 1999, Official Report, columns 483-89, announced that the local government revenue settlement for 1999-2000 provided for an increase in net Total Standard Spending of £144 million, of which £70.2 million is identified for education. Flintshire County Borough Council's share of the £70.2 million is £3.494 million and I expect the authority to increase its education budget by at least this amount with the bulk being included in delegate schools budgets. Overall Central Government support for Flintshire has increased by £6.174 million or 5.67% over 1998-99.

Pierhead Building, Cardiff Bay

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future use of the Pierhead Building in Cardiff Bay. [72279]

Mr. Michael: The Pierhead Building is a unique and attractive building right at the heart of Cardiff Bay which stands next to the site for the new Assembly building. It provides a powerful visual link for the Assembly with the industrial and maritime heritage of Wales. Originally it has been thought that it could be used as the office accommodation for the First Secretary and Cabinet. After careful consideration I concluded that their offices should be in the same building as the offices of Assembly Members which will be located in Crickhowell House along with the temporary Chamber and committee rooms. This will encourage the Cabinet members and Assembly Members and their staff in working together as part of a single team.

Appropriate arrangements have now been achieved in Crickhowell House, allowing the space in Pierhead Building to be used to address other issues. It is planned to bring forward detailed plans in the near future enabling Pierhead Building to be used for educational and public information purposes and as a function hall. It will also provide office accommodation for a small number of staff.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72684]

Mr. Michael: The Welsh Office will play a full part in arrangements across Government to drive forward initiatives on crime reduction led by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. My Department with its multi-functional remit routinely take account of cross-cutting issues as part of policy development and I have made it clear that our contribution to the reduction of crime and disorder has high priority.

The Welsh Office is also taking a close interest in the audit reports and emerging strategies of the local crime and disorder reduction partnerships in Wales and considering the implications of these for wider policy development.

The recent Audit Commission report "Safety in Numbers - Promoting Community Safety" cited the Green Paper "Better Health - Better Wales" as an example of good practice in drawing out the connections between the effects of crime and people's health and well-being. This report made a number of recommendations to central Government, which I will be considering. These include monitoring and assessing good practice and ensuring a corporate approach across central Government. I have stressed the Government's expectations that all public organisations will contribute to crime reduction, and I have stressed the responsibilities of local government in Wales with the full support of the Welsh Local Government Association.

I have stressed the role of the NHS in Wales and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary recently joined me to visit the accident and emergency unit in Cardiff where hospital staff, police and victim support have joined in a project to reduce violence. All public bodies in Wales are being encouraged to take a similarly creative approach.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Renewables Obligation

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made a decision on the Third Order under the Scottish Renewables Obligation; and if he will make a statement. [73452]

Mr. Dewar: I have made arrangements for an order to be laid before Parliament tomorrow requiring the 2 Public Electricity Suppliers (ScottishPower and Scottish Hydro-Electric) in Scotland to make arrangements to secure 150MW DNC of new renewable electricity generating capacity from a range of renewable sources. There has been an excellent response by bidders to the tender invitation for SRO3. This represents a considerable success for our policy of creating an initial market within each of the most promising renewable technologies by encouraging strong competition between various projects. This has allowed me to set a larger order than previously envisaged when SRO3 was announced in December 1997.

I am particularly pleased to report that bid prices for SRO3 have been once again reduced, with bids for large wind projects especially low. The cheapest bid was a remarkable 1.89 pence per unit generated making large wind projects by far the cheapest renewable technology available under the order. I have, therefore, decided that large wind projects should make up a sizeable part of the order. A specific band for small wind projects is being introduced for the first time under SRO3. The aim is to encourage small, locally based companies and communities to get involved in electricity generation.

The prices tendered for biomass projects were relatively high compared with wind and waste to energy projects. I have, however, taken account of the wider benefits to agriculture and forestry and to the environment of such projects, and the need to enable the technology to establish itself in Scotland. For this reason, I have decided to allocate almost 9 per cent. of the order to this technology.

A band for wave power was proposed in SRO3 for the first time. Wave technology is very much at a formative stage and I am keen to help the technology gain a foothold in Scotland. I am pleased to report that bid prices were lower than expected and I have, therefore, decided to allocate a small part of the order to wave projects.

I have also decided to include a sizeable number of waste to energy projects and a small number of hydro electric projects in the order.

There are significant benefits stemming from the encouragement of renewable energy. These include a contribution to the Government's greenhouse gas emissions reduction target agreed following the December 1998 Kyoto conference. By making an order for a total of 150MW we are taking a considerable step towards meeting Government's new and strong drive for renewable generating capacity, while also promoting the renewable industry in Scotland.

We are aware of concerns about the possible effects on the environment and landscape of the development of renewable energy projects and expect developers to give particular care and attention to these sensitive issues. Successful developers will need to obtain planning permission for their projects if they have not already done so; award of a contract as a result of the Order does not confer any special advantage in the planning process and approval must be sought in the usual way.

I have made the order after considering carefully the advice of the Director General of Electricity Supply and after consulting the 2 Scottish Public Electricity Suppliers.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who will be disqualified from being a member of the Scottish Parliament. [73489]

Mr. McLeish: Section 15 of the Scotland Act 1998 specifies that holding certain offices disqualifies people from being members of the Scottish Parliament. These include judges, civil servants, members of the armed forces, members of police forces and members of foreign legislatures and others who would not be able to sit and vote in the House of Commons. It also gives Her Majesty power by Order in Council to designate further office holders who will be disqualified from being MSPs. On 16 February, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, laid a draft Order before both Houses of Parliament which lists those office holders who should be disqualified from being MSPs. The Order will be subject to affirmative resolution procedure in both Houses before being put to Her Majesty in Council.

In making these proposals, we have adopted broadly the same approach to disqualification as is applied in the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975, so following well established and well understood precedents. People holding disqualifying offices will be required to resign those offices on formal consent to nomination.

Not all those office holders disqualified from being an MP will also be disqualified from being an MSP as we have adapted the disqualification to the circumstances of the Scottish Parliament. This Order will be for the first elections; it will be for the Parliament to consider the scope of the disqualification for subsequent elections.

Scottish Consultative Council

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the outcome of the first stage of the policy and financial reviews of the Scottish Consultative Council on the curriculum and the Scottish Council for Educational Technology. [73540]

Mrs. Liddell: The 'prior options' studies of the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum (SCCC) and the Scottish Council for Educational Technology (SCET) began in December 1997. These studies raised issues of sufficient importance that a consultation document seeking comments on options for the future of both bodies was issued in October 1998. Responses were received from over 80 organisations and individuals.

The outcome of the consultation was unanimously in favour of integrating the development of curriculum and ICT materials and there was a majority view that advice on the curriculum and ICT should be located in one body.

I have concluded that there is a continuing need for independent advice and the development of materials relating to both the curriculum and ICT. I have agreed, in principle, that the best way of achieving that is the merger of SCCC and SCET.

I am therefore setting up a Merger Action Group to develop a detailed plan for the merger to be presented to the Scottish Executive by 15 September this year. The membership of the Action Group will be drawn from both bodies and will include others from the education sector. It will be chaired by a senior member of HM Inspectorate of Schools. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Organic Aid Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what payments he has proposed under the Organic Aid Scheme for (a) Arable Area Payments Scheme eligible land, (b) ineligible land and (c) unimproved grassland or rough grazing. [72618]

Mr. Macdonald: The payment rates currently in operation for the Organic Aid Scheme in Scotland are as follows. Consideration is being given to the options for enhancing the OAS in Scotland. From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

£ per hectare

| | Arable land or improved grassland | Rough grazing or unimproved grassland |
|---|---|---|
| First year | 70 | 10 |
| Second year | 70 | 10 |
| Third year | 50 | 7 |
| Fourth year | 35 | 5 |
| Fifth year | 25 | 5 |

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorist Violence

8. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence she has received of the involvement of paramilitary organisations in terrorist violence in recent weeks. [71205]

Mr. Ingram: There have been a number of acts of violence recently, including paramilitary assaults and attacks. I am in regular contact with security advisers to discuss these issues. I urge all those with evidence to come forward and help the RUC bring the perpetrators to justice.

Punishment Beatings

9. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussion she has had with human rights organisation on investigations of punishment beatings in Northern Ireland. [71206]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State has noted the interest taken in the subject of paramilitary assaults by human rights organisations. In particular, I have met in the past members of Families against Intimidation and Terror to discuss this subject and a further meeting is planned.

Eleven City Tour

10. Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the eleven city tour's impact on the competitiveness of the Northern Ireland economy. [71207]

Mr. Ingram: Intense cultivation of contacts made on the Tour is well under way. Visits from prospective investors are flowing and a number of serious investment interests are under discussion. Securing projects can take several months or even years, however. It will therefore be some time before the Tour's full economic impact can be assessed.

Decommissioning

11. Mr. Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of when the decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives will begin. [71208]

16. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of when the decommissioning of illegally held arms and explosives will begin. [71213]

18. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress of decommissioning. [71215]

Mr. Ingram: I have welcomed the start the LVF made to decommissioning which took place on 18 December, and I urge them to continue. Discussions continue between representatives of other groups and the Decommissioning Commission. It is now time for them to start to decommission: they know very well that the Good Friday agreement must be implemented in full and that decommissioning is an indispensable part of that agreement.

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of when (a) PIRA and (b) the UDA will begin their decommissioning process. [71217]

Drumcree

12. Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards the resolution of the problems over the Orange Order parade at Drumcree. [71209]

15. Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken or are proposed by the Government to resolve the impasse at Drumcree. [71212]

Mr. Ingram: The Prime Minister met the Orange Order in November and, more recently, a delegation from the Garvaghy Road Residents' Coalition. The Government are continuing their efforts to foster communication between both parties because they believe that agreement is still possible if goodwill exists.

British-Irish Council

13. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what meetings she has had to discuss preparations for the British-Irish Council. [71210]

17. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what meetings she has had to discuss preparations for the British-Irish Council. [71214]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In December, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the Secretaries for Scotland and Wales, together with my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn), to discuss preparations for the British-Irish Council. She also had separate discussions with my right hon. Friends the Members for Glasgow, Anniesland (Mr. Dewar) and Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on recent visits to Scotland and Wales respectively. Last week, I visited the Isle of Man to bring the Isle of Man Government up to date on progress on the British-Irish Council, and I will be making a similar visit to Jersey and Guernsey in the near future. I will also be holding a meeting with a number of other Ministers on 25 February to take our preparations further.

In addition, I have regular meetings with the Northern Ireland parties on progress on the implementation of the Belfast agreement at which preparations for the BIC are discussed.

Victims of Violence

14. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what initiatives have been taken to help victims of violence and their families. [71211]

22. Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what initiatives have been taken to help victims of violence and their families. [71219]

Mr. Ingram: I have announced a number of significant funding initiatives to support victims and a newsletter outlining progress has been placed in the House of Commons Library. Work is progressing on all these initiatives, and I am pleased to say that a new Trauma Centre is now operational. I hope to announce further measures in the near future.

New Deal

19. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many companies are signed up to the Government's New Deal initiative in Northern Ireland. [71216]

Mr. McFall: Since the launch of the New Deal on 6 April 1998, 1,851 Northern Ireland companies have each confirmed their support for New Deal by signing an Employer Agreement. This figure has steadily increased over the 10 months of New Deal's lifetime and already exceeds the target of 1,500 Agreements for the first full year.

Energy Market

21. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what actions she has taken to improve the working of the energy market in Northern Ireland. [71218]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough and Whitby (Mr. Quinn), Official Report, column 373.

Employment Relations Bill

23. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to seek to extend the provisions of the Employment Relations Bill to Northern Ireland, with particular reference to carers. [71220]

Mr. Ingram: The Employment Relations Bill introduces a right to time off for domestic incidents, and carers would benefit, for example, by availing themselves of time off to take an elderly parent to hospital following a fall. Replication in Northern Ireland of the provisions in the Bill will be a matter for the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Peace Process

24. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the proposals for further progress in the peace process. [71221]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris), Official Report, column 377.

Trade Unions

25. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she last met the Northern Ireland trade unions; and if she will make a statement on the matters discussed. [71222]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State met the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions on 2 December 1997. A range of topics was discussed including the peace process; fair employment including the report by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights and the Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment initiative; economic opportunities, trade union representation on public bodies; and policing.

Health Service Pay

26. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what settlement has been agreed for chief executives' pay in the Northern Ireland health service this year. [71223]

Mr. McFall: In common with national policy, my predecessor the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) wrote to the Chairmen of Health and Personal Social Services (HPSS) bodies in April 1998 asking that all practical steps be taken to ensure that the cost of individual pay rises for Senior Executives and other Senior Managers were restricted to 2.7% within the current financial year. Employers have been asked to include a compliance statement in their annual reports for 1998–99. I have recently announced a similar limit of 2.6% for next year for Chief Executives and other executives operating at board level.

Violent Crime

27. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her policy to reduce the incidence of crimes of violence against the person perpetrated by members of paramilitary groups in Northern Ireland. [71224]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is on record as condemning all acts of violence, including those against the person perpetrated by members of paramilitary organisations. She has met with representatives of political parties and impressed on them the importance of bringing their influence to bear on paramilitary groups to stop such practices.

Good Friday Agreement

28. Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations she has had with the Northern Ireland parties on legislation to implement the Good Friday agreement. [71225]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today, Official Report, column 329, to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Judy Mallaber).

Prisoner Releases

29. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the release of terrorist prisoners. [71226]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the extensive debate on the Floor of the House regarding this issue on 9 December 1998, Official Report, columns 329–59. I also refer my hon. Friend to the further related debate on 27 January 1999, Official Report, columns 344–97, and in particular to columns 358–59.

30. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners have been released under the accelerated release scheme set up by the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 to date. [71227]

Mr. Ingram: To date there have been 242 prisoners released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998. This is drawn from information received by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State as at 15 February 1999 from the Sentence Review Commissioners to whom prisoners apply for early release.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the support she has given to councils that have lost money with BCCI. [71201]

Mr. Ingram: Lisburn Borough Council was the only district council in Northern Ireland which lost its investment with the collapse of BCCI. No direct support was given by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland as councils have the authority to make their own investment decisions. However, the Local Government Auditor did assist in a review of the council's investment procedures and provided advice on the way forward.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Synthetic Pyrethroid Products

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has commissioned on the safety of synthetic pyrethroid products. [71541]

Mr. Rooker: Applications for Marketing Authorisations for all veterinary medicinal products including synthetic pyrethroids must satisfy statutory criteria for safety, quality and efficacy. Applicants are required to submit details of scientific studies to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, where they are carefully assessed by specialists in qualified various scientific disciplines including biology, pharmacy, veterinary practice, toxicology and ecotoxicology.

Synthetic pyrethroids used as pesticides are similarly subject to strict statutory control. Ministers approve the marketing or use of a pesticide only after rigorous evaluation of scientific data. No approval is given to pesticides that pose any unacceptable risk to human beings, non-target species or the wider environment. All approved pesticides are subject to review and, if appropriate, approvals can be restricted or revoked entirely. Given the above statutory regulatory system no studies on the safety of synthetic pyrethroids have been commissioned by the Department.

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72002]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 22 February 1999]: From records held centrally, the services of KPMG have been sought on just one occasion since 1 April 1996 for a personnel study undertaken in March 1997 at a total VAT inclusive cost of £11,750. Information on the use of KPMG prior to 1 April 1996 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Food and Drink Federation

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the Food and Drink Federation; and what issues were discussed. [72733]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Minister met the Director General of the Food and Drink Federation (FDF) for an introductory meeting on 3 August when discussions covered Genetically Modified Organisms and the Food Standards Agency. Since then he has had frequent contact with FDF on a wide range of issues. He is to be principal guest speaker at the FDF President's Dinner on 4 March.

Inhumane Slaughtering

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Etherington) of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 414, on inhumane slaughter, what plans he has to outlaw inhumane slaughtering in the United Kingdom. [72697]

Mr. Morley: The inhumane slaughter of farmed animals has long been contrary to the law in the United Kingdom. The Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995, and parallel regulations in Northern Ireland, implement EU requirements by making it an offence to cause any animal avoidable excitement, pain or suffering.

The Government have this week laid a statutory instrument amending these regulations: this is not, however, because it is necessary to strengthen the law on inhumane slaughter, but is in order to confine the conduct of slaughter which is carried out without stunning for religious reasons to licensed slaughterhouses.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total number of staff (a) in his Department and (b) in each of the agencies for which he is responsible and their location in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English regions. [70484]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Information on numbers of staff in my Department and their regional distribution is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Civil Service Statistics 1998", which is placed in the Library of the House. Civil Service Statistics also contain staffing figures for each of my Department's agencies but does not have information on the regional distribution of their staff so I have asked Agency Chief Executives to reply separately on this.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 23 February 1999:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food requesting a list of the total staff and their locations in (i) London, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) each of the English Regions has been passed to me to reply as regards this Executive Agency.

The MHS is not able to provide information on staffing numbers which correlate to the Regions you have requested. MHS Regions were set up on a geographical basis depending on the location of licensed fresh meat premises at which the Agency is required to provide an inspection service. The Regions are North, Central, South and East, South and West, Wales and Scotland. Total MHS staff based in these Regions are as follows:

| Region | Total staff |
|---|---|
| North | 472 |
| Central | 316 |
| South and East | 268 |
| South and West | 243 |
| Wales | 250 |
| Scotland | 193 |

MHS Headquarters staff are included in the Northern Region data. For operational reasons, the MHS includes some part of Cumbria in its Scotland Region and parts of Herefordshire and Shropshire in its Wales Region.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 11 February 1999:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question concerning the location of staff in this Agency.

There are currently 199 staff in the Agency all of whom are based in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 23 February 1999:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning the number of staff employed and their location.

CSL employs a total of 565 staff. Details of the locations at which the staff are based are given below.

| Region | Number of staff |
|---|---|
| Wales | 1 |
| South East | 5 |
| South West | 8 |
| West Midlands | 2 |
| North West | 1 |
| North East | 1 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 425 |
| East Midlands | 1 |
| Eastern | 121 |

These figures exclude casual staff and seasonal employees.

Letter from P. W. Greig-Smith to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 23 February 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question concerning the total number of staff in his Department, and their location. I am replying on behalf of the Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science (CEFAS).

The following table gives the regional distribution of CEFAS staff as at 10 February 1999:

| Permanent staff | Non-industrial | Industrial |
|---|---|---|
| South East | 61 | 5 |
| South West | 62 | 1 |
| North West | 3 | 0 |
| Eastern | 272 | 31 |
| Wales | 15 | 5 |
| Totals | 413 | 42 |

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 23 February 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on the total number of staff employed by the Veterinary Laboratories Agency. Figures are as follows:

| | Number of staff |
|---|---|
| England | |
| Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk | 28 |
| Cambridge, Cambridgeshire | 2 |
| Langford, North Somerset | 22 |
| Luddington, Warwickshire | 35 |
| Newcastle, Tyne & Wear | 23 |
| Penrith, Cumbria | 22 |
| Preston, Lancashire | 25 |
| Shrewsbury, Shropshire | 31 |
| Starcross, Devon | 27 |
| Sutton Bonington, Leicestershire | 36 |
| Thirsk, North Yorkshire | 28 |
| Truro, Cornwall | 9 |
| Winchester, Hampshire | 28 |
| Weybridge, Surrey | 736 |
| Total number of staff in England | 1,052 |
| Scotland | |
| Lasswade, Midlothian | 27 |
| Total number of staff in Scotland | 27 |
| Wales | |
| Aberystwyth, Dyfed | 10 |
| Carmarthen, Carmarthenshire | 19 |
| Total number of staff in Wales | 29 |
| Total number of staff employed by VLA | 1,108 |

Letter from Sarah Nason to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 11 February 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply, in respect of the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA), to your question seeking the distribution of staff in London, Wales, Scotland and each of the English regions. The information, for permanent staff on a full time equivalent basis, is as follows:

| | Number of permanent staff |
|---|---|
| London | 22 |
| South East | 62 |
| Total London and SE | 84 |
| South West | 94.5 |
| West Midlands | 62.5 |
| North West | 13.5 |
| North East | 11 |
| Merseyside | 0 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 60 |
| East Midlands | 8 |
| Eastern | 64.5 |
| Wales | 45.5 |
| Scotland | 0 |
| Northern Ireland | 0 |
| Unreported/elsewhere | 0 |
| Total | 443.5 |

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 12 February 1999:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the regional distribution of staff employed in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate as these figures are not held centrally.

The Cabinet Office publication "Civil Service Statistics 1998" shows that the VMD employs 110 staff. 109 staff are located at Addlestone (South-East Region) and 1 member of staff is located at Carlisle (North-West Region).

CABINET OFFICE

KPMG

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the services that KPMG have performed for his Department (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the corresponding period prior to 1 May 1997, indicating the remuneration made in each case. [72003]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer on 22 February 1999]: The information requested for the period before 1 May 1997 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Since 1 May 1997, KPMG have provided the following services to the Cabinet Office, its Agencies and COI:

1. Seminar on cross-departmental working
2. Pilot study on the use of the Government Procurement Card in the central Cabinet Office
3. Development of IS strategy for the Government of Barbados

4. Secondment to the Better Regulation Unit
5. Internal audit needs assessment for TBA
6. Assistance with TBA's Year 2000 contingency strategy
7. Internal audit service to CCTA.

There is no charge to the Cabinet Office for the services at items 1 and 2 above.

The then Overseas Development Administration reimbursed the Cabinet Office the full cost of item 3.

The total cost since 1 May 1997 of items 3 to 7 is £151,663, including VAT.

Better Regulation Policy

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps the Government have taken to give priority to their better regulation policy. [71941]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 21 October 1998, Official Report, column 1152.

In addition, the Better Regulation Task Force is currently reviewing the role of regulation in relation to productivity, the operation of fit person regimes, the applicability of self-regulation, and law on anti-discrimination and enforcement practice. The productivity review was first announced in the pre-Budget Statement of 3 November 1998, Official Report, columns 681–702. The Task Force will shortly offer initial findings on the impact of regulations on business start-up, success and growth and will publish full reports on all reviews by the summer.

We continue to work actively with our European partners to ensure further progress towards effective regulation across Europe.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions he has had with businesses with regard to improving the clarity of regulations. [71881]

Mr. Kilfoyle: We are working with others to help business to understand and comply with regulations and to ensure constructive and consistent enforcement. We aim to make the regulatory system more transparent, accessible and helpful. The Access Business group of departmental Ministers, local government and business is looking at a number of issues, including Direct Access Government, which provides business and the self-employed with 24-hour access to regulatory guidance and forms via the Internet.

The Enforcement Concordat sets out for businesses, and society in general, what they can expect of enforcers. Enforcers will give to business clear explanations of what they need to do and by when, opportunities to resolve differences before enforcement action is taken (unless immediate action is required), and an explanation of their rights of appeal. There are now 88 local authorities in England and Wales and 19 in Scotland who have signed up to the Concordat.

My Department has actively promoted the setting up of local business partnerships between business and enforcement communities. These are designed to maximise regulatory understanding and compliance at least burden.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps he has taken to ensure that regulations are enforced consistently across the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [71882]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Failure by a Member State to enforce adequate Community legislation is itself a breach of Community law. As such, it is primarily a matter for the European Commission. Where the UK becomes aware of such a breach, we can draw it to the attention of the Commission. Direct action by the UK can be taken by the UK pursuant to Article 170 TEC. Wider political, policy or legal concerns would influence whether such action would be appropriate in any particular case.

In the area of the Single Market, we have a unit in the Department of Trade and Industry (Action Single Market) which co-ordinates complaints from UK companies and seeks bilaterally with the Member State in question and with the Commission to remove obstacles to provision of goods or services in that Member State.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps the Government have taken to improve regulatory impact assessment procedures. [71883]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As part of their Better Regulation Initiative, the Government want to encourage good practice at all stages of regulatory work.

Last August, the Better Regulation Unit published new guidance to help Departments in applying the Task Force's principles of good regulation and in assessing the impact of regulatory proposals.

The publication of the Guide also heralds the introduction of a more comprehensive system of regulatory reporting. Every Department will be required to publish an account (in their Departmental Reports in March this year) of their regulatory activity with examples of how they have improved the quality and effectiveness of regulation through the application of the Task Force's principles.

Almost all Departments have now received training on the new Guidance, with some Departments setting up their own training programmes.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what rules and regulations the Government have (a) abolished and (b) simplified since 1 May 1997 in order to reduce costs imposed on businesses. [72075]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office has been informed of 74 amending or repealing regulations made between 1 May 1997 and 31 December 1998 which resulted in compliance cost savings to business and others. A list of these has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

EU Laws (Goldplating)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps he has taken to prevent the goldplating of EU laws by member states. [71942]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Over-implementation of EC legislation—goldplating—may amount to a breach of Community law. If it does, it is primarily a matter for the European Commission. Where the UK becomes aware of such a breach, we can draw it to the attention of the Commission. Direct action by the UK can be taken by the UK pursuant to Article 170 TEC. Wider political, policy or legal concerns would influence whether such action would be appropriate in any particular case.

The Government are committed to ensuring that departments do not add any unnecessary measures—goldplating—when implementing EC legislation into UK domestic law.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact that asylum seekers, both legal and illegal, have made on levels of employment and unemployment. [72302]

Mr. Blunkett: No such assessment has been made.

Post-16 Student Support

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to extend the post-16 student support provision pilots onto a national basis; and if he will make a statement. [72051]

Mr. Mudie: The Education Maintenance Allowance pilots will run in 15 pilot Local Education Authorities across England from September 1999. We intend at this stage to run the pilots for three years, covering two cohorts. We will be evaluating the pilots closely from the start, and if the evaluation shows them to be successful in significantly raising post-16 participation, retention and achievement, we plan to introduce the Allowance nationally.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on comparisons between class sizes for A level subjects in sixth form colleges and school sixth forms. [R] [72312]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has neither commissioned nor evaluated research on this issue.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made on the equalisation of funding in relation to 16 to 19 year old students in (a) school sixth forms and (b) sixth form colleges. [R] [72311]

Mr. Mudie: Future levels of funding available to school sixth forms and Further Education (FE) sector colleges, including sixth form colleges, for their 16–19 students will reflect the outcome of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review and local authorities' decisions on the level of spending they devote to schools from their overall spending settlement. The differential between school and FE sector unit funding is eased by the relaxation of the required efficiency gain in the FE sector in 1999–2000 as announced in December following the Comprehensive Spending Review.

New Deal

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of those leaving the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds for a destination other than unsubsidised employment up to the most recent date for which information is available are now claiming welfare benefits; and at what cost. [71641]

Mr. Blunkett: The information on numbers leaving New Deal to claim benefits is contained in the Department for Education and Employment Statistical First Release. This release, prepared by the Government Statistical Service, was placed in the Library on 28 January. The latest set of figures will be placed in the Library on 25 February. It is not possible to give the cost of the benefits as it is not known how long those concerned will remain on them.

School Transport (Rural Areas)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of school transport to Roman Catholic schools for children in rural areas. [72700]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Local Education Authorities must by law have regard to the wishes of Roman Catholic parents for their children to attend Roman Catholic schools, including in rural areas. Where a school is beyond the statutory walking distance, but is not the nearest suitable school, authorities have discretion whether to provide free transport. In exercising that discretion they must consider each request seriously. The Department is monitoring carefully the provision of denominational transport in local education authorities in England.

School Funding (Cumbria)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effects of the 1999–2000 revenue support grant on the provision of education services in Cumbria. [72703]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have increased Cumbria's education SSA for 1999–2000 by well over £9 million which should help raise standards. My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations from Cumbria schools welcoming the education SSA increase, but criticising Cumbria County Council's budget plans. We expect all Local Education Authorities, including Cumbria, to use all of the education SSA increase to support education services, especially schools.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons Cumbria was not included with other local authorities when allocating nursery funding for three years olds in 1999–2000. [72724]

Ms Hodge: In 1999–2000 the additional funding for early education for three-year-olds has been distributed between the fifty authorities with the highest levels of social need assessed by the Government's Index of Local Deprivation augmented by measures of low birth weight and births to teenage mothers. Funding will be distributed across all authorities from April 2000.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the issues for discussion before the Labour and Social Affairs Council on 9 March, indicating the position he proposes to take on each issue. [72739]

Mr. Blunkett: I am unable to attend this meeting of the Council because it clashes with the Budget Statement. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities will attend in my place.

The first part of the meeting will be discussions with representatives of applicant countries, outside the formal enlargement screening process. The UK Government strongly support the enlargement of the European Union.

The Presidency will give an oral report on the Informal Meeting of Social Affairs Ministers which my right hon. Friends the Minister of State for Trade and Industry and the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities attended in Bonn on 4–6 February.

The Presidency will also report on their ideas for a European Employment Pact. The Conclusions of the Vienna Council call for the agreement of an Employment Pact in time for the Cologne European Council in June. We believe the Pact should be based in the existing process of European Employment Guidelines and National Employment Action Plans.

There will also be a presentation of the 1999 Employment and Labour Market Committee work programme.

The Council will discuss the proposed reform of the Standing Committee on Employment which aims to enable this tripartite body to make a more efficient and appropriate contribution to the employment strategy.

There will be discussion of a Resolution on a Code of Conduct which invites Member States to improve administrative co-operation between their authorities in three areas: transnational hiring-out of workers, combating benefit fraud and illegal employment.

The Presidency will report to the Council on the progress negotiations for measures on the organisation of working time for those sectors currently excluded from the Working Time Directive. No discussion is expected.

The Presidency will also give information on how it plans to proceed in the second half of its Presidency on the proposed European Company Statute. No substantive discussion is expected.

Internet Connections

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at what cost to (a) the Government, (b) schools and (c) local authorities connections to the Internet for schools have been made. [72076]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information relating specifically to the cost of schools' connection to the Internet is not held centrally.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average (a) capital and (b) running cost per link to the Internet for (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools; and if he will estimate the range of such costs. [72081]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Oftel and the telecoms industry have now reached agreement on how the commitment to wire up schools to the superhighway free of charge will be implemented. Schools will have a choice of free connections and of technologies, either ISDN2 or equivalent from BT or the cable companies. They are, of course, under no obligation to restrict their usage to these times, packages or telecoms providers included in this deal, and if this is the case, their costs will vary accordingly.

The detailed terms of the offer are contained in the Oftel statement "Access to the Superhighways for Schools" (October 1997). Main features are:

| Company/technology | £ |
|---|---|
| BT (10 hours per school day 8am-6pm) | |
| ISDN2 | 790 p.a. |
| PSTN | 445 p.a. plus £100 connection charge |
| Cable companies | |
| ISDN | 600 p.a. |
| PSTN | 100 p.a. for schools up to 250 pupils |
| | 250 p.a. for schools from 251–500 pupils |
| | 500 p.a. for schools with 501+ pupils |

Other companies may choose to offer similar tariff structures—as a commercial decision for the individual companies involved.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the companies which have made connections to the Internet for schools free of installation charges; how many connections have been made in each case; and if he will publish the terms under which these connections have been made. [72079]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under the agreement between Oftel and the telecoms industry schools will have a choice of free connections and of technologies, either ISDN2 or equivalent from BT or the cable companies.

The detailed terms of the offer are contained in the Oftel statement "Access to the Superhighways for Schools" (October 1997). Main features are:

| Company/technology | £ |
|---|---|
| BT (10 hours per school day 8am-6pm) | |
| ISDN | 790 p.a. |
| PSTN | 445 p.a. plus £100 connection charge |
| Cable companies | |
| ISDN | 600 p.a. |
| PSTN | 100 p.a. for schools up to 250 pupils |
| | 250 p.a. for schools from 251–500 pupils |
| | 500 p.a. for schools with 501+ pupils |

Other companies may choose to offer similar tariff structures—as a commercial decision for the individual companies involved.

The Department does not hold figures for schools' connection to the Internet by individual companies.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from (a) BT, (b) other providers, (c) schools and (d) local authorities on Internet connections. [72080]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department received representations from all the above groups and others on a range of issues including Internet connections as part of the consultation exercise on plans for the National Grid for Learning undertaken in 1997. A report on the outcomes of that consultation can be found on the National Grid for Learning website at: http://www.vtc.ngfl.gov.uk/vtc/library/pub.html.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to monitor the terms under which free connections to the Internet for schools are being made; and if he will make a statement. [72077]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Current arrangements for schools' connection to and use of the Internet at reduced cost were brokered by Oftel and allow for schools to benefit from access to the Internet for a fixed annual fee through a BT ISDN2 connection between 9am and 6pm or for unlimited access through an equivalent cable connection.

The DfEE, in conjunction with other Government Departments, Oftel and the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency, continue to monitor schools' use of the Internet, through statistical surveys and in other ways, and to explore with Oftel and the telecommunications industry the scope for extending such agreements.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many times he has met representatives of BT to discuss Internet connections to schools. [72087]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has met the BT Chairman for discussion on a range of issues. In addition, officials remain in touch with BT through correspondence and meetings, and through public consultation. Other Ministers have also had contact with representatives of the company. These meetings have typically covered a range of issues rather than specifically relating to Internet connections to schools.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools have been connected to the Internet free of installation charge to date. [72078]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department published last year the results of a survey of ICT in provision in schools which indicated that 17 per cent. of primary schools and 83 per cent. of secondary schools were connected to the Internet by March 1998. This is in comparison to the previous year's survey (published in 1997) which indicated that 5 per cent. of primary schools and 47 per cent. of secondary schools were connected to the Internet at the time. Subsequent annual surveys will indicate the change in growth of schools with such connections. The Government are committed to ensuring that all schools are connected to the Internet by 2002.

Precise figures are not held on how many of these schools benefited from the free connection deals such as those offered by BT and cable companies.

Education SSAs

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the funding made available in the 1999–2000 SSA for (i) a primary school with 250 pupils and (ii) a secondary school with 900 pupils in (a) Hertfordshire and (b) Staffordshire; and what factors underlie the differences in allocations between the two counties. [72200]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table sets out the information requested. The differences in allocations are very largely due to the way the area cost adjustment is calculated, although the ethnicity factor also has a small effect in allocating more education SSA per pupil to Hertfordshire.

| Local Education Authority | SSA funding for 250 pupil primary school | SSA funding for 900 pupil secondary school |
|---|---|---|
| Hertfordshire | 593,000 | 2,721,000 |
| Staffordshire | 538,000 | 2,483,000 |

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guidance he has issued to (a) job centres and (b) other parts of the Employment Service on their role in monitoring the introduction of the national minimum wage; [71496]

(2) whether job centres will be permitted (a) to process and (b) to display job vacancies notified to them at pay rates below the national minimum wage. [71497]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Richard Burden, dated 24 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your two questions concerning the Employment Service's preparations for the introduction and monitoring of the National Minimum Wage and whether the Service will advertise jobs at a wage below the legal minimum. These are issues which fall within the responsibilities delegate to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

We have already issued guidance to Jobcentres and other relevant parts of the Agency that from 1 April they must only process and display vacancies which comply with the requirements of the National Minimum Wage Act and its associated regulations. All Jobcentre Managers will be required to check that this guidance is being followed. Vacancy takers in Jobcentres will advise employers using the Employment Service who may seek to offer rates below the National Minimum Wage of the requirements of the legislation.

The Employment Service is working closely with the Department of Trade and Industry, who have responsibility for the National Minimum Wage Act 1998, and through them with the Inland Revenue who are charged with its enforcement. Any complaints received at Jobcentres about employers who may not be meeting the requirements of the Act will be passed to the Inland Revenue to investigate.

I hope this is helpful.

School Teachers

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average annual cost of employing a school teacher in England. [72201]

Ms Estelle Morris: The estimated average cost of employing a full-time teacher (including heads and deputies) in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector in England at April 1999:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Average salary | 25,400 |
| Employer costs[1] | 3,800 |
| Total cost | 29,200 |

[1] Includes 7.6 per cent. National Insurance contributions and 7.2 per cent. pension costs

HEALTH

Nurses

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses left permanent nursing jobs to work for agencies in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [67381]

Mr. Denham: Information on the number of nurses who left permanent nursing jobs to work for agencies is not available centrally.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacant nursing posts there are currently. [67374]

Mr. Denham: Based on various figures from various sources, there are probably in the region of 9,000 vacancies lasting three months or longer.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact of the shortage of nurses. [67372]

Mr. Denham: We recognise that staff shortages, particularly in nursing, are a major concern for National Health Service employers seeking to deliver high quality patient care. Many of the problems stem from the decision, made under the previous Administration, to cut the number of training places. This year, 16,873 student nurses are expected to start training—the highest figure for six years. If nurse training since 1992 had matched the current level, there could now be an extra 11,000 nurses available in the NHS today.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent on agency nurses in each year between 1979 and 1999. [67377]

Mr. Denham: The table contains data outlining the expenditure on nurses not employed directly by the National Health Service for the years 1987–88 to 1997–88. Information on the cost of nurses not employed directly by the NHS prior to 1987–88 is not available.

| Year | Expenditure 1997–98 prices (£) |
|---|---|
| 1997–98 | 216,338,567 |
| 1996–97 | 196,475,548 |
| 1995–96 | 176,296,636 |
| 1994–95 | 144,526,300 |
| 1993–94 | 116,764,528 |
| 1992–93 | 115,750,219 |
| 1991–92 | 121,044,540 |
| 1990–91 | 149,647,856 |
| 1189–90 | 180,869,011 |
| 1988–89 | 164,858,723 |
| 1987–88 | 142,003,654 |

Note:

The 1997–98 figure is provisional.

4. Annual accounts of district and regional health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals, 1987–88 to 1990–91.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent by the NHS in 1997 and 1998 to recruit nurses, broken down by health authority. [67376]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to tackle the shortage of nurses; and how much this action has cost, broken down by project, over the last year. [67382]

Mr. Denham: We have agreed the best, real terms pay rise for nurses for 10 years, backed with a £100 million allocation from the Modernisation Fund. On 1 February, a high profile, multi-media nurse recruitment campaign was launched. This builds on the £50 million package which was announced last September to expand part-time training places, target enrolled nurses to retrain and return to the National Health Service (2,700 over the next three years) and widen access to training and support existing NHS staff to become qualified nurses (200 staff this year and 1,000 in the following three years). In addition, an extra £4 million was allocated in 1998–99 specifically to support "return to practice" initiatives on getting former nurses back to the NHS.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of UK trained nurses who are of working age and who are currently not working as nurses. [67383]

Mr. Denham: Analysis of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting Register suggests that up to 140,000 qualified nurses, under 55 years old, are not working as nurses.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce more family friendly employment practices for nurses. [67379]

Mr. Denham: The Human Resources Framework (Health Service Circular 1998/162) is a major step forward in our drive to meet the aspirations of both staff and employers in the provision of flexible employment policies and working practices to reconcile work and family life. Work being undertaken by the Government's Women's Unit, and the development of a series of resource packs, aims to share innovation, good practice and support their local implementation.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each of the research projects (a) conducted and (b) sponsored by his Department into the health implications of genetically modified food. [72526]

Ms Jowell: None by this Department. However, colleagues in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food sponsor research on food safety generally, including genetically modified foods.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his response to the findings of the report, "A Survey of Multiple Sclerosis Provision in England 1998–99", published by the Association for Quality Care in Health. [66061]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 18 January 1999]: Under the present system it is for health authorities and general practitioners to plan the services for people in their care, taking into account the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of available resources. The move to new commissioning arrangements will bring about improvements in services for people with conditions like multiple sclerosis. Longer term agreements, reflecting dialogue between clinicians and focusing on health improvement will increase the emphasis on programmes of care that cross the traditional boundaries to meet patient's needs best.

Nurse Recruitment Hotline

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the number of inquiries to the Nursing Recruitment Hotline since its inception and (b) the number of nursing vacancies in the NHS for each month since May 1997. [69785]

Mr. Denham: As at 23 February 1999, the number of inquiries to the National Health Service telephone response line for the national nursing recruitment campaign was 36,515. Based on various figures from various sources, there are probably in the region of 9,000 vacancies lasting three months or longer.

Nurses (Herefordshire)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the current number of fully-trained nurses in hospitals in Herefordshire. [70741]

Mr. Denham: There are currently (as of 10 February 1999) 360 trained nurses in post in Herefordshire Acute Hospitals, and 18 vacancies. In Herefordshire Community Hospitals there are currently 48 funded posts and 3 vacancies.

Primary Care Groups (Derbyshire)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many chief executives of primary health care groups have been appointed in South Derbyshire and North Derbyshire; [71434]

(2) what is the annual cost to South Derbyshire and North Derbyshire Health Authorities of employing the chief executives for the primary health care groups in their area. [71436]

Mr. Denham: Within North and Southern Derbyshire health authorities there are a total of ten primary care groups. Each of these will have a chief executive whose salary will be approved by the Health Authority's Remuneration Committee.

To date, seven chief executives have been appointed. National guidance gave a framework for salaries ranging between £34,000–50,000.

All these costs will be met within the funds released by the closure of the general practitioner fundholding scheme.

Winter Pressures

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much extra money was provided to the NHS in the Mersey region in connection with the 1998 winter pressures; and how and where it was spent. [71306]

Mr. Denham: £12.2 million was made available from winter pressure funds and management cost savings to the National Health Service in the Merseyside and Cheshire area (within the former Mersey Regional Health Authority boundary) to help cope with winter pressures. The tables show the purposes for which and the health authorities to whom it was allocated.

| Purpose of allocation | £000 |
|---|---|
| Avoiding inappropriate admissions | 780 |
| Improved hospital care of emergencies | 3,820 |
| Intensive care | 700 |
| Facilitating hospital discharge | 2,860 |
| Community care | 2,250 |
| Maintaining elective activity | 1,280 |
| Other | 530 |

| Health authority allocation | £000 |
|---|---|
| Liverpool | 2,740 |
| North Cheshire | 1,400 |
| Sefton | 1,260 |
| South Cheshire | 2,220 |
| St. Helens and Knowsley | 1,530 |
| Wirral | 3,070 |

Patients (Nationality)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records the NHS maintains of the nationality of patients. [71095]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service does not routinely maintain records of the nationality of patients.

AIDS

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the amounts of funding provided, by each authority area, for AIDS support for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; [72308]

(2) if he will make a statement on the allocation of the AIDS support grant for 1999–2000. [72309]

Ms Jowell: The level of AIDS Support Grant to local authorities for 1999–2000 will be £15.5 million (an increase of almost 12 per cent. on 1998–99) and the planning figures for 2000–01 and 2001–02 are £16 million and £16.5 million respectively. We expect to announce the 1999–2000 AIDS Support Grant allocations to local authorities shortly.

Information on the amounts of funding provided, by each authority area, for AIDS Support Grant for 1997–98 and 1998–99 has been placed in the Library.

Schizophrenia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated as to how many people discharged from hospital following a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses and subsequently taken by the police under the Mental Health Act 1983 to hospital have been refused admission in the last year for which figures are available. [72580]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not available centrally. However, the Department has commissioned the Royal College of Psychiatrists' Research Unit to co-ordinate a programme of research into the use of the Mental Health Act 1983. The research will consider in detail variations in use, assessment and the decision-making process, and analysis of existing data sets. Interim reports will be made available to the expert group undertaking the first phase of the review into mental health legislation. The final reports are due to be made available to the Department on 31 December 1999.

Carers

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to establish a national register of carers for the elderly; [72150]

(2) what guidance his Department has issued on recommended procedures for ensuring a high standard of care when employing a carer for an elderly relative; [72151]

(3) what vetting procedures and guidelines his Department recommends are required with regard to the employment of carers for the elderly. [72152]

Mr. Hutton: In 1993 the Social Services Inspectorate published "Developing Quality Standards for Home Support Services" which was sent to all social services authorities and made available to the independent sector.

The Social Services White Paper, "Modernising Social Services", included a commitment to introducing a regulatory framework for domiciliary care for the first time. This framework will include legally enforceable standards for registered domiciliary care providers and included in this will be procedures for the vetting and recruitment of care staff.

The White Paper also included proposals to establish the General Social Care Council. The purpose of the Council is to increase the protection of all service users, their carers and the general public. It will have a registration function based on the successful completion of approved training. The first task of the new Council will be to draw up enforceable codes of conduct and practice for all social care staff.

The General Social Care Council will draw up a code of practice for employers that will set out the need for employers to have sound recruitment practices to prevent unsuitable people from entering the workforce. This code will be enforced through the registration and inspection of services.

Caesarean Sections

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many caesarean sections took place in each of the last five years in England; and what they were in each year as a percentage of all deliveries. [72540]

Mr. Hutton: Information about the percentage of deliveries by caesarean section in England over the last 5 years is contained in the table.

| Year | Estimated number of caesarean sections | Percentage of deliveries by caesarean section |
|---|---|---|
| 1992–93 | 86,200 | 13.8 |
| 1993–94 | 93,000 | 15.0 |
| 1994–95 | 93,500 | 15.5 |
| 1995–96 | 94,800 | 16 |
| 1996–97 | 101,000 | 17 |

Diesel Engine Emissions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on health of a reduction in the use of diesel engines in urban areas. [71110]

Ms Jowell: Diesel engines are a major source of particles, particularly in urban areas and especially when air quality is poor. Particles have serious effects on health. The Report on the "Quantification of Health Effects of Air Pollution in the United Kingdom" published in 1998 by the Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants (COMEAP) estimated that up to 8,100 people who are already very ill have their deaths brought forward each year in urban Great Britain as a result of exposure to particles and that they are also responsible for up to 10,500 admissions to hospital for respiratory conditions. A proportion of these will be the result of exposure to particles from motor vehicles and from diesel. The measures set out in the review of the United Kingdom National Air Quality Strategy published last month, including the agreement in Europe for tighter limits on vehicle emissions and improved fuel quality under the Auto Oil programme, will lead to reductions in levels of particles in the UK.

The relative merits of petrol-driven cars and light vehicles over diesel equivalents in urban areas was discussed at a meeting of COMEAP on 19 February and a full statement on this subject will be issued by the Committee shortly. In arriving at a conclusion, the Committee was unable to take account of the indirect effects of vehicle-generated air pollutants on health, such as climate change; it is also based on current knowledge and recognises that future technological improvements may mean the position will need to be reassessed at some future date. Nevertheless, it concluded that because of the damage to health from particles, at the present time petrol vehicles would be preferred to diesel where the majority of a vehicles' journeys take place in urban areas.

Internet Connections

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the costs to (a) the Government, (b) hospitals and GPs' surgeries and (c) local authorities, of connections to the Internet for hospitals and GPs' surgeries to date; [71987]

(2) which companies have carried out connections to the Internet for (a) hospitals and (b) GPs' surgeries free of installation charges; how many connections have been made in each case; and if he will publish the terms under which such connections have been made; [71991]

(3) how many and what percentage of (a) hospitals and (b) GPs' surgeries have been connected to the Internet free of installation charge to date; [71989]

(4) what steps he is taking to monitor the terms under which free connections to the Internet for hospitals and GPs' surgeries are being made; and if he will make a statement; [71992]

(5) what is the average (a) capital and [illegible]ual running cost per link to the Internet for (i) hosp[illegible]and (ii) GPs' surgeries; and if he will estimate the range within which such costs fall. [71986]

Ms Jowell: Direct connection to the Internet by hospitals and general practitioners' surgeries is a matter for individual agreement between the National Health Service user and the Internet service provider. No information is collected or held centrally on the number of capital and running costs of such links.

A secure route to the Internet is available for hospitals and GPs' surgeries through the NHS's own intranet, NHSnet, and the additional cost of this service is between £340 and £400 a year for each NHS organisation. The costs of these connections are met by the individual NHS user organisations.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many times he has met representatives of BT to discuss Internet connections to hospitals and GPs' surgeries; [71988]

(2) what representations he has received from (a) BT, (b) other service providers, (c) hospitals and GPs' surgeries and (d) local authorities on Internet connections. [71990]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met representatives of British Telecom to discuss Internet connections to hospitals and general practitioners' surgeries, nor has he received representations from BT, other service providers, hospitals and GPs' surgeries or local authorities on Internet connections.

Mental Health Services

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will (a) list the (i) number of working groups currently considering a national framework for mental health services and (ii) the names of those serving on each group and (b) state how many members of the (1) Black and (2) other ethnic minority communities are on each group. [72283]

Mr. Hutton: There were eight sub-groups contributing to the development of the National Service Framework for Mental Health. A list of the individuals is in the table. Individual members were not asked about their ethnic or cultural background, but they reflect a wide range of interests, experience and expertise, including those from a black and minority ethnic group perspective.

Mr. Hutton: The twelve members of the expert group undertaking the first phase of the review of the Mental Health Act 1983 were appointed on the basis of their expertise in key areas rather than because they represent particular organisations. However, one expert group member is African.

Showa Denko

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the NHS purchases drugs from Showa Denko. [72695]

Ms Jowell: We are not aware of the National Health Service purchasing any drugs from Showa Denko.

Eosinophilia Myalgia Syndrome

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of the alleged linkage of L-tryptophan to Eosinophilia Myalgia Syndrome; [72702]

(2) how many Eosinophilia Myalgia Syndrome sufferers there are in the UK; and if he will estimate the number who contracted it from L-tryptophan; [72686]

(3) what information he has collated on genetically modified L-tryptophan. [72685]

Ms Jowell: There is no system of mandatory notification in the United Kingdom of cases of Eosinophilia Myalgia Syndrome (EMS) and no central register. Cases of EMS are thought to occur only in association with exposure to L-tryptophan. There were 11 possible cases reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines by 1991, and there have been 7 possible cases subsequent to the reintroduction of Optimax in 1994, although a causal relationship for these cases has not been established. Several of the cases do not meet the internationally agreed definition of Eosinophilia Myalgia Syndrome. It is not known how many of these patients continue to have symptoms: several of the patients recovered completely after stopping their medicine.

EMS was first recognised as a condition in late-1989. There was extensive investigation into the association between EMS and L-tryptophan by the Medicines Control Agency at that time and the issue was considered in detail by the Committee on Safety of Medicines. It is considered likely that the reported cases of EMS were caused by an impurity or contaminant in L-tryptophan made by a single manufacturer in Japan.

The assessment then and subsequently included review of the worldwide published literature, examination of data submitted by the manufacturers of L-tryptophan and involved liaison with other regulatory authorities in Europe and the USA. In addition, there has been continuing evaluation of individual cases of adverse reactions reported in the United Kingdom under the Yellow Card scheme and via a monitoring scheme operated by the Marketing Authorisation Holder.

L-tryptophan is a simple chemical which cannot be modified genetically. As for all medicines made using biotechnology methods, all the steps taken in the manufacturing process are carefully controlled and have to comply with the specifications stipulated in the marketing authorisation (licence) for the product. All the relevant information is made available by the manufacturers and assessed by the Medicines Control Agency at the time of submission of an application for marketing authorisation and may be subject to ongoing site inspections.

Chronic Illnesses

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 20 most prevalent chronic illnesses in terms of numbers of known sufferers [72718]

Mr. Hutton: Hospital episode statistics record diagnostic information for those people admitted to hospital. Information is recorded using the international classification of diseases (ICD10). There is no category in this classification for "chronic illnesses".

Hip Replacements

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average age of people receiving hip replacement operations. [72716]

Mr. Hutton: In 1997–98 the average age was 68.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the claims that SV40 virus is linked to Mesothelioma; and what estimates his Department has made of the future number of Mesothelioma sufferers. [72710]

Ms Jowell: This matter has been carefully considered by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), the Government's independent expert advisory committee. Concern about the possible impact of Simian Virus 40 on the human population was raised in the early 1960s. SV40 was found in some inactivated polio vaccines produced in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Since the discovery of SV40 in 1960 it has been stipulated that all viruses in addition to poliovirus in inactivated polio vaccine (IPV), should be inactivated. When live oral polio vaccine (OPV) became available in 1962, it also had to be free of all known viruses (other than the three polio viruses the vaccine protects against). All the relevant samples of OPV in the UK repository, going back to 1966, have been checked by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control and no infectious SV40 virus was detected. Currently used vaccines are rigorously checked to ensure their safety and efficacy and are free of SV40.

Although SV40 has been isolated from some human tumours, there is no evidence that SV40 virus is causing the tumours. Research studies in people who received SV40 contaminated IPV have found no increase in cancers when compared with people who did not receive contaminated IPV. The JCVI agreed with the conclusions of these studies.

Professor Julian Peto and colleagues have recently completed epidemiological research which was published in the British Journal of Cancer this year. They estimated that the number of men dying from mesothelioma in Western Europe will almost double over the next 20 years from 5,000 in 1998 to about 9,000 in 2018. For Britain, the predicted annual deaths from mesothelioma in years 2015–19 is 1,750, almost twice the current rate. This is around 6 per cent. of the current 30,000 lung cancer deaths annually. Mesothelioma rates are a quantitative indicator of the population's past exposure—mainly occupational—to asbestos.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds there are per 1,000 of the population in (a) Cumbria and (b) England. [72689]

Mr. Denham: The most recent available data are for the financial year 1997–98. In that year the average daily number of available beds per 1,000 of the population in (a) Cumbria was 4.32 and (b) England was 3.93.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Cash and Running Costs Limits

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what changes he proposes to make to his Department's cash limits and running costs for 1998–99. [71118]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class X, Vote 1 will be increased by £468,000 from £885,816,000 to £886,284,000.

This is to enable the Tate Gallery to use the proceeds of £1,900,000 from the sale of its store at Acton to finance the remaining conversion works at their new store at Southwark and the relocation of library and archive facilities to Millbank; to provide for increases in provision of £97,000 for the Public Lending Right to maintain the rate per loan at 2.07 pence; £215,000 for works on occupied Royal Palaces and state monuments in line with end year flexibility as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 131–36; £80,000 to English Heritage and £135,000 to the Royal Parks for the costs associated with public consultation on a memorial garden for the late Diana, Princess of Wales; £23,000 to the Library and Information Commission for the cost of movement of transfer values for staff into the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme; £120,000 and £450,000 in gross running costs for the transfer of provisions for refunds of VAT on contracted out services from net receipts to Appropriations in Aid; to provide for a reimbursement of £189,000 on payments made to the Inland Revenue for assets accepted in lieu of tax; to provide for a transfer of £15,000 from the Inland Revenue for services provided by the Museums and Galleries Commission on pre-eminent quality testing and to provide for a reduction of £97,000 in the requirement for the Department's contribution to the Council of Europe's Audiovisual Eureka in Brussels and the European Audiovisual Observatory in Strasbourg.

The increases will be offset by transfers, savings or charged to the Reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Internet (Public Libraries)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport at what cost to (a) the Government, (b) libraries and (c) local authorities, connections to the Internet for public libraries have been made. [72083]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The Government have pledged £70 million of National Lottery funding to train public library staff and create digitised material which will support the development of the Public Libraries Network. In addition, £6 million of pump-priming investment in the network infrastructure is being provided over two years (1998–99 and 1999–2000) through the DCMS/Wolfson Challenge Fund. Information on the costs incurred by libraries and local authorities is not held centrally.

Speedway

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about the broadcasting of speedway events. [73114]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received three representations on this subject since May 1997.

Turner Collection of Scientific Manuscripts

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the whereabouts of the Turner Collection of scientific manuscripts. [73115]

Mr. Chris Smith: Following Keele University's sale of the Turner collection, the exact present location of the collection is unknown. The disposal raises important issues about the future operation of the export licence system, which I am now considering.

Centre for Young Musicians

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about the future funding of the Centre for Young Musicians; and if he will make a statement. [73113]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received several representations, each from the Centre for Young Musicians, regarding future funding. Government funding for the Centre is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Talk Radio

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take steps to enable Talk Radio to become a member of the European Broadcasting Union. [73246]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is entirely a matter for the European Broadcasting Union.

National Minimum Wage (Tourism Industry)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received regarding the effect of the national minimum wage on the tourism industry. [71614]

Janet Anderson: I have received representations on this subject from a number of companies and associations in the tourism, hospitality and leisure industry. I understand the Low Pay Commission (LPC) had a good and productive dialogue with many representatives of the tourism industry. This is reflected in the recommendations the LPC made. All the industry's major representative organisations were included in the recent consultation exercise about the draft regulations which will implement the National Minimum Wage.

Brit Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those Ministers in his Department who were present at the recent Brit Awards in an official capacity, indicating the organisation acting as their sponsor or host. [73495]

Mr. Chris Smith: My hon. Friend the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting and I attended as guests of the British Phonographic Industry.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many planning applications for the sale of school playing fields have (a) been considered and (b) been objected to by the Sports Council since 1 January. [70980]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Since 1 January 1999 the English Sports Council has considered 26 planning applications in respect of school playing fields and objected in 6 cases.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Complaints and Discipline Department)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate for each of the last four years for which figures are available the principal items of expenditure from the total annual budget of the Complaints and Discipline Department of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and how many officers and staff were employed and at what salary grades. [69656]

Mr. Ingram: The main expenditure for the Complaints and Discipline Department of the Royal Ulster Constabulary is on staff costs. Other expenditure would include accommodation and supplies e.g. Stationery, and are dealt with on a force-wide basis.

The personnel costs for both police and civilian support staff are estimated as follows:

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1997–98 | 4.5 |
| 1998–99 | 4.8 |

Note:
Costs for the previous two years are not readily available.

The personnel costs include salaries, allowances and ERNI.

The numbers and grades of officers and support staff are as follows:

(X) Also covers B Department
Figures for the civilian staff complement are not readily available.
Includes officers temporarily seconded to assist with particular investigations.

Action for Community Employment

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Action for Community Employment worker posts are attached to pre-school playgroups in Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement on future funding for ACE workers employed by pre-school playgroups. [71489]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 23 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your question about pre-school playgroups supported through the Action for Community Employment (ACE) programme.

At 31 December 1998, the latest date for which figures are available, 118 ACE schemes were delivering programmes for children aged under 5, the majority of which were playgroups. The number of ACE participants directly involved with these schemes was 444.

The Minister, Mr. McFall, has set up a dedicated team of officials drawn from the Training and Employment Agency, the Department of Health and Social Services and the Department of Education. The team is undertaking a survey of the contribution which existing schemes currently make to their local communities.

The team is also providing advice and assistance to ACE schemes which decide to make the transition to New Deal and the replacement for ACE, Worktrain. ACE schemes are being encouraged to become involved in the delivery of these new programmes so that their expertise is not lost and they can continue to serve the community. Approximately one third of ACE schemes are already members of the consortia which are delivering New Deal.

I hope that you find this information useful.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the items sold by her Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if she will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if she will make a statement. [70417]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information is not readily available in the format requested (by item). The following information was available from the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments, with the exception of The Department of Education for Northern Ireland who could answer the question only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People (Access)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what directions she has given to her officials in the Road Service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland to comply with best practice with regard to the needs of disabled people in the implementation of pedestrianisation in Belfast; [70723]

(2) what steps she is taking to ensure that the standards with regard to vehicular access for disabled people to the centre of Belfast match those recommended by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions; [70721]

(3) what representations she has received from the Disabled Drivers Association regarding the proposals for pedestrianisation of parts of central Belfast; and what plans she has to meet representatives of the association. [70722]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. S. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 18 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your 3 recently tabled Parliamentary Questions about the Department's proposals to restrict vehicular access to Belfast city centre.

First, you asked what steps the Secretary of State is taking to ensure that the standards with regard to vehicular access for disabled people to the centre of Belfast match those recommended by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). Whilst the DETR has not published standards with regard to vehicular access, guidelines are contained in its Local Transport Note 1/87, "Getting the Right Balance". I can confirm that the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has taken these guidelines into account when formulating its proposals for Belfast city centre.

Secondly, you asked what directions the Secretary of State has given to Roads Service officials to comply with the best practice with regard to the needs of disabled people in implementing the Department's proposals for restricting vehicular access to the city centre. The Secretary of State has not given any directions to officials on this matter. However, 2 Departmental Ministers were involved in the consultations between the Department and groups representing the disabled prior to the formal publication of the proposals.

Thirdly, you asked what representations the Secretary of State has received from The Disabled Drivers' Association regarding the Department's proposals and what plans she has to meet representatives of the Association. The Disabled Drivers' Association wrote to the Secretary of State on 13 January 1999 asking her to examine the Department's proposals and to meet representatives of the Association to discuss the matter. In her reply, the Secretary of State advised that she was aware of the Department's proposals and indicated that the forthcoming public inquiry (to be held on 23 February 1999) will provide an ideal opportunity for all interested parties to air their views about the Department's proposals. The Secretary of State has no plans to meet representatives of the Association.

I trust the above information is helpful.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 1, if she will list the expenditure not included in her answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if she will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71029]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

Pedestrianisation (Belfast)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many objections her Department has received to the proposed pedestrianisation of parts of Belfast; from whom they have been received; and what are the main grounds for objection put forward by each objector; [71552]

(2) what instructions she has given her officials in the Roads Service of the Department of the Environment in respect of requests for meetings from organisations of disabled people to discuss the access needs of disabled people in the implementation of pedestrianisation in Belfast. [71554]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 22 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your two recently tabled Parliamentary Questions about the Department's proposals to restrict vehicular access to Belfast city centre.

First, you asked what instructions the Secretary of State has given to officials in Roads Service in respect of requests for meetings from organisations representing disabled people to discuss the access needs of disabled people in implementing the Department's proposals. The Secretary of State has not given any such instructions. In the 3-year period prior to publication of the Department's proposals Departmental officials held a number of meetings with organisations representing disabled people in an endeavour to reach agreement. The Minister, Lord Dubs, and his predecessor each attended one of these meetings.

Secondly, you asked the Secretary of State how many objections her Department has received to the Department's proposals; who they have been received from; and what are the main grounds for objection put forward by each objector. The Department published its Notice of Intention to make the proposed legislation restricting vehicular access to Belfast city centre on 17 June 1998, allowing 28 days for objections and other representations. During the prescribed period 31 objections and 6 letters containing general comments were received. Since then a further 43 representations have been submitted. The objections have been received from a wide range of organisations and individuals, including political representatives. The main ground for objection is that the Department's proposed legislation does not include an exemption to permit Orange Badge holders to drive into and park in the streets within the pedestrian priority area. Other grounds for objection are that:

taxis will not be allowed access to the city centre;

the proposed seating and shelter provision for disabled people within the pedestrian priority area is inadequate; other modes of access to the city centre do not exist;

parking spaces have not been set aside for the exclusive use of Shopmobility Belfast users;

the distance between the proposed disabled parking bays and the shops is too great;

an alternative 2-tier Orange Badge system is required to cater for the needs of people who are disabled and those who are more profoundly disabled; an overall review of the Orange Badge system is required.

I trust the above information is helpful.

New Deal

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many New Deal places have been offered in Northern Ireland, broken down by industry; and how many have been taken up in each month to date. [71412]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Malcolm Moss, dated 23 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training & Employment Agency to reply to your question on New Deal.

The latest information available on the numbers of Employment Option vacancies offered by employers and placements, broken down by industry, are shown in the attached table. Out of the total of 1,749 vacancies 784 have been filled and decisions are awaited from employers on 1,800 submissions. (A submission is the referral of one New Deal participant for one vacancy. New Deal participants are often submitted for more than one vacancy).

In addition, 1,668 New Deal participants had moved into unsubsidised jobs.

Information on the uptake of Employment Option vacancies by sector each month is not currently available. A new computer system is being installed which will make this information more readily available.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if all Departments are Year 2000 compliant; and if she will make a statement on the progress of the Year 2000 bug-busters in Northern Ireland. [71529]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the quarterly statements made in the House by the President of the Council. These statements cover the whole of the United Kingdom. The President of the Council is due to make a further statement in March to update the House on progress towards compliance. Information on the compliance situation in each department is laid before the House each quarter and is published on the internet.

The take up of Year 2000 bug buster training by small and medium sized companies in Northern Ireland has, since its launch on 16 October 1998, been extremely reassuring and compares very favourably with participation levels in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Year 2000 bug-busters have successfully completed their training; and how many are currently employed to tackle the problem in Northern Ireland. [71544]

Mr. Paul Murphy: At 15 February 1999, 883 employees of Northern Ireland companies had successfully completed bug buster training with a further 293 due to complete training by the end of February 1999. There are 6 accredited providers appointed to deliver the Government's bug buster programme Northern Ireland. Approximately 65 local companies are offering solutions to Year 2000 problems.

Computer Science Students

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students are studying for computer science degrees in Northern Ireland colleges; and how many of these are studying (a) business information systems and (b) programming; and how many computer science degrees have been awarded in the past five years. [71560]

Mr. McFall: Students enrolled on first degree and postgraduate courses in Computer Science at Northern Ireland institutions 1997–98:

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will publish for the week ended Saturday 13 February the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups; [72551]

(2) if she will publish for the week ended Saturday 13 February the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups. [72550]

Mr. Ingram: During the period 7 February to 13 February, there were 5 shooting incidents and 4 bombing incidents. The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during this period are as illustrated below:

| | By Loyalist | By Republican |
|---|---|---|
| Assaults | 7 | 1 |
| Shootings | 5 | 0 |
| Total | 12 | 1 |

Notes:
1. Figures may be subject to minor amendment in the light of further information becoming available.
2. The bombings cannot as yet be attributed to any grouping.
3. All 5 shooting incidents relate in this instance to paramilitary-style attacks (as illustrated in the table).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electronic Transactions

10. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his progress in developing a modernised commercial regime for electronic transactions. [71606]

Mr. Wills: The Government are committed to developing the UK as the best place in the world for trading electronically and to helping many more small businesses exploit the opportunities of electronic commerce, with the goal of tripling the number of SMEs wired up to the digital market place from 350,000 to 1 million by 2002. The White Paper "Our Competitive Future: Building the Knowledge Drive Economy" set out a wide range of actions to help achieve these goals. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be publishing an implementation plan for the White Paper shortly.

Social Chapter

11. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate his Department has made of the annual cost of the social chapter's (i) parental leave directive, (ii) works councils' directive and (iii) part time workers' directive to British business. [71607]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Impact assessments for all these measures have been presented to Parliament. European Works Councils were estimated to cost £18 million per year. Measures to implement the Parental Leave Directive are estimated to cost £36 million per year. The costs of the Part Time Work Directive are likely to be small. We expect the benefits of all these and other social partnership measures to far outweigh any costs by combating unregulated absenteeism. For example, survey evidence from the CBI suggests that the annual cost of sick absence in the UK could be as much as £25 billion.

Insolvency

12. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce measures to ensure that companies with strong potential for long-term growth are not forced into insolvency because of short-term difficulties. [71608]

Mr. Byers: I have recently set up a review to consider existing procedures for business rescues and what more can be done to enable fundamentally sound business to survive short-term difficulties. It will report by the end of July.

21. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for helping entrepreneurs whose businesses fail through no fault of their own. [71619]

Dr. Howells: As announced in the Competitiveness White Paper, officials are considering whether insolvency law (and particularly bankruptcy law) and practice inhibit enterprise. An initial report will be made to Ministers by the end of April 1999, which will consider what changes might be made to current law and practice.

Science and Engineering

13. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for encouraging young people to enter careers in science and engineering. [71610]

Mr. Battle: The Government have developed and supported a wide range of initiatives:

The Public Understanding of Science, Engineering and Technology programme, to raise general awareness of these subjects.

A unit dedicated to Promoting SET for Women.

I recently announced £1.5 million support for the promotion of engineering, with £425,000 p.a. allocated to Quinco, the engineering community's new five year campaign.

We continue to support SETNET which aims to ensure that information on promotional schemes for school children to consider careers in science, engineering and mathematics is accessible to teachers and potential industrial sponsors.

Employment Relations Bill

14. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the impact on small businesses of the measures included in the Employment Relations Bill; and if he will make a statement. [71611]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Businesses of all sizes will benefit from the measures in the Bill. Decent minimum standards protect responsible employers from being undercut by less responsible employers. The culture of partnership we are encouraging should raise employee commitment and thus promote greater staff retention, reduced absenteeism and greater productivity.

Offshore Wind Power

15. Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the prospects for offshore wind power generation. [71612]

Mr. Battle: I launched a consultation paper on incorporating offshore wind energy into future non-fossil fuel obligation arrangements at the British Wind Energy Association's conference in Cardiff on 2 September 1998. The responses which have been received are being assessed by my officials. Meanwhile, the Crown Estate have announced the arrangements they have made with developers to undertake wind speed measurements on five potential offshore windfarm sites. I expect to launch a consultation on future new and renewable energy policy shortly.

Transco

16. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what response he has made to the Ofgas report into anti-competitive practices by Transco; and what measures he proposes to assist and protect public gas transporters. [71613]

Mr. Battle: This report is a matter for the Director General of Gas Supply, who has since made and announced an Enforcement Order on Transco. The Competition Act 1998 will from next year provide tough new powers for the investigation and prohibition of anti-competitive agreements and abuse of market power, exercisable by the sectoral regulators (including the DGGS) concurrently with the Director General of Fair Trading.

The Government have also conducted a review of utility regulation the main conclusions of which were set out in our response to consultation, "A Fair Deal for Consumers: Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation", published in July 1998. We are committed to legislating on utility reform as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

Sports Viewing Rights

17. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the ownership of sports viewing rights. [71615]

Dr. Howells: The sale of broadcasting rights is one way in which sport can generate the income that it needs in order both to publicise and encourage participation in sport and to secure finances to help improve facilities.

Assisted Area Status (Lancaster)

19. Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of Lancaster's application for assisted area status. [71617]

Mr. Wills: The Government are considering carefully the needs of all areas, including Lancaster, under the current review of the Assisted Areas.

Parental Leave Directive

20. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the costs to employers of the administration of the parental leave directive. [71618]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We have published our estimate of the costs to employers of parental leave in the Regulatory Impact Assessment for the Employment Relations Bill. We will be consulting on the details of the parental leave scheme in the draft regulations which we will publish before the Summer. We aim to keep employers' administrative costs to a minimum and will make a further assessment of these when the details are settled.

Business Regulation

22. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what deregulation or better regulations his Department plans to help businesses compete more effectively with those of other nations. [71620]

Dr. Howells: The Competitiveness White Paper in December set out 75 commitments to help British business compete more effectively. Specific regulatory measures include:

an effective modern competition framework;

removal of obstacles that stand in the way of electronic commerce; reform of telecommunications regulation; and seeking the removal of remaining barriers on trade in future international trade negotiations.

Dubelle Foundation

23. Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being taken to investigate the activities of the Dubelle Foundation. [71621]

Dr. Howells: The Department of Trade and Industry does not comment on the affairs of an individual company in relation to possible investigations.

National Minimum Wage

24. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the minimum wage on the competitiveness of British industry; and if he will make a statement. [71622]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The introduction of the national minimum wage will enable companies to compete on the basis of the quality of the goods and services they provide not just on price based on low pay. The minimum wage will help to improve productivity. It will create a better rewarded and more committed workforce, which will encourage investment in training, reduce staff turnover and help raise productivity.

33. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for monitoring compliance with the national minimum wage. [71631]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Inland Revenue officers will be responsible for ensuring compliance with the national minimum wage and that work will be monitored by means of a service level agreement with my Department. More generally, we have asked the Low Pay Commission to monitor and evaluate the introduction and impact of the national minimum wage.

Trade Liberalisation

25. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what approach he intends to take in pursuing international trade liberalisation. [71623]

Mr. Wilson: The Government seek actively to work with the EU and with the UK's major trading partners, through such mechanisms as the Transatlantic Economic Partnership and the Asia-Europe meeting, to encourage the reduction of barriers to trade in overseas markets. In particular, the Government share the European Union's support for a comprehensive new Round of trade liberalisation negotiations to be launched at the World Trade Organisation's next Ministerial meeting, to be held in Seattle, USA in November-December this year. A comprehensive Round offers the best chance of ensuring real gains for all participants, including developing countries.

Libya (Sanctions)

26. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with representatives of the British Libyan Interest Group to discuss the effects on trade between Britain and Libya of economic sanctions. [71624]

Mr. Wilson: I have not met representatives of the British Libyan Business Group. However, DTI Officials recently met the BLBG Secretariat to listen to their views and will continue with that dialogue. Officials keep me fully informed.

Genetic Material (Patenting)

27. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out his responsibilities in respect of issues relating to patenting of genetic material. [71625]

Mr. Battle: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has responsibility for the Patents Act 1977 and associated Rules, and for making any amendments to this legislation which, for example, may be required to implement the European Directive (98/44/EC) on patents for biotechnological inventions. This legislation is administered by the Comptroller General of Patents, Designs and Trade Marks who has responsibility for granting patents under the criteria specified in this legislation. Rights granted can be challenged before the courts.

Competitiveness White Paper

28. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for the implementation of the measures proposed in the Competitiveness White Paper in the areas of new technology. [71626]

Mr. Battle: The Government have appointed an Implementation Manager, as promised in paragraph 5.10 of the Competitiveness White Paper. We will publish the Implementation Plan for the commitments including developing new technologies we gave in the Competitiveness White Paper shortly.

Manufacturing (West Midlands)

29. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to improve competitiveness in manufacturing in the west midlands. [71627]

Mr. Battle: The Government's support to help improve the competitiveness of West Midlands manufacturing companies is extensive, focused mainly through the 10 regional Business Link partnerships. The West Midlands Regional Supply Office also provides specialist help in linking purchasers with suppliers and supply chain development with a particular focus on a number of industrial sectors.

Specific initiatives to improve manufacturing performance in the West Midlands include:

The World Class Supplier—Accelerate Project. This programme is designed to improve the competitiveness of automotive component manufacturers and is supported by many of the region's major manufacturing companies. The project aims to assist over 3,000 SMEs through establishing 40 networks with the aim of safeguarding 26,000 jobs and levering £10.3 million investment.

The West Midlands Manufacturing Challenge is helping companies improve by offering a free analysis of their position undertaken by a manufacturing specialist who identifies areas for improvement. To date it has assisted over 750 companies and aims to support 2,000 by the end of this year. One firm which used the programme reduced delivery times by 3 weeks and another increased productivity by 50 per cent.

Car Purchasing (EU)

30. Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken to make it easier for United Kingdom consumers to buy cars from elsewhere in the EU. [71628]

Dr. Howells: The Department seeks to ensure that all infringements of EC competition law which restrict imports of cars into the UK are vigorously pursued by the European Commission. We welcome the establishment of manufacturers' hotlines which will make it easier for consumers to purchase cars elsewhere in the EU. We have placed a list of the numbers for use of UK consumers in the House of Commons Library.

EU Structural Funds

31. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about reform of EU structural funds. [71629]

Mr. Wills: The discussions between Member States and the Commission on the reform of the Structural and Cohesion Funds will continue until the March 1999 deadline set by the Cardiff Council last June.

The UK is negotiating for an outcome that is fair and affordable to all future and existing Member States, particularly the UK.

Unsolicited E-mail

32. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he intends to take to tackle the costs to business of unsolicited e-mail known as spam. [71630]

Mr. Wills: The Government are aware that unsolicited email is a potentially difficult area for business. There are several industry initiatives aimed at tackling this problem. Most Internet Service Providers (ISPs) have installed systems aimed at combating unsolicited email, and the London Internet Exchange (LINX) is producing a set of best practice guidelines for ISPs on this subject. In addition the Direct Marketing Association is working on an email preference scheme, to operate in a similar way to the conventional mail preference service but with global rather than national coverage. Such initiatives will be aided by the draft Electronic Commerce Directive which would require all unsolicited commercial communications by email to be indicated as such. The Government will monitor the effectiveness of these approaches and consider whether any further action is required in the light of their impact on the problem.

Rover (Longbridge)

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the contribution of the partnership between unions and management at Rover Longbridge to the continuation of motor car production at the plant. [71616]

Mr. Byers: I have been most impressed by the positive response of the Unions and the management at Rover to the challenges now facing the company. There is no doubt that the agreement reached last year to introduce flexible working patterns and to reduce costs has played a significant role in helping to secure the Mini investment.

Superphenix Fast Reactor

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if British Energy has retained the shareholding inherited from the Central Electricity Generating Board in the holding company NERSA in respect of ownership of the Superphenix fast reactor in France. [69603]

Mr. Battle: The shareholding was retained in Magnox Electric plc at the time of British Energy's privatisation, and is now held by BNFL.

Energy Charges

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to remove the right of (a) water, (b) electricity and (c) gas suppliers to make standing charges payable by (i) pensioner households and (ii) households receiving income support; and if he will make a statement. [71054]

Mr. Battle: Clearly it is essential that special care should be taken to ensure that vulnerable groups of customers have access to reliable, affordable, water and energy supplies. That is why this Government have vigorously taken forward work on modernising the framework for utility regulation. The Government's review of water charging in England and Wales raised concerns about the effect of high standing charges on low income, low water users such as pensioners living alone. The Government will consider further how these effects can best be mitigated within the new framework proposed in the Water Industry Bill now before Parliament. Also, we are encouraging the regulator for gas and electricity to review the Social Dimension in his Action Plan, with a view to determining what further initiatives can provide effective help to the fuel poor.

Standing charges have been the usual means of utility companies making a charge for the fixed costs of providing a service which do not vary according to the level of usage. Such costs generally include meter reading, accounting and billing, maintenance of infrastructure, and provision of emergency services, although there is no requirement for these costs to be recovered by means of a standing charge.

With the spread of competition in the gas and electricity markets, many customers already have a choice of who should supply them with these important utility services.

Soon, that choice will extend to all such customers. Some gas and electricity suppliers recognise that standing charges are either not popular or appropriate for every individual customer, and have decided to offer different terms which exclude any standing charge. Customers will be able to choose what is best for their own particular needs.

It is our objective that all groups of customers should benefit from increasing efficiency by receiving quality service at the best possible prices.

Military Exports (Bahrain)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences have been granted since 1 May 1997 for the export of arms to Bahrain; and if he will provide details of the arms covered by each licence and the declared purpose. [71301]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 2 May 1997 and 29 January 1999, 45 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 26 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Bahrain of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the Table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

| PL5006 | 3 | 0 |
| PL5030 | 1 | 0 |

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Details of the military equipment for which licences are granted will be given in the Government's annual report on strategic export controls for the relevant period.

As regards the additional information requested about the stated end use, this could be compiled only by examining the original case papers for each of the licences concerned, and this together with any inquiries necessary under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, would entail disproportionate cost.

In addition, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Bahrain under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Military Exports (Indonesia)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list (a) the licence applications for military exports to Indonesia which have been refused in the past five years and (b) the reasons for the refusals; [71923]

(2) if he will list the export licence applications for military exports to Indonesia which have been refused in the past five years. [72017]

Dr. Howells: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. In the calendar years 1994 to 1998, 21 applications for Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and one application for an Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL) were refused covering the export to consignees or end-users in Indonesia of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Applications for individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the application is included in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

Number of applications for SIELs refused in each calendar year covering the export to Indonesia of goods on the Military List

| Total number of applications | 5 | 3 | 4 | 8 | 1 |

The single application for an OIEL was refused in 1996, and covered goods with the ratings ML4, ML11, ML14 and ML24.

This information does not cover any applications for Media OIELs that may have been refused during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

The decisions to refuse these applications were taken in accordance with the criteria applied at the relevant times.

Renewable Energy

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department's review of renewable energy will be published. [72300]

Mr. Battle: I plan to publish a paper on my review of renewable energy policy shortly which will analyse the status and prospects for renewables and present policies for developing renewables further.

Milk

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of raw milk in Great Britain; and if he will make it his policy (a) to publish that report and (b) to undertake a public consultation on its recommendations before he makes a decision on them. [72310]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) is required to deliver its report on the supply of raw milk in Great Britain to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by 26 February 1999. The Secretary of State is required to publish all monopoly reports, and will announce what action he intends to take, if any, when he publishes the report.

Hallmarks

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if articles of the 10 carat gold standard hallmarked in Ireland may be placed on the market in the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made of the consequences for British competitiveness of such marketing. [72589]

Dr. Howells: Following the amendments to the Hallmarking Act 1973 which came into effect on 1 January, the United Kingdom, in accordance with Article 30 of the EC Treaty and European case law concerning the free circulation of goods, has permitted articles of precious metal hallmarked in Ireland to be marketed here without further hallmarking by a UK assay office. I can confirm that this would include articles of 10 carat gold.

Manufacturers can have articles of gold hallmarked by UK Assay Offices to standards of fineness including 9, 14, 18 and 22 carat (375, 585, 750 and 916.6 parts per thousand respectively) as well as new "pure" standards of 990 and 999 parts per thousand. Given that there is no reason to believe that UK consumers are likely to prefer the 10 carat standard over any of the standards of fineness available here, I do not believe that UK manufactures are likely to be placed at a competitive disadvantage as a result. It is generally agreed that a proliferation of standards is not in the interests of consumers and the United Kingdom seeks to give a lead in this matter by not introducing further standards into the UK hallmarking system. However, DTI will look very carefully at the position in the light of future experience.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if all the European Economic Area states have amended their laws to permit articles hallmarked in the United Kingdom to be sold in their states; and if he will make a statement. [72590]

Dr. Howells: Only those EEA States which have a mandatory requirement for hallmarking under their law and have in the past required imported articles to be re-hallmarked in their country before being placed on the market they would need to amend their laws to permit articles hallmarked in the United Kingdom to be placed on their markets without further marking. The DTI is obtaining up-to-date information from the Commission about which countries have now made the necessary changes to their legislation. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available and will place a copy of the reply in the Libraries of the House.

In any event, it should be noted that the legal position concerning the free circulation of goods in the EU Member States is set out in Article 30 of the EC Treaty and European caselaw. Notwithstanding whether a Member State has amended its national legislation the Treaty and caselaw will have effect and under these provisions I understand that UK hallmarks should be accepted throughout the European Community. The other EEA States (i.e. Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein) are governed by the EEA Agreement (1992).

Electronic Publishing Industry

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the report sponsored by his Department on the electronic publishing industry. [73940]

Mr. Wills: The Report, The Advance of Electronic Publishing, which examines the barriers and drivers of the electronic publishing and content industries, was published today. Copies are available in the Library of the House. It can also be accessed on the Internet at www.isi.gov.uk/new/advance.html.

European Airlines (State Aids)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on state aids to European airlines; and if he will make a statement. [71595]

Dr. Howells: State aid to the airline industry is a matter for my right hon. Friend of the Minister of Transport.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who has overall responsibility for State aid policy, has not received any representations.

I understand that my right hon. Friend the Minister of Transport has received 6 representations in all; 2 from members of the public, 3 from MPs on behalf of constituents and one direct from the hon. Member herself.

Benefit Payments (Post Offices)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices have had the new Benefits Agency/POCL system installed to date; how many remain to have the system installed; how many have had the system installed in each week throughout the period of installation to date; and how many will have the system installed in each remaining week of the implementation period. [73031]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office tell me that at present 204 post offices have been automated and are paying Child Benefit by Payment Card as part of a limited trial of the new Benefits Agency/Post Office Counters system; 18,610 post offices remain to have the system installed; the system was installed in the 204 post offices in the trial in 1997 at the rate of 20 offices per week; and national roll-out of the system to every post office, which will only commence once final acceptance trials have been completed, is scheduled to take place at a rate of some 300 post offices a week.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to reach a decision regarding the future of the PFR Reprocessing Plant at Dounreay; what consultation he will carry out prior to reaching that decision; when he expects to receive options studies from the UK Atomic Energy Authority with regard to this decision; if he will place a copy of the option studies in the Library; when he plans to announce his decision; and if he will make a statement. [72334]

Mr. Battle: A comprehensive review by UKAEA of the options for handling PFR and other fuels awaiting treatment at Dounreay is nearing completion. I await UKAEA's formal proposals which will be subject to full and careful scrutiny in due course. I also intend to consult relevant Government advisory bodies and allow sufficient time to give proper consideration to the issues before making a decision. In accordance with the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, the relevant facts and analysis of the facts important in framing the Government's decision on this issue will be published when we announce our decision.

Au Pairs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what extent the cost of board, lodging and similar incidentals is taken into account in the regulation of the terms and conditions applying to the employment of au pairs; and if he will make a statement. [71976]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

Under the Immigration Rules, overseas nationals living in the United Kingdom as au pairs live as part of the family. The recommended weekly allowance is kept under review.

Vaux Brewery

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had about the future of Vaux Brewery; and if he will make a statement. [73260]

Mr. Byers: I am aware of the importance that many in the region attach to the future of the Vaux brewery in Sunderland. I am also aware of reports that Vaux is looking to sell its brewing interests. I am conscious of my hon. Friend's personal interest in this issue and would be happy to meet him to discuss his concerns.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Early Education (Three-year-olds)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 1 February 1999, Official Report, column 483, what plans he has to measure the present participation rate of three-year-olds in early education in Southampton in order to measure progress with his target to double that rate. [71980]

Ms Hodge: The Government's target is to double the proportion of three-year-old children in free early education places to 66 per cent. across England by 2001–02; a target participation rate will be set for each Local Education Authority which will enable us to meet that national target. The present participation rate and plans for expansion will be described in each Local Education Authority area's Early Years Development and Child Care Plan.

Education Expenditure (West Sussex)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the effects of the 1999–2000 revenue support grant on the provision of education services in West Sussex. [73129]

Ms Estelle Morris: The revenue support grant settlement for 1999–2000 for West Sussex includes an underlying increase of £15.5 million or 6.1 per cent. in the education standard spending assessment, after allowing for local authority changes of function. This is sufficient to meet the pressures faced by education services in West Sussex if, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has urged it to do, the County Council uses all of the cash increase in the education SSA to support education, especially schools.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the provision of capital funding for schools in West Sussex in 1999–2000. [73130]

Ms Estelle Morris: An allocation of £3,329,969 was announced through the Annual Capital Guideline on 16 December 1998.

Announcements on the Class Size and New Deal for Schools allocations for 1999–2000 will be made shortly.

Grammar Schools (Ballots)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if additional funding will be made available to local education authorities to cover the administration costs of running ballots on the future of grammar schools; and if he will make a statement. [73188]

Ms Estelle Morris: The responsibility for administering ballots on the future admission arrangements of grammar schools will not fall to local authorities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has appointed Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Limited to act as the ballot administration company. The Department for Education and Employment will reimburse the costs incurred by the company in providing this service.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Consultation Papers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responses his Department received in respect of the consultation papers on (a) the Control of Unscrupulous Immigration Advisers, (b) the Review of Appeals and (c) the White Paper, Fairer, Faster and Firmer, indicating how many were (i) in favour and (ii) opposed to (1) a single tier of immigration appeals, (2) a presumption in favour of hearings on the papers rather than oral hearings for appeals, (3) the introduction of a charge towards the cost of an appeal against a refusal of an application for entry clearance as a visitor, (4) including the legal profession in a statutory regulation scheme for immigration advisers, (5) cash payments rather than benefits in kind being made to asylum seekers, (6) the dispersal of asylum seekers to accommodation throughout the United Kingdom without their consent, (7) magistrates hearing bail applications, (8) administrative removal for overstayers rather than deportation and a right of appeal and (9) the removal of a right of appeal against a decision which does not result in the applicant having to leave the United Kingdom. [70383]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will write to the hon. Member.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71273]

Mr. Straw: We have already done much work to ensure that the Department's policies meet the needs of disabled people and that we comply with our legal requirements. We shall continue to do so, not only by complying fully with new duties in the Disability Discrimination Act but by aiming to exceed them where appropriate.

We have promulgated within the Department the guidance "Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment" which the Cabinet Office issued to all Government Departments in November 1998, and which was signed jointly by the Home Secretary, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Minister for Women. All ministerial submissions on new policy initiatives or significant policy changes are now assessed for any adverse impact not only on disabled people but on any minority or disadvantaged group.

Different areas of the Home Office have different requirements. Two examples of good practice where specialist provision is available are the Immigration and Nationality Department Public Inquiry Office at Croydon, which includes interview booths being wheelchair accessible and fitted with induction loops, the provision of hand rails, special access arrangements for callers with disability, low level pay phones and adapted toilet facilities.

The Passport Agency provides, among other things, staff trained in sign language, textphones, the Typetalk service provided by BT and the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, literature in alternative formats and Braille stickers to identify a passport.

My hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth), the Under-Secretary, chairs a Working Party on Electoral Procedures which considers disability access to electoral services of all kinds.

Consolidated and enhanced guidance which includes advice on national access standards will be issued shortly to all returning officers.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71509]

Mr. Straw: A list of the reviews, task forces and advisory groups established by my Department since 1 May 1997 are listed in the table. Terms of reference have been given where a report date cannot be specified.

| Immigration and Nationality Directorate Complaints Audit Committee | | | To satisfy itself as to the effectiveness of the procedures for investigating complaints and to draw the Immigration and Nationality Department's attention to any weaknesses, and to report to the Secretary of State |

I have also established a number of Non-Departmental Public Bodies to which I have not referred, but which provide regular advice and information to my Department. Details of these can be found in "Public Bodies 1998". Details of costs incurred are generally subsumed within the Departmental running budget and are not held centrally. This could, therefore, be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Christmas Day Trading

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to prevent or control the opening of shops on Christmas Day. [72606]

Mr. George Howarth: Shops may choose their opening hours, except on Sundays if they are over 280 square metres in area. The restrictions affect Christmas Day but only when it falls on a Sunday. We have no plans to change the present law.

Female Prisoner Accommodation

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all accommodation for female prisoners and females on remand showing (a) location, (b) nominal capacity, (c) actual number of inmates on 1 January (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999 and (d) the forecast number of inmates on 1 January (x) 2000 and (y) 2001. [72306]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested for the female prison population and certified normal accommodation (CAN or uncrowded female prison capacity) is for the last day of the month and is given for the appropriate month ends in the table. The available information on the projected female prison population by alternative scenarios is given in table 1 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 1/99 "Projections of long term trends in the prison population to 2006" published on 20 January 1999, a copy of which is in the Library, and on the Home Office Web Site: http://www. homeoffice. gov. uk/rds/index. htm.

The table listing average projected populations gives figures for the central scenario, higher and lower scenarios. No projections are available by individual Prison Service establishment.

Prisoner Releases (Home Detention Curfew)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice has been issued to prison governors concerning the arrangements for probation supervision of persons released on home detention curfew. [72357]

Mr. George Howarth: Prison governors have been advised that, where a prisoner is due to be subject to supervision by the Probation Service upon his or her discharge from custody, supervision will commence on the date that the prisoner is placed on home detention curfew. The duration of the supervision is unaffected by the home detention curfew, as the date that the supervision ends is set at the three-quarter point of sentence less the period spent on home detention curfew, in accordance with the requirements of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what home circumstances reports have been requested in respect of potential release on home detention curfew where prisoners have convictions for (a) sexual offences, (b) arson and (c) offences of violence. [72369]

Mr. George Howarth: No prisoner can be placed on home detention curfew without a home circumstances report from the Probation Service, whatever the prisoner's convictions. The Prison Service may also ask the Probation Service to comment on other issues of concern as appropriate, for instance due to the nature of the offence. The only cases where it is not necessary to obtain a home circumstances report are where it is apparent at an early stage in the assessment process that the prisoner is clearly unsuitable for home detention curfew.

No offender required to register under Part I of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 will be assessed for home detention curfew other than in exceptional circumstances. If the offender is considered for home detention curfew, a rigorous enhanced risk assessment will be undertaken, including consideration of the proposed curfew address.

In addition, such an offender would be placed on home detention curfew only following authorisation by the Director General of the Prison Service.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the prisoners released on home detention curfew on or after 28 January 1999 are subject to supervision. [72352]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when it has been collated.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prison risk assessment on inmates eligible for release on home detention curfew is carried out prior to a request for a probation home circumstances report; and if any advice has been given to clarify procedures. [72358]

Mr. George Howarth: Advice on the risk assessment of inmates eligible for the home detention curfew scheme is given in Prison Service Order 6700, a copy of which is in the Library. Before comments from the home probation service are requested, (a) the prisoner will have been asked to provide details of his or her home address, (b) information on the prisoner's suitability will have been sought from a member of prison staff in daily contact with the prisoner, and (c) the member of staff conducting the initial risk assessment will have reviewed the documentation available to determine whether there are any particular issues on which the Probation Service should be invited to comment.

If it is decided from this review of the documentation that the prisoner is clearly unsuitable for home detention curfew and that information from the home probation service would add nothing to the assessment, the reviewing officer can forward the assessment to the governor for confirmation of this decision without the involvement of the home probation service. The decision not to seek input from the home probation service must be confirmed by the governor.

Prisoner Discharges (Mental Hospitals)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate (a) the number of prisoners discharged to the care of mental hospitals in each of the last three calendar years, (b) the average length of each discharge and (c) the numbers of prisoners discharged to each receiving hospital; and if he will make a statement on the financial arrangements between prisons and hospitals for such discharges. [72609]

Mr. George Howarth: The latest relevant available information relates to numbers of prisoners transferred to hospitals as restricted patients and is as follows:

Table 1: Numbers of prisoners transferred to the care of mental hospitals as restricted patients in years 1995 to 1997

| | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Transferred from prison to hospital after sentence[1] | 249 | 264 | 251 |
| Transferred from prison to hospital while unsentenced or untried[2] | 473 | 481 | 494 |
| All transfers from Prison Service establishments | 722 | 745 | 745 |

[1] Transfers from Prison Service establishments under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 with restrictions under section 49
[2] Transfers under section 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

These figures do not include transfers to hospital where the prisoners are not admitted as a restricted patient or where prisoners are immediately admitted to hospital following discharge from prison at the completion of sentence.

Discharges of prisoners to hospital are for an indeterminate amount of time. This means that it is not possible to calculate the average length of each discharge. It is, however, possible to tabulate at the end of each year the number of transferred prisoners who have been held in hospital for different periods of time.

Table 2: Restricted patients detained in hospital at the end of the year who had been originally transferred from Prison Service establishments by period spent in hospital

| | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Unsentenced or untried | | | |
| Under 3 months | 111 | 91 | 99 |
| 3 to 6 months | 34 | 25 | 42 |
| over 6 months | 39 | 53 | 89 |
| All sentenced or untried | 184 | 169 | 230 |
| Patients transferred after sentence | | | |
| Under 2 years | 176 | 161 | 152 |
| Over 2 to 5 years | 94 | 97 | 94 |
| Over 5 to 10 years | 55 | 56 | 66 |
| Over 10 to 20 years | 44 | 57 | 66 |
| Over 20 years | 11 | 11 | 11 |
| All patients transferred after sentence | 380 | 382 | 389 |
| All patients detained who were originally transferred from Prison Service establishments | 564 | 551 | 619 |

The table relating to the numbers of prisoners discharged to each receiving hospital in the year 1995 to 1997 is lengthy so a copy has been placed in the library.

The Prison Service meets the costs of a prisoner's health care inside prison walls itself. That would include any assessment or treatment for mental disorder. If a prisoner needs to be admitted to an outside hospital for treatment for mental disorder, either while in prison custody or on release, the costs of such treatment would be borne by the NHS.

Au Pairs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions on hours of work apply to au pairs; and if he will make a statement. [71969]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Immigration Rules, overseas nationals living in the United Kingdom as au pairs may help in the home for no more than five hours a day, with two days off per week, in return for a reasonable allowance.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue updated guidance on the employment and status of au pairs. [71968]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no plans at present to change the immigration status of overseas nationals living in the United Kingdom as au pairs or to change the guidance.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the immigration status of au pairs; and if he will make a statement. [71967]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Immigration Rules, an au pair must be unmarried, aged between 17 and 27 and without dependants, and come from one of the designated countries. They may stay in the United Kingdom for up to two years, living as part of an English speaking family and learning the language. They may help in the home for more than five hours a day, with two days off per week, in return for a reasonable allowance.

Offenders (Mental Illness)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those people convicted of crimes in England and Wales in (a) 1998 and (b) each of the previous two years had previously been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses. [72290]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is not available centrally. National Statistics about convicted offenders do not categorise in terms of the past mental and psychological problems of offenders.

Information is available on offenders who are admitted to hospital under the provisions of mental health legislation. In 1997, the number of mentally disordered offenders admitted to hospital under a court order, or by direction of the Home Secretary restricting their discharge, was 1,074. Most of these admissions related to patients with a diagnosis of mental illness or mental illness with another disorder (986 in total). Schizophrenia psychosis is a form of mental illness, but the statistics do not record diagnoses to this level of detail.

Reconviction rates for restricted patients are available. The reconviction rate for standard list offences within two years of discharge for patients discharged between 1977 and 1993 was 12 per cent., with the rate for those with a diagnosis of mental illness being 7 per cent. Standard list offences consist of all indictable offences and some of the more serious summary offences.

Sexual Abuse Offences

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that police statistics on sexual abuse offences identify the nature of the relationship between victim and offender. [72050]

Mr. Boateng: At present, the data are not collected centrally. However, work is in hand through the National Strategy on Police Information Systems, which will allow offender-victim relationships to be examined centrally in due course. Ad hoc information has previously been collected and published in publications such as "Victims of violent crime recorded by the police England and Wales 1990–1994" by Lorraine Watson, which was published in July 1996; a copy is in the Library.

Severe Personality Disorder

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to include (a) paedophiles and (b) hebephiles within his proposed criteria for assessing people with severe personality disorder; and if he will make a statement. [73151]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made it clear in his statement to the House on 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 601–13, that a consultation document will be published later in the spring on the options for the new framework within which indeterminate reviewable detention powers for dangerous severely personality disordered individuals will operate. The powers will be available whether or not someone was before the courts for an offence. Sexual deviancy alone does not constitute a mental disorder. However, assessments of both dangerousness and severe personality disorder would certainly take account of previous known criminal behaviour whether of a paedophiliac, hebephiliac or any other nature.

Deportation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors he takes into account when considering whether a prisoner released from a life sentence will be deported. [72936]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration Rules require that, before a decision to deport is taken, full account must be taken of all relevant factors. These are listed in paragraph 364 of HC 395 Statement of Changes in Immigration Rules and include age; length of residence; strength of connections with the United Kingdom; personal history; domestic circumstances; compassionate factors; previous criminal record and the nature of any offence of which the person has been convicted and any representations received on the person's behalf. These factors would be taken into account in deciding whether a person released from a life sentence should be deported.

Police (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in the Chelmsford Division of the Essex Constabulary on (a) 31 March 1997, (b) 31 March 1998 and (c) the latest available date. [72889]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested, which has been provided by the Chief Constable of the Essex Police, is set out in the table:

Essex police—Chelmsford 'C' division

| | Number of police officers[1] |
|---|---|
| 31 March 1997 | 209 |
| 31 March 1998 | 208 |
| 31 January 1999[2] | 207 |

[2] Latest available

Police (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in the Essex Constabulary on (a) 31 March 1997, (b) 31 March 1998 and (c) the latest available date. [72890]

Mr. Boateng: The information is set out in the table:

Essex Police

| | Number of police officers |
|---|---|
| 31 March 1997 | 2,961 |
| 31 March 1998 | 2,929 |
| 31 March 1999~ | 2,925 |

~ Full-time equivalents.

Firearms (Licensing)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary plans to reinspect the police forces covered in the 1993 study into the administration of firearms licensing to ensure that the deficiencies noted in the conclusions of that study have been rectified; and if he will make a statement; [72335]

(2) what action has been taken to implement the conclusions of the 1993 report of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary into the administration of firearms licensing; and if he will make a statement. [72336]

Mr. Boateng: Since 1993, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) have reported on 10 of the 12 firearms licensing departments covered by the 1993 report on the administration of firearms licensing. Forces were generally praised for their adoption of the recommendations of the report and for other measures to improve the functioning of the licensing system. Other forces have also been inspected on this matter as part of the regular inspection process. All inspection reports are published.

Following the tragic events at Dunblane and subsequent legislation, HMIC have concluded that recommendations in the 1993 report have been largely overtaken by events. HMIC do not therefore intend to pursue the recommendations of the report further but will continue to look at all aspects of police administration, including firearms licensing, during their inspections. The Government have made clear that they intend to keep the issue of firearms controls under close scrutiny to see what further measures, if any, might be needed to protect public safety.

British Horseracing Board

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the British Horseracing Board; and what was discussed. [73131]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Secretary last met the Chairman and Chief Executive of the British Horseracing Board on 28 October. I last met them on 23 February. We discussed a range of issues relating to the future financing of the horseracing industry in this country.

The Tote

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the Tote. [73132]

Mr. George Howarth: Not at present. The Steering Group which is conducting a Review of the Tote has not yet reported to Ministers.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

East Timor

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the aid projects that her Department is currently supporting in East Timor, indicating those projects with a gender dimension. [72662]

Clare Short: We are supporting the preparation of a programme to develop the capacity of civil society in East Timor. Particular care is being taken by the design team to address gender issues. We are also supporting the Water and Sanitation Programme of the International Committee of the Red Cross in East Timor. All quality humanitarian and development projects must take account of the gender dimension. £300,000 has been made available in the current financial year.

DFID are watching closely the political developments in East Timor and is considering what further assistance we can provide to the East Timorese people.

Al-Shifa Factory

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received concerning reports that the US bombing of the Al-Shifa factory destroyed drug supplies. [72661]

Clare Short: Correspondence dated 11 November and 1 December was received on this subject from a Member in another place. This was copied widely and reported in the media. Subsequent representations have been received from Members of this House and from members of the public including a letter dated 29 December 1998 from the acting Head of Mission of the Sudan Embassy in London.

North Korea

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to alleviate the famine in North Korea. [73281]

Clare Short: Details of the Government's humanitarian assistance to North Korea were set out in my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck), 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 340.

Democracy-building Projects

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the democracy-building projects her Department has supported in (a) Uganda and (b) Indonesia. [73279]

Clare Short: (a) Uganda: since May 1997 we have supported the following democracy-building projects in Uganda:

| Project | Amount committed £ |
|---|---|
| Support to Parliament (ongoing) | 312,375 |
| Support to Local Government Elections (ongoing) | 250,000 |
| Support to Women Politicians (ongoing-preparatory) | 40,000 |
| Election Observers (finished) | 40,000 |

There are also some small democracy building elements to our portfolio of projects in Uganda aimed at supporting the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action for Women, to which we have committed £500,000.

(b) Indonesia: I recently approved a contribution of up to £1 million to support a free, fair and inclusive election in Indonesia. Most of this will be channelled through the United Nations Development Programme and will support voter education, electoral administration and election monitoring. We are also supporting a three-year project implemented by the International Labour Organisation to develop workers capacity to organise and administer trade unions, and to represent workers interests effectively in consultations with employers and government.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72670]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The normal management of the Scottish Office's wide-ranging responsibilities ensures a corporate approach to crime reduction. This is demonstrated in the report "A Safer Scotland: Tackling Crime and its Causes", published on 9 February 1999, which brings together the Scottish Office's policies on health, education, employment, housing criminal justice and other matters which have an impact on community safety and crime reduction. Internal Scottish office Groups on Crime Prevention and other relevant policies ensure that the opportunities for criminal acts are minimised.

From 1 July this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes are proposed to the cash limit for Class XIII Vote 10, Forestry Commission, for 1998–99. [73923]

Mr. Dewar: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XIII Vote 10 for 1998–99 will be increased by £3,900,000 from £47,425,000 to £51,325,000.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of total (a) central Government and (b) local authority expenditure on education for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97, (iv) 1997–98, (v) 1998–99 and (vi) 1999–2000, expressed in 1997–98 prices. [72757]

Mrs. Liddell: The information is as follows:

£ million (1997–98 prices)

| | Central government | Local authority |
|---|---|---|
| 1994–95 | 1,308 | 2,481 |
| 1995–96 | 1,311 | 2,423 |
| 1996–97 | 1,316 | 2,364 |
| 1997–98 | 1,277 | 2,319 |
| 1998–99 | 1,290 | 2,368 |
| 1999–2000 | 1,375 | 2,457 |

As from July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Radioactive Waste

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the update of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment to their 1995 report on the Potential Health Effects and Possible Sources of Radioactive Particles Found in the Vicinity of the Dounreay Nuclear Establishment; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [72333]

Mr. Galbraith: My right hon. Friend expects to receive advice from the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment shortly. The Committee itself publishes the advice it gives to the Government. A copy of the Committee's Report will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Legal Aid

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of legal aid granted in Scottish civil appeals to the House of Lords in each year of the last 10 years. [72555]

Mr. McLeish: The information is set out in the table.

Total amount of legal aid paid in House of Lords cases

| Year | £ |
|---|---|
| 1988–89 | 36,238 |
| 1989–90 | 8,217 |
| 1990–91 | 47,127 |
| 1991–92 | 43,607 |
| 1992–93 | 44,553 |
| 1993–94 | 55,069 |
| 1994–95 | 30,073 |
| 1995–96 | 6,136 |
| 1996–97 | 33,000 |
| 1997–98 | 109,000 |

From 1 July 1999 legal aid in Scotland will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fatal Accident Inquiries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the (a) production of and (b) charging for fatal accident inquiry transcripts. [73189]

Mr. Dewar: The arrangements are prescribed in the Fatal Accident and Sudden Deaths Inquiry Rules, 1977. A transcript of the evidence in a Fatal Accident Inquiry will be extended only if the Sheriff so directs or if requested within a period of three months of the Sheriff's Determination by any party who has an interest in the Inquiry.

Where the Sheriff has requested a transcript of the evidence the cost of transcription is met by the Scottish Court Service and interested parties may obtain copies at a cost of £1 per page for the first 10 pages and 30p per page thereafter. Where an interested party has requested a transcript they are responsible for the full cost of transcription.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Leukaemia

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year between 1974 and the latest available date, the incidence of leukaemia ICD(9) 204 to 208 in children aged 0 to four years in Dumfries and Galloway (i) in total, (ii) by electoral ward and (iii) by sex; and how many cases would have been predicted in Dumfries and Galloway during that period on the basis of national rates for these diseases. [72329]

Mr. Galbraith: The table shows numbers of incident cases of leukaemia in children aged 0–4 years resident in the Dumfries and Galloway Health Board area in each of the years 1974–96, and the numbers of cases which would be expected on the basis of incidence rates for Scotland as a whole. Because of the small number of cases overall it is not possible to provide figures broken down by electoral ward without jeopardising the confidentiality of individuals.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Observed and expected cases of leukaemia in children aged 0–4 years in the Dumfries and Galloway Health Board area in 1974–1996

| 1996 | 0 | .33 | 0 | .14 |
| Total | 6 | 8.38 | 5 | 5.76 |

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of infant leukaemia (ICD(9)) 204 to 208 in children aged 0 to one year) (a) were reported in Scotland in each six-month period from 1974 to the latest available date and (b) would have been predicted during that period on the basis of average rates; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for discrepancies between the two. [72331]

Mr. Galbraith: The table sets out the information sought. Geographical variations and time trends in the incidence of cancer are monitored continuously by the Scottish Cancer Intelligence Unit (SCIU). Trends in the incidence of infant and childhood leukaemia in Scotland and other European countries are being evaluated in the European Childhood Leukaemia-Lymphoma Incidence Study (ECLIS), which is co-ordinated by the International Agency for Research on Cancer, and in which SCIU is participating. As will be seen, the total number of observed cases over the period is consistent with the number expected.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Brain Cancer

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year between 1974 and the latest available date, the incidence of brain cancer ICD(9) 191 in children aged 0 to four years in Dumfries and Galloway (i) in total, (ii) by electoral ward and (iii) by sex; and how many cases would have been predicted in Dumfries and Galloway during that period on the basis of national rates for these diseases. [72330]

Mr. Galbraith: The tables show numbers of incident cases of malignant tumours of the brain in children aged 0–4 years resident in the Dumfries and Galloway Health Board area in each of the years 1974–96, and the number of cases which would be expected on the basis of incidence rates for Scotland as a whole. ## ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Safety Strategy

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to launch the road safety targets and strategy for the period up to 2010. [69408]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is now intended to publish the road safety strategy and targets later this year, in order to reflect the findings of the ongoing review of speed policy. It may be necessary to issue provisional guidance in the interim, which we are considering.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Road Safety Strategy will be announced. [71077]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 15 February 1999]: It is now intended to publish the road safety strategy and targets later this year, in order to reflect the findings of the ongoing review of speed policy. It may be necessary to issue provisional guidance in the interim, which we are considering.

House Building

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of (a) the number of new house building starts to be made in 1999–2000 by (i) private developers, (ii) registered social landlords and (iii) local authorities and (b) the number of existing empty homes to be brought back into use in 1999–2000 by (x) private owners, (y) registered social landlords and (z) local authorities. [72318]

Mr. Raynsford: The estimate of the number of existing empty local authority homes in England that local authorities propose to bring back into use in 1999–2000 is in preparation.

The Department does not forecast new housebuilding starts, nor the number of empty dwellings that will be brought back into use for other tenures.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72751]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Government Departments work closely on policy development and in those areas where my Department is involved it supports fully the Home Office's aim to reduce crime and the fear of crime. Our research programme monitors and evaluates the effects of new policy and other initiatives.

Correspondence

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton of 12 November 1998. [73108]

Ms Armstrong: I wrote to the hon. Member on 18 February 1999, in reply to his letter of 14 January. As the hon. Member is aware, the Department has no trace of his original letter of 12 November.

Regional Development Agencies

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the English regional development agencies the current estimate of (a) their total budget on a per capita basis and (b) the percentage of the budget attributable to their administrative function. [73004]

Mr. Meale: The budgets for 1999–2000 for each of the English regional development agencies will be announced shortly. The budgets for 1998–99 cover administration resources only, and are as follows. It is not meaningful to express these figures in per capita terms.

| Agency | £ |
|---|---|
| North East Regional Development Agency | 520,000 |
| Yorkshire and the Humber Regional Development Agency | 529,000 |
| North West Regional Development Agency | 327,000 |
| West Midlands Regional Development Agency | 384,000 |
| East Midlands Regional Development Agency | 406,000 |
| Eastern Regional Development Agency | 350,000 |
| South East Regional Development Agency | 461,000 |
| South West Regional Development Agency | 411,000 |
| Total | 3,388,000 |

Centre for Young Musicians

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to transfer responsibility for the Centre for Young Musicians to the Greater London authority. [73112]

Mr. Raynsford: I am considering with colleagues the future provision for the Centre for Young Musicians.

The Greater London Authority will be a strategic authority which will address London-wide issues and will, with the co-operation of the responsible statutory authorities, have the powers to co-ordinate and assist with the provision of specialist services which may need to be delivered on a London-wide basis. The Authority will have discretionary powers to pay grant to assist in the provision of such services.

We would expect the Centre for Young Musicians, which is a centre of excellence for the encouragement and training of young musicians, recruited from across the whole of London, to fall into the category of organisations which the GLA may choose to assist in this way.

London Transport

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list London Transport property (a) assets, (b) rights and (c) liabilities. [73258]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As at 31 March 1998 London Transport's assets were as follows:

| | Assets |
|---|---|
| Tunnels (including Jubilee Line Extension) | 305 kilometres |
| Railway carriages | 3,886 |
| Track | 1,093 kilometres |
| Bridges | 978 |
| Drainage Pumps | 700 |
| Underground stations | 245 |
| Escalators and lifts | 372 |
| Power stations | 2 |
| Sub-stations | 131 |
| Bus stations and stands | 63 |
| Bus shelters | 6,370 |

Note:
These figures are currently being updated for 31 March 1999.

Property held by London Regional Transport and that of any subsidiary company is held subject to the provisions of the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

Rights and liabilities attached to such property will arise from either the instruments by which that property is held or the enactments under which property was acquired for the statutory purposes of London Regional Transport or any subsidiary of London Regional Transport.

To identify and list each and every right and liability connected with property assets held by London Regional Transport would incur disproportionate cost, however, general information about the management of such property can be obtained from the London Transport Annual Report 1997–98.

Aside from property, LT has other assets and liabilities relating to staff contracts, small fixed assets and so on. Again, these could be listed only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the level of expenditure on education by local government area for each of the years (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99, expressed in real terms at 1997–98 prices. [72758]

Ms Armstrong: The requested information has been placed in the Library of the House.

The information available on education expenditure by local government area relates to expenditure by local authorities. The changes in responsibility of local education authorities, reorganisation and concomitant boundary changes, means that expenditure by local authorities on education may not be directly comparable across the years in question. In particular, net current expenditure on education in 1997–98 did not include expenditure on the under five's education which was financed by the nursery voucher scheme. This produces, for most authorities, an apparent 'trough' in expenditure in that year. In addition, the level of expenditure on education by an authority across the years will be affected by changing pupil numbers.

The all-England totals in £ million not including capital expenditure

| Year | 1997–98 prices |
|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 20,991 |
| 1996–97 | 20,811 |
| 1997–98 | 20,625 |
| 1998–99 | 21,334 |

Northern Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations have been received by his Department on the standard of service on the Northern Line of the London Underground; and if he will make a statement. [73155]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Over the last six months my Department has received a number of representations relating mainly to the standard of services on the Northern Line including 8 letters from Members of Parliament and 44 letters from the public.

Disruption on the Northern Line did increase over recent months; however when the new fleet of trains is in service, the reliability of the line should improve considerably. It is expected that a full Northern Line service will be provided completely by new trains by Autumn 1999.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to meet UK airlines prior to taking any policy decision on the future of the National Air Traffic Services. [73184]

Dr. Reid: We concluded a public consultation on our proposals for National Air Traffic Services Ltd. on 31 January 1999. The responses received are currently being analysed and we are grateful to a number of UK airlines for their detailed responses. These have provided us with a clear understanding of the thinking of NATS' main customers as we consider how best to deliver our policies for the future of NATS.

Pelican Crossings

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) adults and (b) children were (i) injured and (ii) killed on pelican crossings in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [73186]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Child/adult casualties on Pedestrian crossings [1]: GB 1988–97

Casualties

| | Child | | Adult | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Year | Killed | Injured | Killed | Injured |
| 1988 | 9 | 755 | 39 | 1,445 |
| 1989 | 7 | 689 | 39 | 1,424 |
| 1990 | 8 | 758 | 48 | 1,552 |
| 1991 | 2 | 679 | 59 | 1,274 |
| 1992 | 9 | 699 | 40 | 1,298 |
| 1993 | 6 | 659 | 48 | 1,197 |
| 1994 | 8 | 637 | 41 | 1,197 |
| 1995 | 3 | 620 | 27 | 1,140 |
| 1996 | 1 | 623 | 48 | 1,098 |
| 1997 | 6 | 610 | 32 | 1,124 |
| Total | 59 | 6,729 | 421 | 12,749 |

[1] Casualties include those on Pelican, Puffin or toucan crossings at the time of an accident, but exclude pedestrians on a refuge, central island or on zig zag markings on the approach/exit of a crossing.

Congestion Charges

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 2.7 of "Breaking the Log Jam", how many and what proportion of responses to "Developing an Integrated Transport Policy—an Invitation to Contribute", supported the view that congestion charges would be valuable and effective. [73183]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department's publication "The Government's Consultation On Developing An Integrated Transport Policy: A Report" contains a tabular analysis of the comments made by respondents on a number of demand management measures, including congestion charging and a levy on private non-residential parking. In each case a majority of those referring to those two measures were in favour. Copies of the report were placed in the Library at the time of publication, in July 1998.

Eurostar (Wheelchair Access)

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that the Eurostar Channel Tunnel rail service is more widely available to wheelchair users; [73508]

(2) when he expects provision to be increased on the Eurostar Channel Tunnel rail services for wheelchair users. [73507]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Eurostar trains were designed and built to be fully wheelchair accessible. Each train provides accommodation for two people to travel in their own wheelchairs. In the first 6 months of 1997 (the latest period for which figures are available) out of over 20,000 wheelchair spaces offered (120 spaces every day on 60 services), only 400 were taken up. Eurostar therefore have no plans to increase current levels of provision.

Heritage Notifications

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he is making in reviewing the current heritage notification arrangements in London. [73593]

Mr. Raynsford: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts and I have today issued a consultation paper proposing a number of changes in the current handling of listing building consent applications in London. Since the abolition of the Greater London Council, English Heritage has been working with the London Boroughs to build up their expertise in handling these applications. As a result, we now feel able to propose a significant reduction in the number which will in future need to be notified to English Heritage. This will enable decisions to be issued more quickly. However, certain changes, for example those to Grade I and II* buildings, will still need to be sent to English Heritage. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

This consultation is the first stage in a wider review of heritage notifications promised in the Modernising Planning policy statement by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning in January 1998 as one of a range of initiatives being taken to improve the effectiveness of local authority planning services. My officials are now talking to English Heritage about the notification arrangements outside London with a view to drawing up further consultation proposals for speeding up this aspect of the planning process.

Greater London Authority

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the transitional arrangements proposed for financing the Greater London authority and the functional bodies in 2000–01 and for financing their predecessor organisations. [73921]

Mr. Raynsford: Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, the Greater London Authority will assume its responsibilities on 3 July 2000. Special arrangements will be needed to cater for this start part way through the financial year. We shall therefore begin discussions with interested parties on the broad framework of transitional arrangements. Under these, the Secretary of State would set a budget and precept for the GLA, including the functional bodies, as if they were in existence for the full financial year 2000–01. He would receive precept income from the London Boroughs. That income, together with redistributed business rates, revenue support grant and other grants would be paid to the predecessor organisations in respect of the period up to 3 July, and to the GLA in respect of the remainder of the year. Following consideration of the broad framework, there will then be further discussions on the detailed application of the transitional arrangements.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the oral answer by the Minister for the Cabinet Office of 10 February, Official Report, column 308, on biotechnology and genetic modification of crops, what action Her Majesty's Government have taken in pressing (a) the European Commission, and (b) other EU institutions for enhanced statutory control; and if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of current (i) United Kingdom and (ii) Community legislation on those matters. [72179]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The main instrument governing the release into the environment of GMOs is the EC Directive 90–220. This is currently undergoing revision following the publication of a Commission proposal in February 1998. The proposal seeks to make a number of significant changes to the Directive such as strengthening provisions on environmental risk assessment and monitoring, streamlining some procedures, ensuring greater transparency and better labelling requirements, and providing for the consultation of EU ethics and scientific committees.

The UK is taking a leading role in negotiations in the Council on the revision, though progress depends on the priority given to the dossier by the EU Presidency. The European Parliament adopted its Opinion on the revision of the Directive on 11 February, which also proposes tougher controls on the release of GMOs.

While negotiations on the revision of Directive 90–220 continue, European Environment Ministers agreed unanimously last December to use the flexibility within the existing directive to introduce new requirements for risk assessment and monitoring, based upon new texts which are likely to form part of the revised directive. The UK already requires such risk assessments to be carried out before a consent may be granted, and the Government are currently considering how the monitoring requirements may be introduced.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the terms of reference and membership of the Cabinet Committee on food standards; and if it will consider the adequacy and content of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and of Directive 90/220 of the European Community concerning rules for the growing of genetically modified crops. [72220]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The terms of reference of the Ministerial Group on Food Safety are:

"To co-ordinate Departmental consideration of issues arising from the establishment of a Food Standards Agency and other aspects of food safety, and to make recommendations to the Ministerial Committee on Home and Social Affairs (HS)."

Its composition is:

President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Chair)

Secretary of State for Education and Employment

Minister for the Cabinet Office

Secretary of State for Scotland

Secretary of State for Health

Secretary of State for Northern Ireland

Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Secretary of State for Wales

Chief Secretary, Treasury

Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury and Chief Whip will also receive papers and may attend as necessary.

However, matters relating to biotechnology and genetic modification are discussed collectively in the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification, whose terms of reference are: "To consider issues relating to biotechnology, in particular those arising from genetic modification."

The Group's composition is:

Minister for the Cabinet Office (Chair)

Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Minister of State, Cabinet Office

Minister of State, Department of Health

Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry

Economic Secretary, Treasury

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Office

Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Scottish Office,

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Northern Ireland Office

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Trade and Industry

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Welsh Office

The Chief Scientific Adviser also attends.

The Ministerial Group will consider the adequacy and content of Directive 90–220. Consideration of the Environmental Protection Act is, however, not on the agenda.

The revision of Directive 90/220/EEC has, in addition, been considered in detail by European Scrutiny Committees in both Houses.

PRIME MINISTER

Hospitality

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines he has established for the use of No. 10 Downing street for hospitality funded by non-Government sources; and if he will list those occasions on which such hospitality has been offered since May 1997. [71160]

The Prime Minister: Ministers under this and previous Governments have been allowed—at their own or party expense—to host non-official or party receptions or functions in Downing street, as set out formally by this Government in paragraph 63 of the Ministerial Code.

Since 1 May 1997, 22 political functions and 15 charity events have been held at 10 Downing street. All have been held in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72721]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1999]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), to the right hon. Member on 24 February 1999, Official Report, columns 311–12.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will invite Lord Phillips to conduct an inquiry into the Government's handling of GM food. [72688]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 February 1999]: I am entirely satisfied that the issue of genetically modified foods is being correctly handled and therefore see no need for an inquiry.

Queen's Awards

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to carry out a review of the Queen's Awards for Export, Technological and Environmental Achievement. [73924]

The Prime Minister: On 15 December 1998, Official Report, column 460, I informed the House that there is to be a review of The Queen's Awards. His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales has been asked by Her Majesty The Queen to take charge of the review. The Prince of Wales is to chair a committee made up of business persons and senior Government officials. Their report will come to me, as it is on my recommendation that the Awards are made by The Queen. The members of the Review Committee are:

Amir Bhatia OBE, Managing Director of Casley Finance Ltd, Chairman of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board, and member of the National Lottery Charities Board.

Sir John Browne, Group Chief Executive, BP Amoco plc.

Sir John Collins, Group Chief Executive, The Vestey Group, Chairman, National Power PLC and Member of the Prime Minister's Advisory Committee for The Queen's Awards.

Sir Tom Farmer CBE, Chairman and Chief Executive, Kwik Fit Holdings plc.

Carol Galley, Co-head, Merrill Lynch Mercury Asset Management.

Graham Hawker CBE, Chief Executive, Hyder plc and Chairman of Business in the Community (Wales), Deputy Chairman of the Welsh Development Agency and Member of the Court of the Bank of England.

The Right Honourable Lord Hurd of Westwell CH CBE, Chairman, British Invisibles and Member of the Prime Minister's Advisory Committee for The Queen's Awards.

John Monks, General Secretary, Trades Union Congress.

John Rose, Chief Executive, Rolls Royce plc and a Member of the Council of The Prince's Trust.

Sir Michael Scholar KCB, Permanent Secretary, Department of Trade and Industry, and Member of the Prime Minister's Advisory Committee for The Queen's Awards.

Sir Dennis Stevenson CBE, Chairman of Pearson plc.

Sir Richard Wilson KCB, Secretary of the Cabinet and Chairman of the Prime Minister's Advisory Committee for The Queen's Awards.

The Prime Minister's Advisory Committee for The Queen's Awards assists me in advising Her Majesty The Queen on the annual making of Awards. The Government have asked that the review should take account of their wish to encourage enterprise and innovation, as set out in the Competitiveness White Paper published in December 1998. The terms of reference of the Review are as follows:

"To review the operation of The Queen's Awards Scheme; and, having regard to:

the purpose of the Awards, which is to recognise outstanding achievements of UK businesses;

the benefit of ensuring that the Awards are up to date and provide the best possible incentive for UK businesses;

the wish of the Government to encourage enterprise and innovation; and the need for assessment of achievement to be effective, economical and fair, and based as nearly as possible on objective judgment; to make recommendations."

The recommendations of the Review are to be made in time for any resulting changes to be implemented for the Awards in the year 2000.

The Review is open for consultation to trade associations, businesses and the general public until 7 April 1999. All representations to the Review Committee about the current operation and future shape of The Queen's Awards should be addressed to:

DEFENCE

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ex-service people have been diagnosed as suffering from Gulf War Syndrome to date. [64996]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There is no central record of the health of UK Gulf veterans, either for those still serving or for those who have left the Armed Forces. However, just under 3,000 of some 53,000 UK Service personnel who deployed to the Gulf in 1990–91 have so far sought a referral to the Ministry of Defence's Medical Assessment Programme (MAP), which was established in 1993 to provide as full a diagnosis as possible to veterans who are concerned about their health. A paper describing the clinical findings from the first 1,000 patients examined at the MAP was published in the British Medical Journal on 30 January this year. A copy of the paper is available in the Library of the House. The latest scientific evidence suggest that UK Gulf veterans report more illness than other comparable groups, but does not support the existence of a unique illness or syndrome.

Female Chartered Engineers

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many female chartered engineers by discipline there are in the regular element of the (a) Royal Navy, (b) Army, (c) Royal Air Force and (d) Royal Fleet Auxiliary; and what proportion they represent of the total number of chartered engineers in each service. [70706]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are 357 Chartered Engineers in the Royal Navy of whom one is female. She is a member of the Institute of British Computer Science.

There are 371 chartered Engineers recorded in the RAF of whom two are female. The specialisms of the females are civil engineering and electrical engineering.

For the Army the information is not held centrally and can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Multiple Myeloma

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 531, if further research on the incidence of multiple myeloma among nuclear test veterans will be funded; and if Dr Sue Rabbitt Roff's data will be used. [72770]

Mr. Spellar: My hon. Friend's question is opportune since I have today given my approval to the funding of a study into the incidence of multiple myeloma among nuclear test veterans of the UK's atmospheric nuclear test programme in the 1950s. The work will be undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) on lines similar to those which applied to the two earlier studies published in 1988 and 1993.

The study will be conducted under the guidance of an oversight committee whose membership will include eminent independent experts together with a representative of the MOD's Surgeon General's Department.

The NRPB will wish to consider all the available relevant data and the results of this study, which will be peer reviewed and published in a suitable scientific journal, should be available by the end of next year.

RN Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy personnel have been killed in aircraft accidents in each of the last five years. [72933]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Six Royal Navy personnel have been killed in aircraft accidents in the last six years. The details are:

1994 = 1. A Lieutenant in an off-duty private aircraft accident in Cornwall.

1995 = 2. A Lieutenant and Sub-Lieutenant in an on-duty accident in a RN Gazelle helicopter in the Wye Valley on the Welsh border.

1996 = 2. A Lt. Commander and a Chief Petty Officer (Air Engineering Artificer) in an on-duty Sea Harrier accident in Somerset.

1997 = None.

1998 = 1. A Lieutenant in an on-duty RN Lynx helicopter accident in the Singapore Straits.

No RN personnel have been killed in 1999 in aircraft accidents.

Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to set targets for the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency for the year 1999–2000. [71898]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 24 February 1999]: It is my intention to announce targets for the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency (AFPAA) before 1 April 1999, for the year 1999–2000.

Defence Site Sales

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sites have been disposed of in each of the last three years other than to the highest bidder. [72929]

Mr. Spellar: In our efforts to achieve best value for money for the sale of surplus property, it is our normal practice to accept the highest bid made for the site. However, there are occasions when the conditions attached to the highest bid cannot be accepted, or the financial standing of the bidder is assessed to be such that the bid would not be substantiated. There are also occasions when our professional judgment leads us to conclude that on balance of risk, a lower bid offers the best return to the taxpayer.

The specific information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Female Pilots (Army)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many female pilots are currently serving in the Army; and how many are in training. [72939]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are currently nine qualified female pilots serving in the Army, all but one of whom are occupying flying appointments. In addition, a further six women are currently undertaking pilot training.

REME Depot, Stirling

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the discovery of mustard gas at the REME depot in Stirling; and if he will list other toxic chemicals found on site. [72752]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The issue of the potential of Mustard Gas at the Forthside site came to light during a remediation contract which had been let by Stirling council for the removal of radioactive materials on the site. Excavation works uncovered a glass phial (now known to date from the 1940s), as well as a small quantity of Small Arms Ammunition.

Analysis of the glass phial by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) determined that it was of a type found in a gas sample kit used for instructional purposed during the last war. The phial contents were found to be water. DERA, however, could not rule out the possibility that Mustard Gas at some concentration could have been present in the phial at some stage. A second phial was found on 23 February and this will be subjected to the same analysis and review. EOD inspections are being undertaken when appropriate but the likelihood of many more discoveries is considered to be a low risk.

This concern prompted a further inspection, which has concluded that the risk of additional similar discoveries is low.

Surveys carried out at the site identified that some of the land was contaminated with heavy metals (lead and cadmium), phyto-toxic metals (copper, nickel, zinc and chromium), radioactive material (radium) from former luminising activities, and small quantities of petrol and lubricants consistent with past use of the site. A full list of chemicals detected on the site is as follows:

normal background levels of Arsenic occasional detectable levels of Mercury background to highly significant levels of Copper background to highly significant levels of Zinc background to highly significant levels of Lead traceable quantities of Nickel traceable quantities of Cadmium traceable quantities of Poly-Aromatic Hydrocarbons

184 mega becquerels of Radium.

Defence Animal Centre

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Defence Animal Centre; and what was the figure at its inception. [71901]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Animal Centre. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Squadron Leader P. C. Marks to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 25 February, 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of people currently employed by the Defence Animal Centre (DAC), and the number of people employed at its inception, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as acting Chief Executive of the DAC.

I can confirm that the DAC became a Defence Agency on 1 June 1993. The number of people employed was 224 (as at 31 March 1994), as reported in the first DAC Annual Report and Accounts. The number of people currently employed by the DAC is 190.

If you require any further information, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Defence Animal Centre published its report for the year 1998–99; and what was the cost of production of the report. [73023]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Animal Centre. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Squadron Leader P. C. Marks to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 25 February 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the publication of the Defence Animal Centre (DAC) report for 1998–99 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as acting Chief Executive of the DAC.

I can confirm that the Annual Report and Accounts has not yet been published and therefore I cannot give the cost of the publication. The report is due to be laid before Parliament before Parliament rises for the summer recess.

If you require any further information, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Army Technical Support Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Army Technical Support Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [72820]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Technical Support Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Brigadier A. D. Ball to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 25 February 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 for the Army Technical Support Agency (ATSA), as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the ATSA.

The Army Technical Support Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 were laid before Parliament on 24th November 1998. We subsequently received 1,000 copies of the Report from The Stationery Office Limited at a cost of £4,595 (VAT exempt).

I hope that you find this information helpful.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to set targets for the Army Technical Support Agency for 1999–2000. [71908]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Army Technical Support Agency, in common with other Defence Agencies, will be set Key Targets for 1999–2000 before the end of April 1999.

Royal Hospital, Haslar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to fix a date to receive a parliamentary delegation jointly with the Minister of Health, in relation to the Royal Hospital, Haslar, as requested by the hon. Member for Gosport. [73024]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The meeting has been arranged for 1700hrs on Monday 8 March 1999.

Defence Analytical Services Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will set targets for the Defence Analytical Services Agency for 1999–2000. [72816]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I aim to announce the performance targets for 1999–2000 for the Defence Analytical Services Agency to Parliament by the end of April 1999.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food and Drinks Industry (Promotion)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote an increase in (i) the total sales and (ii) exports of the British food and drinks industry. [71604]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Minister takes every opportunity to draw attention to and promote the innovativeness, high quality and safety of British produced goods in general. The Government, particularly through their export assistance agency, Food From Britain, provide on-going support to assist the British food and drinks industry to expand its export markets.

British Frozen Food Federation

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the British Frozen Food Federation; and what issues were discussed. [72728]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Neither my right hon. Friend the Minister nor his ministerial colleagues at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have yet had the opportunity to meet with the British Frozen Food Federation.

TREASURY

Pensions (Tax Reliefs)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to introduce a common system of tax reliefs for different types of pension plan as part of the stakeholder pension proposals; and if he will set out the age-related contribution limits which apply to the existing tax reliefs for pensions. [70013]

Ms Hewitt: A common system of tax reliefs for different types of pension schemes already exists. Where schemes are tax approved, contributions qualify for tax reliefs (within limits), the investment build-up is tax free, and part of the benefits may be paid as a tax free lump sum while pensions are taxable. We propose extending the same system of reliefs to stakeholder pension schemes.

The age related contribution limits that apply to the existing pensions tax reliefs are as follows:

Maximum Percentage of Earnings [1]

| Age | Personal Pensions | Retirement Annuities |
|---|---|---|
| 35 or less | 17.5 | 17.5 |
| 36–45 | 20 | 17.5 |
| 46–50 | 25 | 17.5 |
| 51–55 | 30 | 20 |
| 56–60 | 35 | 22.5 |
| 61–74 | 40 | 27.5 |

[1] In the case of personal pensions, earnings for limits purposes are capped at £87,600

ECOFIN (Brussels)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN held in Brussels on 8 February; and if he will make a statement. [70533]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor attended the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 8 February 1999.

There was a discussion of both expenditure and resources under Agenda 2000. The goal of budgetary stabilisation by 2006 was widely supported. The Presidency issued Presidency conclusions on Agenda 2000.

The Commission and the Chairman of the Economic and Finance Committee presented draft Opinions on the Stability programmes of Italy and Portugal, and the Convergence programmes of Sweden and the UK. The Council adopted the Opinion on Italy with some minor amendments. The Council also adopted the Opinions on Portugal, Sweden and the UK.

There was an orientation debate on the Broad Economic Policy Guidelines to inform the full debate scheduled provisionally for the 10 May ECOFIN.

Ministers also discussed four draft directives: the European Company Statute; the Takeovers Directive; the Winding-up of credit institutions; and the Winding-up of insurance companies directive.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list all life offices fined by (a) the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Authority, (b) the Personal Investment Authority, (c) the Financial Services Authority and (d) other statutory financial regulatory bodies since the Financial Services Act 1986 came into force, stating (i) the nature of the offence, (ii) the amount of the fine, (iii) the date it was imposed and (iv) the value of any costs awarded against the firm; [70928]

(2) if he will list all fund management firms fined by (a) the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation, (b) the Financial Services Authority and (c) other statutory financial regulatory bodies since the Financial Services Act 1986 came into force, stating (i) the nature of the offence, (ii) the amount of the fine, (iii) the date it was imposed and (iv) the value of any costs awarded against the firm. [70927]

Ms Hewitt: Details of the fines imposed on fund managers and life offices have been placed in the Library. The Financial Services Authority has no power to fine directly regulated firms.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Ms Southworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the expected reduction in total public expenditure on servicing debt for (i) those countries which have reached the completion point and (ii) all countries within, the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative for (a) 1998, (b) 1999, (c) 2000, (d) 2001 and (e) 2002. [71390]

Ms Hewitt: Only two countries have reached completion point under the HIPC initiative: Uganda and Bolivia. The IMF has not produced estimates of the expected reduction in total public expenditure on servicing debt for Uganda, or for other countries within the HIPC initiative. Their estimate of the expected reduction in total public expenditure on servicing debt for Bolivia (in $ millions) is as follows:

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will press for the inclusion of Malawi in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [71394]

Ms Hewitt: The IMF does not currently consider Malawi to be eligible for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative. However, should Malawi's debt burden become unsustainable, the UK would press strongly for Malawi to be considered for immediate HIPC relief.

Ms Southworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the policy of the new Government in Germany towards debt relief for those countries included in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [71391]

Ms Hewitt: The UK welcome the German debt initiative, which in many ways reinforces the Chancellor's Mauritius Mandate of September 1997. The UK and new German Governments share similar approaches to the issues of debt relief and development in the world's poorest countries.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Terms of Reference of the Fundamental Review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative have been agreed; and if Her Majesty's Government will seek the integration of internationally agreed poverty reduction targets in a reformed HIPC Initiative. [72193]

Ms Hewitt: The IMF have not yet set the Terms of Reference of the forthcoming HIPC Review. The UK has taken the lead in pressing for the link between debt relief and poverty reduction to be a key focus of the review, and to be looked at by an external evaluator.

Inland Revenue Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff were employed in Inland Revenue Special Compliance Offices in (a) 1990 and (b) each year since 1993; and what was the turnover of staff in each year. [71787]

Dawn Primarolo: The information for 1990 is not available from Special Compliance Office records. Special Compliance Office was formed in 1993 when Enquiry Office, Special Office and the Board's Investigation Office were integrated. Staffing figures for the previous sections are not available.

| | "Man year usage" | Leavers | Starters |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1993–94 | 501 | 30 | 33 |
| 1994–95 | 454 | 50 | 74 |
| 1995–96 | 430 | 98 | 85 |
| 1996–97 | 425 | 52 | 52 |
| 1997–98 | 423 | 98 | 94 |
| 1998–99 | [1]426 | [2]90 | [2]90 |

[1] Estimated
[2] To date

"Man year usage" does not equate to staff in post at any one time. The list includes all grades, covering investigators, accountants, managers and clerical support. "Leavers" includes people moving to different jobs in the Revenue, retirements and resignations. "Starters" are mainly recruited from the rest of the department, although we have recruited accountants and clerical staff directly into Special Compliance Office.

Euro

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government intend to take (a) to allow firms based in the UK to make VAT payments in euros and (b) to allow Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue to receive payments in euros; and if he will make a statement. [71951]

Ms Hewitt: Customs and Excise have accepted payment in euro of VAT and other taxes and duties since the introduction of the euro on 1 January 1999. Both Customs and the Inland Revenue have made the necessary internal accounting arrangements to accept euro payments by any method made available by the banks, and have set up euro accounts with the Bank of England.

House Prices

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of house price inflation since 1997 and the likely trend in 1999–2000. [72316]

Ms Hewitt: Alternative indices have shown different rates of house price inflation over the past two years, but it seems clear that real house prices have shown significant increases.

Transfer Pricing

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to publish the guidance relating to the clearance procedures and the approach of the Revenue regarding transfer pricing under the legislation brought into effect on 1 July 1998; what advice he has issued to large companies with connected subsidiaries around the world; and if he will make a statement. [72315]

Dawn Primarolo: The new transfer pricing legislation (Schedule 28AA to the Taxes Act 1988) is specifically allied to the advice on transfer pricing in the Transfer Pricing Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises and Tax Administrations published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. These Guidelines establish internationally accepted rules for transfer pricing and provide multinational taxpayers with considerable assistance in making an accurate return in relation to arrangements with affiliates around the world.

Additional guidance has been provided by the Inland Revenue in two articles in its Tax Bulletin. The first, dated October 1998, gave advice on funding arrangements and confirmed that existing clearance procedures (as described in an article in Tax Bulletin in June 1995) would continue. It also explained record-keeping requirements. The second article, dated December 1998, explained the application of the general penalty provisions in transfer pricing cases.

As announced on Budget Day last year, legislation will be introduced in the forthcoming Finance Bill to govern Advance Pricing Agreements (APAs) between taxpayers and the Inland Revenue. APAs enable taxpayers to agree in advance with the Inland Revenue how complexities in applying the arm's length principle to cross-border transactions which cannot be fully clarified by reference to the published guidance are to be clarified. Draft clauses and a draft Statement of Practice were issued for consultation on 17 December 1998.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of businesses which will be affected by the new rules on transfer pricing which were announced in the 1998 budget; and what will be the average cost per business. [70688]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The new transfer pricing legislation is designed to ensure that arm's length prices are used in calculating the tax effects of international transactions between associated businesses. It will impact on those businesses at the larger end of the spectrum of UK multinational groups and UK subsidiaries of foreign parents. It is estimated that there are between two and three thousand of these.

The average initial compliance cost per business is estimated to be in the range £11,000 to £27,000. The average recurring compliance cost is expected to be much less.

Household Statistics

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of adults who live in households where there is at least one child aged under 16 years and also at least one higher rate taxpayer. [71195]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 February 1999]: It is estimated that there will be about 1 million households amongst couples and lone parents with at least one child under 16 and at least one higher rate taxpayer in 1999–2000.

Export Guarantees Committee

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the functions of the Export Guarantees Committee, indicating the departments and agencies represented, the chairmanship and the number of times the committee has met since 1 January 1998. [71961]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Guarantees Committee (EGC) is an inter-departmental committee that considers the political, economic, financial and commercial factors that relate to markets where the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) might provide support under the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991. The Committee is chaired by the Treasury; other members come from the ECGD, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department for International Development, the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Bank of England and the Financial Services Authority.

Since 1 January 1998 the EGC has met 4 times, and conducted other business by written procedure.

Minimum Wage

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of people who will benefit financially in the first year from the introduction of a national minimum wage in (a) the Northern Region, (b) Teesside area and (c) the constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East. [72174]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Ashok Kumar, dated 25 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on the number of people who will benefit from the introduction of the national minimum wage (NMW).

The precise information you requested is unavailable. However, estimates of the proportion of people who are currently earning below the proposed NMW for (a) North East Region and (b) Teesside TEC area and (c) Middlesbrough South and East Cleveland Parliamentary Constituency are provided in the attached tables. It should be noted that the tables are based on the latest available information from the 1998 New Earnings Survey (NES) and the Labour Force Survey (LFS). It provides an historical position against 1998 values of the proposed NMW and makes no judgment on whether its introduction will have any effect on the number of jobs.

The preferred method for assessing the coverage of the proposed NMW is to present adjusted NES and LFS data for the number of employees earning less than the proposed NMW rates. This method adjusts for the fact that the NES is based on a one per cent sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff earning below the tax threshold, in particular those who work part-time. It is not possible to use this method for small areas, and information solely from the NES has therefore been provided for Teesside and Middlesbrough South and East Cleveland.

The extent of the bias in the NES data may be estimated for the North East by using the adjusted NES and LFS data for all employees. This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of full-time employees aged over 21 years earning below £3.50 could understate the true position by as much as 5 percentage points. However, it is unlikely that the occurrence of lower paid jobs is uniform across the region, and so it would be wise to treat this figure as broadly indicative rather than as a precise estimate. I am unable to provide the bias for employees aged 18 to 21 years because the sample size is too small for a reliable estimate to be produced.

EMU

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the ECOFIN agreed report on Information Requirements in Economic and Monetary Union; and if he will make a statement. [72286]

Ms Hewitt: A copy of this Report, which was endorsed at the 18 January ECOFIN, has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Child Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional cost in a full year to the Exchequer of raising both rates of child benefit by £1; and by how much the net cost to the Exchequer would be reduced if the marginal increase was taxed at 40 per cent. for (a) recipients of child benefit who are higher rate taxpayers and (b) recipients of child benefit who either live as husband or wife with a higher rate taxpayer or pay higher rate tax themselves. [71196]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 February 1999]: Estimates for the full year cost for 1999–2000 are given in the table:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Cost of raising both rates of child benefit by £1 | 600 |
| Yield from taxing all child benefit, including £1 increase, at 40 per cent. for | |
| (a) child benefit recipients who are higher rate taxpayers | 40 |
| (b) lone parents who are higher rate taxpayers or couples where there is a higher rate taxpayer | 450 |
| Reduction in net cost by taxing £1 increase in child benefit at 40 per cent. for | |
| (a) child benefit recipients who are higher rate taxpayers | less than 5 |
| (b) lone parents who are higher rate taxpayers or couples where there is a higher rate taxpayer | 35 |

British Rebate (EU)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards the British rebate in the EU budget negotiations. [72908]

Ms Hewitt: Despite the abatement, the UK remains a significantly larger net contributor to the EC than a number of other member states whose capacity to pay is greater. In these circumstances weakening the abatement would be unfair. The UK has made clear in the current Agenda 2000 negotiations that it would not accept any such unfair outcome.

Financial Services and Markets Bill

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the scope of regulated activities under the draft Financial Services and Markets Bill. [73881]

Ms Hewitt: The Financial Services and Markets Bill provides for the scope of regulated activities to be set out in secondary legislation. This will make it easier to respond to developments in the financial services industry.

The Treasury has today issued a consultation document with draft orders under the Bill. The deadline for initial comments is 30 April. We are consulting on this legislation well in advance so that we have the longest possible time to get it right.

Working Families Tax Credit

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria will be used to determine the eligibility of grandparents for the working families tax credit child care subsidy. [63199]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 January 1999]: The child care tax credit within the Working Families Tax Credit will help with up to 70 per cent. of the parent's costs of eligible child care. The same criteria for eligibility will be applied to all child care providers. Eligible providers will include registered childminders, registered nurseries and after school clubs.

Russia and Brazil (Current Borrowings)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if (a) Russia and (b) Brazil have fully met the terms and obligations associated with their current borrowings from (i) the IMF, (ii) the World Bank and(iii) other Government-funded financial institutions. [70299]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 10 February 1999]: Both Russia and Brazil have fulfilled all their financial obligations in servicing their current borrowings from all the institutions referred to. Failure to comply fully with loan conditionality has in both cases, however, led to the suspension or limiting of financing from some sources.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the contribution of the United Kingdom to (a) Russia and (b) Brazil via (i) the IMF, (ii) the World Bank and (iii) other Government-funded financial institutions. [70300]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 10 February 1999]: The table details the outstanding loans disbursed to (a) Russia and (b) Brazil by the IMF, the World Bank and other multi-lateral institutions.

| | (a) Russia | (b) Brazil |
|---|---|---|
| International Monetary Fund | 11.7 billion | 2.9 billion |
| World Bank | 2.2 billion | 0.6 billion |
| Bank for International Settlements | n/a | 2.57 billion |
| European Bank for Reconstruction and Development | 1.0 billion | n/a |
| Inter-American Development Bank | n/a | 10.3 billion |
| European Investment Bank | n/a | 38.2 million |

Loans and equity

The table uses exchange rates as of close of trading 11 February 1999.

The table uses exchange rates as of close of trading 11 February 1999.

The primary source of IMF resources is subscriptions (quotas) from member countries. The UK quota is equivalent to 5 per cent. of the total quotas. This subscription is not public expenditure, but constitutes part of the UK's foreign exchange reserves.

In the case of Russia and Brazil, the UK and other major shareholders also provided bilateral loans to the IMF, respectively through the General Arrangements to Borrow (GAB) and the New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB). The NAB and GAB are mechanisms that enable the Fund to borrow from selected members when supplementary resources are needed to deal with an impairment of the international monetary system, or an exceptional situation that poses a threat to the stability of the system. To date, the UK has lent the IMF £117,248,801 under the GAB for Russia, and £200,465,904 under the NAB for Brazil. These loans are not public expenditure, but constitute part of the UK's foreign exchange reserves.

The World Bank, the EBRD, and the IADB finance their loans principally from borrowings on the international capital markets. They also derive resources from the capital subscriptions of members, and from accumulated earnings (mainly from their loans). The UK shareholding at the World Bank is 4.5 per cent., at the EBRD 8.5 per cent., at the IADB 1.0 per cent. and 17.8 per cent. at the EIB (through the Loan Guarantee Reserve). A certain share of BIS moneys is underwritten by the UK treasury. This is not public expenditure, but we do hold contingent liability. Currently, we are underwriting £240,310,674.

BP

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many shares the Government hold in BP; and if he will make a statement. [69722]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 11 February 1999]: None.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to relocate staff in (a) his Department and (b) the agencies for which he is responsible to the regions of the United Kingdom with the highest levels of unemployment; and what plans he has further to decentralise the location of his Department and its agencies. [70457]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: There are currently no plans to move Departmental or agency staff to regions with the highest unemployment levels and no plans to decentralise.

Pensions

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average annual contribution made to personal pension plans by (a) standard rate and (b) higher rate taxpayers. [70695]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The information is in the table.

| | Average contribution to personal pension schemes in 1996–97 |
|---|---|
| Basic rate taxpayers | 900 |
| Higher rate taxpayers | 4,200 |

Notes:
1. Estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes for 1996–97 and other survey and administrative information.
2. Includes contributions to retirement annuity contracts, but excludes free-standing additional voluntary contributions, "minimum contributions" by DSS to appropriate personal pension schemes and contributions made by employers.
3. Covers contributions made by employees and the self-employed.
4. Includes basic rate tax repaid to scheme administrators in respect of contributions made by employees to personal pensions under net contribution arrangements.
5. Figures are rounded to the nearest £100.

Cheque-cashing Companies

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the activities of cheque-cashing companies in respect of the provisions of the Cheques Act 1992. [71657]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The Treasury has from time to time received letters from MPs and members of the public on cheque cashing companies.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what regulatory mechanisms apply to the activities of cheque-cashing companies. [71658]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Cheque-cashing companies are unregulated.

Unemployment (Cambridge)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many young people aged between 18 and 24 years were out of work and claiming benefit in the Cambridge travel-to-work area who had been unemployed in excess of six months, at (i) April 1997, (ii) April 1998 and (iii) October 1998. [72365]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Lansley, dated 25 February 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on those claiming benefit in the Cambridge travel-to-work area (TTWA).

The information you have requested is derived from the monthly claimant count of people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits). Essentially, all people who were claiming these benefits on the count day are counted.

The date you have requested for those aged 18–24 in the Cambridge TTWA is given below and are not adjusted to take account of seasonal factors.

Cambridge TTWA: Claimant count for over 6 months

| | Age 18–24 |
|---|---|
| April 1997 | 384 |
| April 1998 | 216 |
| October 1998 | 168 |

National Statistical Service

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to establish the new independent national statistical service; and if he will make a statement on the degree and nature of the independence that is proposed. [72025]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The Government produced a Green Paper "Statistics: A Matter of Trust" last year which provided options as to how best they might seek to enhance the integrity, both actual and perceived, of official statistics. They will be bringing forward their plans in this area as soon as they are finalised.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to permit citizens advice bureaux to provide financial advice. [72363]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 February 1999]: Citizens Advice Bureaux already play an important role in advising and assisting consumers on financial matters. When the Financial Services and Markets Bill has been enacted, I hope that they will be able to work with the Financial Services Authority, which we propose should have a public awareness objective, to improve consumer education on financial services generally. However, the giving of personal financial advice is a regulated activity which requires, and will continue to require under the new bill, authorisation.

Fuel Duty

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Treasury's environmental appraisal on the effects of the policy to increase fuel duty by six per cent. per annum in real terms. [72293]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The Pre-Budget Report, published on 3 November 1998, included an environmental assessment of the Government's environmental tax measures to date. The road fuel duty escalator, over the period 1996 to 2002, is estimated to reduce annual carbon dioxide emissions by between 2 million and 5 million tonnes of carbon in 2010. It is also estimated that the 2010 urban road transport emissions of oxides of nitrogen and particulate matter will be reduced by 1 per cent. and 1.2 per cent. respectively.

Petrol Prices

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to require petrol retailers to display at the pumps the amount of tax paid on a litre of fuel. [72328]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 23 February 1999]: No.

Transport (New Technology)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to provide fiscal incentives to use new technology in transport. [71112]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 February 1999]: In his last Budget, several measures were announced by the Chancellor in keeping with the Government's commitment to reduce pollutant emissions, including a freeze on duty for road fuel gases, a £500 reduction in vehicle excise duty for lorries that meet a low emission standard, a £50 reduction in vehicle excise duty for the smallest, cleanest cars and an increase in the duty differential between conventional diesel and ultra low sulphur diesel.

Income Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax payers paid income tax at the rate of 40 per cent. in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [73433]

Dawn Primarolo: The latest estimates, based on the 1996–97 Survey of Personal Incomes, for the number of taxpayers paying some income tax at the higher rate are 2.08 million for 1996–97 and 2.30 million for 1997–98.

HEALTH

Domestic Violence

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of the responses to the requests to local authorities to report their activity on tackling domestic violence. [70534]

Ms Jowell: The responses of the local authorities on their activities on tackling domestic violence were summarised in a report by the London Research Centre, "Tackling Violence Against Women". This report which was jointly funded by the women's unit in the Cabinet Office and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions was placed in the Library in November 1998.

Neurological Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his officials will commence work on drawing up a compendium of good practice on the commissioning of neurological services; and when it will be published. [72564]

Mr. Hutton: Subject to resource availability next year, a compendium of good practice on the commissioning of neurological services is currently being considered for development in 1999–2000.

Occupational Therapy

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schoolchildren by (a) age and (b) health authority are awaiting the services of an occupational therapist at the Sunderland, Hartlepool and Durham Hospital Trusts following a recommendation from an educational special needs assessment; and what was the average waiting time in the last year for which figures are available. [72322]

Mr. Hutton: The information is not held by the Department. The health authorities involved should be able to provide the information requested for their own areas.

Asthma (Children)

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of children under 16 years of age suffering from asthma in (a) England and Wales and (b) Sheffield Health Authority area. [71965]

Mr. Hutton: There are no comprehensive data on the number of children with asthma. On the basis of all the information available, it has been estimated that "the prevalence of asthma sufficiently severe to require regular medical supervision is from 4–6 per cent. in children". This estimate is quoted in "Asthma: An Epidemiological Overview" (Central Health Monitoring Unit, 1995), which brought together a broad range of the best statistics on asthma in England. Copies are available in the Library.

According to the report of the Health Survey for England 1997, 23 per cent. of boys and 18 per cent. of girls aged 2 to 15 years had been diagnosed at some time in the past as suffering from asthma. Copies of this report are also available in the Library.

The equivalent figures for the Sheffield Health Authority area are not available centrally. Information on the number of children suffering from asthma in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mentally Ill (Homelessness)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has obtained as to how many people discharged from mental illness hospitals in England in the last year after a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses, having been proved vulnerable homeless, subsequently became voluntary homeless. [72581]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Caesarean Sections

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what clinical guidelines his Department has given to obstetricians in assessing when a caesarean section is appropriate. [72537]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not issue clinical guidelines. The Department is funding the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to carry out a national audit of caesarean sections in order to develop caesarean section audit criteria for particular groups of women.

Learning Disabilities Strategy

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish a strategy for people with learning disabilities. [72520]

Mr. Hutton: Our White Paper "Modernising Social Services" published in November 1998 set out our strategy for the development of social services for all client groups including people with learning disabilities. They will also benefit from wider developments such as the proposals in our National Health Service White Paper and Public Health Green Paper, and the Welfare to Work strategy. We have recently completed a review of learning disability hospital reprovisioning plans, are currently carrying out a survey in 24 local authorities and their matching health authorities and are awaiting the results of an evaluation of different types of residential provision for people with learning disabilities. We will then consider what, if any, further action needs to be taken in the light of this work and advice from the Learning Disability Advisory Group set up last November.

Mother and Baby Units (Mentally Ill)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for mother and baby units for the mentally ill. [72521]

Mr. Hutton: Health authorities are required to assess the health needs of their population and arrange for the provision of adequate services. This should include the needs of mothers with a psychiatric illness.

Long-term Nursing Care

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish his plans for long-term nursing care. [72592]

Mr. Hutton: We have already set in hand a number of initiatives to improve long-term care services—particularly those set out in our White Paper "Modernising Social Services". We also await the report of the Royal Commission on Long Term Care of the Elderly, due very shortly.

Gamma Hydroxy Butyrate

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) deaths and (b) hospital admissions have resulted from the abuse of gamma hydroxy butyrate in (a) the North West and (b) England in each of the last 10 years. [72900]

Ms Jowell: Between 1988 and 1997, one death is mentioned on the death certificate (in 1995) as being due to the abuse of gamma hydroxy butyrate (GHB) in England, none in the North West. Figures for 1993 to 1997 are provisional.

Figures for hospital admissions from the abuse of GHB are not identified separately in the information that is available centrally.

NHS Charges

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase charges in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [73880]

Mr. Denham: We shall shortly lay before the House regulations to increase National Health Service Charges in England and Wales from 1 April 1999. There will be a cash increase in the charge of 10p, (1.72 per cent.) from £5.80 to £5.90 for each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed. This means that prescription charges will fall in real terms.

The cost of prescription prepayment certificates will rise to £30.80 for a 4 month certificate and £84.60 for an annual certificate. These offer savings for those needing more than 5 items in four months or 14 in one year.

Prescription charges are expected to raise some £377 million for the NHS in 1999–2000.

Charges for elastic stockings and tights, wigs and most fabric supports supplied through the Hospital Service will be increased similarly.

The maximum patient charge for a single course of dental treatment begun on or after 1 April 1999 will increase from £340 to £348. Only about 1 in every 1,000 courses of treatment will attract the new maximum charge.

The increases are below the current rate of inflation as measured by the Retail Price Index for January 1999, 2.4 per cent.

We will also be laying regulations to increase optical voucher values. Increases range from 2.5 per cent. to 18 per cent. with most help targeted towards people with serious sight problems who are prescribed the most complex, expensive glasses.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will lay regulations to increase charges in Scotland by the same amounts. Similar arrangements will apply in Northern Ireland.

Details of the revised charges have been placed in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Genetic Modification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) on how many occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials of his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Cathy McGlynn of Bell Pottinger; [72060]

(2) on how many occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Dave Hill of Bell Pottinger; [72064]

(3) on how many occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Mr. Stan Greenberg of Greenberg Research. [72247]

Dr. Jack Cunningham [holding answer 23 February 1999]: I and my officials are in regular contact with representatives of all those with an interest in biotechnology—including environmental groups, consumer groups and biotechnology companies. It is not the normal practice of governments to give details of specific meetings with private individuals or companies.

British Business (Regulations)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what estimates the Government have made of the cumulative impact on British business of changes in the degree and level of regulation since 1 May 1997. [71609]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Since the election, we have regularly published Command Papers listing all the regulations which have been introduced within the previous six months. We have also published Compliance Cost Assessments to accompany all new regulations with an impact on business. Since last August that requirement extended to the Regulatory Impact Assessment which better focused on benefits as well as costs.

The cost of new regulations, as reported in Compliance Cost and Regulatory Impact Assessments, provides a helpful snapshot of the initial burden imposed by new regulations. However, the type and incidence of the burden imposed by each regulation can be quite different and the costs cannot be added together so as to produce a figure which, on its own, has any real meaning. The Government do not therefore publish cumulative figures.

However, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Pre-Budget Report, asked the Better Regulation Task Force to examine the relationship between regulations and productivity. The Task Force will shortly offer initial findings on the impact of regulations on business start-up, success and growth and will publish a full report in the summer.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of extending entitlement to jobseeker's allowance to national insurance (a) class 2 contributors and (b) class 4 contributors. [70434]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

It is possible to provide information only in respect of those who claim contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance but fail to qualify because they are class 2 contributors. It is estimated that the cost of extending contribution-based jobseekers allowance to this group is around £15 million per year.

There will be a further group of class 2 contributors who do not currently claim Jobseeker's Allowance, for example because they know that they would not qualify for benefit through either the contribution or income-based route. The figure provided will therefore underestimate the total cost of extending contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) to all class 2 contributors.

Notes:

1. Estimate based on JSA 1 per cent. sample of claimants, linked to the Lifetime Labour Market Database.
2. Estimate rounded to nearest £5 million.
3. Estimate is for Great Britain.

Widows Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of individuals who will lose entitlement under his changes to widows benefits and the numbers who as a result will claim means-tested assistance. [72190]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 22 February 1999]: Precise estimates of this kind are not available. The estimates that follow give our best estimate of the numbers who might be affected but are subject to a wide range of uncertainty. They are based on survey data and the circumstances of those present in the survey may differ from those affected by the policy change. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 10,000.

| | Year 1 | Year 2 | Year 3 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Average reduction in numbers receiving contributory bereavement benefits | Less than 5,000 | 20,000 | 40,000 |
| Average increase in numbers receiving Income Support | Less than 5,000 | Less than 5,000 | 10,000 |
| Average increase in numbers receiving Housing Benefit | Less than 5,000 | Less than 5,000 | Less than 5,000 |
| Average increase in numbers receiving Council Tax Benefit | Less than 5,000 | Less than 5,000 | Less than 5,000 |

Notes:

1. Estimates use information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, the Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry and forecasts from the Government Actuary's Department concerning the number of women affected by the proposed changes.
2. Estimates assume that a constant proportion over time of those affected by the proposed Bereavement Benefits move on to each of the means-tested benefits.
3. Estimates across means-tested benefits cannot be summed to provide an estimate of the total number of people affected by the changes.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's total expenditure on purchases of (a) vehicles, (b) computers and (c) properties, since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [72811]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the tables.

| | Departmental total |
|---|---|
| Expenditure on purchases from 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998 | |
| Vehicles | 3,897,331.67 |
| Computers | 16,506,705.25 |
| Properties | 0 |
| Expenditure on purchases from 1 April 1998 to 31 January 1999 | |
| Vehicles | 2,365,947.68 |
| Computers | 12,242,485.77 |
| Properties | 0 |

Private Sector Resource Initiative

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date the transfer of the Department's estate as part of the Private Sector Resource Initiative was agreed; and if he will make a statement. [72812]

Angela Eagle: The decision to transfer the ownership and management of the Department's estate and to procure a private sector supplier of serviced accommodation, via the PRIME (Private sector Resource Initiative for Management of the Estate) initiative, was first announced on 28 June 1996.

All the projects that we inherited, and which involved the outsourcing of work, were reviewed and tested against the Government's new strengthened criteria for involvement of the private sector to ensure that they would work and that they were fair to customers, taxpayers and staff alike. PRIME fully passed this test and we agreed to proceed with the project in support of our commitment to modernise the delivery of Social Security.

The announcement was made on 31 July 1997, Official Report, columns 591–94, by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Social Security.

A contract was formally signed with the preferred supplier PPM (Partnership Property Management), now Trillium Group, at midday on 24 December 1997 and the property transfer was effected on 1 April 1998.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportions of written parliamentary questions for answer on a named day have been given substantive answers on that day in the current session. [73122]

Mr. Timms: In the current Parliamentary year we have received 360 Parliamentary Questions for answer on a named day, of these 331 (92 per cent.) were given a substantive answer.

This Department aims to give a holding reply to no more than 10 per cent. of all Parliamentary Questions for answer on a named day. However where detailed work has to be carried out by the Department's analytical branches or the Government's Actuary Department a full response cannot always be provided in the time allowed.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by income decile the numbers of (a) gainers and (b) losers, and the average amount gained or lost, from the proposed changes to bereavement benefits. [73262]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available.

Notes:

1. Information on current Widows' Benefits recipients is not available by income decile because the sample sizes involved are too small to allow a robust analysis. Moreover, estimating the position of Bereavement Benefits recipients would require estimates of the future distribution of income.

2. In modelling income-related benefit effects, it is necessary to make broad assumptions about take up levels (which differ for each of Income Support, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit). Consequently, these assumptions do not directly relate back to individuals in different parts of the income distribution.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of benefit claimants who do not have a bank account. [73015]

Mr. Timms: Estimates of the number of benefit claimants who do not have a bank account vary widely. The various sources of information available suggest the figure to be in the region of 10–20 per cent.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the transaction costs of benefit payment and (b) the costs of paying benefit using the current method if paid through automatic credit transfer. [73029]

Angela Eagle: The transaction fees payable by this Department, to the various agents who supply benefit payment services, are commercial in confidence and cannot be disclosed.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of housing benefit claims are processed within 14 days; and what were the proportions in each year since 1992; [73034]

(2) what proportion of housing benefit claims were processed within 14 days (a) in each year since 1992 and (b) at the latest available date. [73261]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

The percentage of new claims to housing benefit determined within 14 days of receipt of all necessary information in Great Britain

| Year | Percentage |
|---|---|
| 1992–93 | not available |
| 1993–94 | not available |
| 1994–95 | 80 |
| 1995–96 | 82 |
| 1996–97 | 78 |
| 1997–98 | 79 (most recent year) |

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumption about the value in real terms of means-tested benefits in 2025 has been made in the forecast in paragraph 17, chapter 1, of Cmd 4179. [73016]

Angela Eagle: Our aim, over the long-term and as resources allow, is to increase the Minimum Income Guarantee in line with average earnings. The forecast in paragraph 17, chapter 1, of Cm 4179 assumes that the level of income-related benefits is increased in line with average earnings (assumed to be 1.5 per cent. per year above the growth in prices) from April 1999 onwards.

Benefit Payments (Post Offices)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the expected completion date of the installation of the Benefits Agency/POCL project; [73018]

(2) what assessment he has made of how Benefits Agency staff judge the new Benefits Agency/POCL system; [73030]

(3) if he will list the savings which have resulted directly from the Benefits Agency/POCL project; and if he will indicate how these savings are measured; [73032]

(4) how many transactions using the new Benefits Agency/POCL system have been (a) single benefit claims, (b) two benefit claims, (c) three benefit claims and (d) four or more benefit claims; [73017]

(5) what is the average amount paid to date to the ICL-led consortium for each transaction using the new Benefits Agency/POCL system. [73033]

Angela Eagle: The working plans assume that all post offices will be automated by the end of 2000.

An approach has been developed to assess the impact of the payment card and the supporting customer accounting and payment systems on the operation of DSS benefits and Benefits Agency offices. This will capture data on staff awareness, perception and satisfaction, which will begin to become available from the middle of this year.

The trial of the payment card is estimated to have resulted in savings in benefit fraud of £68,000 during the period September 1996 to December 1998. The parallel introduction of the order book control service has separately resulted in savings in fraud of £1.4 million during the period May 1997 to December 1998.

Savings are measured using system-produced data on volumes of payment card transactions and volumes of order books recovered as a result of barcoding.

To date 750,000 payments of child benefit have been made via the payment card as part of a limited trial. No other benefits are presently involved in the trial.

Commercial information such as the value of transaction charges is confidential.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

European Youth Parliament

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the Committee will investigate whether the Chamber of the House could be made available to members of the European Youth Parliament for use when the House is not in session. [72549]

Mrs. Roe: I have to advise my hon. Friend that the Chamber of the House cannot be made available for this purpose. The Parliamentary Education Unit have recently started a programme of "Pupil Parliaments" for schools on six or seven Fridays each year in Committee Room 10, and any proposals from the European Youth Parliament for similar facilities would be considered by my Committee in the context of this programme.

WALES

TECs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the training provided by TECs; and if he will make a statement. [72037]

Mr. Hain: TECs contract with a variety of training providers for the delivery of youth and adult training programmes. In so doing, they must ensure that the training delivered meets the specifications for the various programmes that are set out in the TEC Contract and Operating Manual and the related planning guidance. They must also ensure that it complies with their contractual obligations in respect of accuracy of payments claimed for programme delivery, quality assurance and Health and Safety provisions. TEC performance in all of these respects is closely monitored by the Welsh Office and subject to the annual performance review; and, when cases of non-compliance with contract have arisen, appropriate remedial action has been taken.

The content of the training provided is specified by the various industry lead bodies and the qualifications awarded on the completion of training are routinely subject to audit by ACCAC, the qualifications assessment body for Wales.

The effectiveness of the training programmes in achieving their objectives is also subject to evaluation. Such evaluations are usually undertaken by the Department for Education and Employment on an England and Wales basis and the reports are routinely published. They influence both the subsequent design of programmes and the way in which they are delivered locally via the TECs through the identification of best practice.

However, whilst these arrangements have provided reasonable assurance that the training delivered has accorded with its intentions, they have not provided any clear indication of the relative standards of training offered by different training providers. Evidence of compliance with training course requirements does not necessarily represent evidence of a good learning experience for the trainee. The quality assurance arrangements provide a limited assurance in this respect, but they are insufficiently independent of the parties involved in training delivery to provide an objective assessment of the standard of training achieved.

It is for this reason that the Government have enacted legislation to enable the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector to inspect the quality of training provision in Wales. The Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector will use a framework for inspection which is similar to that used by the Training Standards Council in England and which has been subject to consultation with TECs, training providers and ACCAC in Wales. Inspections will begin in the next financial year and it is intended to cover all providers of Government-sponsored training within a five year cycle. The Inspectorate's reports will provide the first independent assessment of training standards in Wales; and I will expect both the TECs and the training providers concerned to use these reports constructively in the interests of continuous improvement.

Following the transfer of functions this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of (i) higher and (ii) further education students in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [72035]

Mr. Hain: Provisional figures, as at 1 December 1997, indicate that the numbers of students studying at Welsh institutions were 95,546 for higher education and 137,660 for further education.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

New Deal

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many New Deal graduates have found permanent jobs; and if he will make a statement. [72036]

Mr. Hain: Although there can be no guarantee of permanency, all jobs accessed through the New Deal are real jobs.

The latest data published by the Department for Education and Employment show that some 2,700 young people had left the "New Deal for 18–24s" in Wales to enter unsubsidised work and more than 1,000 others were in a subsidised job under the Employer Option.

I am very encouraged by this impressive start to the "New Deal for 18–24s" and, in particular, to the strong support being provided by employers in Wales, over 2,900 of whom have signed agreements to offer opportunities under the New Deal.

Welsh Arts Council

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress for appointing a new chair for the Welsh Arts Council. [72768]

Mr. Michael: Interviews to select a successor to Sir Richard Lloyd Jones have taken place and I hope to announce a decision shortly.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in each health authority area were waiting for NHS treatment in December 1998 for (a) six months and under, (b) six to 12 months, (c) 12 to 18 months and (d) over 18 months; and if he will make a statement. [72756]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Data for the number of patients awaiting in-patient or day case treatment for up to 6 months are not centrally available. Data for the number of residents of each health authority area who were waiting for up to 12 months, 12 to 18 months and over 18 months at 31 December 1998 are given in the table.

Number of residents in each health authority who were waiting for in-patient or day case treatment at 31 December 1998

| Health authority | Up to 12 months | 12 to 18 months | Over 18 months | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Gwent | 11,981 | 1,356 | 467 | 13,804 |
| Bro Taf | 13,949 | 2,114 | 1,775 | 17,838 |
| Dyfed Powys | 12,254 | 996 | 260 | 13,510 |
| North Wales | 15,058 | 733 | 212 | 16,003 |
| Morgannwg[1] | 9,471 | 541 | 197 | 10,209 |
| Wales | 62,713 | 5,740 | 2,911 | 71,364 |

[1] These figures incorporate revisions to the data from Morgannwg Health Authority and so differ from those published in the Welsh Office Statistical Release SDR 7/99 on 13 January 1999

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Welsh Assembly (Freemasons)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has received from Commissioners on a requirement for elected members to the Welsh Assembly to require disclosure and declaration if they are Freemasons. [R] [73187]

Mr. Michael: The National Assembly Advisory Group, established by my predecessor, advised that Assembly Members should have to register membership of the Freemasons but the Standing Orders Commissioners have now submitted draft standing orders which do not include a requirement on Assembly Members to register membership of the Freemasons.

I have invited comments on the Commissioners' report; in so doing, I have indicated that I am minded to incorporate the views of the National Assembly Advisory Group, that such membership should be a registrable interest, into the standing orders in their final form.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which categories of the Department's officials will be subject to the Working Time Directive. [71834]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Working Time Directive applies to all FCO staff.

Imperial Measurements

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of negotiations regarding the extension of the derogation at European Union level for use of imperial measurements; which voting procedure will apply at the Council of Ministers; and which countries have already declared voting intentions. [72529]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

On 15 February the European Commission published a proposal to, inter alia, extend until 31 December 2009 the period during which imperial units of measurement may be used optionally as supplementary indications of quantity alongside but no more prominent than the primary indication in metric units. The proposal is subject to qualified majority voting in the Council of Ministers and co-decision procedure with the European Parliament.

At a Commission working group in Brussels last year Member States indicated that they would support the proposal unopposed.

EU Common Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 212, how many reports or proposals each group has produced since 1 May 1997; and if he will list them. [72321]

Ms Quin: Common Foreign and Security Policy Working Groups meet on a regular basis. After each meeting the Council Secretariat produces a report of the Group's discussion, which is sent to all Member States.

Since 1 May 1997 the Common Foreign and Security Policy Working Groups have met as indicated:

| Working Group | Number of meetings since 1 May 1997 |
|---|---|
| Administrative Affairs | 13 |
| Africa | 27 |
| Armaments Policy | 8 |
| Asia | 31 |

| Public International Law | 8 |
| Security | 19 |
| South East Europe | 18 |
| Terrorism | 17 |
| United Nations | 18 |
| Western Balkans | 40 |

Luxembourg Compromise

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of occasions on which member states of the European Union have made use of their non-Treaty veto, established by the Luxembourg Compromise. [72287]

Ms Quin: No formal records are kept by the Government or the Council Secretariat of the occasions when Member States have invoked the Luxembourg Compromise.

The United Kingdom has invoked the Luxembourg Compromise twice, in July 1978 and May 1982.

Gibraltar

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he gave and when to the letter of the Chief Minister of Gibraltar in January asking Her Majesty's Government to reject the Spanish proposals for joint sovereignty; and if he will publish his reply. [72210]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 February 1999]: I replied on 28 January to a letter of 27 January 1999 to me from the Chief Minister of Gibraltar. Official Ministerial correspondence of this sort is confidential and not normally published. But I can say that I underlined that our commitment under the 1969 Constitution, that we will never enter into arrangements under which the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes, remained steadfast.

Ministerial Visits (Caribbean)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers from his Department have visited Caribbean countries since May 1997; and if he will list the Ministers and the countries they have visited. [72631]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The answer which the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for North Shropshire, (Mr. Paterson) on 3 February 1999, Official Report, columns 643–45, included a comprehensive list of all Government Ministers who have undertaken individual official visits to Latin America and independent Caribbean countries since 1 May 1997. No Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister has visited an independent country in the Caribbean region in an official capacity since that answer was given.

For ease of reference the following visits have taken place to independent Caribbean countries by Ministers of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office since May 1997.

Antigua and Barbuda

European Council

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for March; and if he will list the major European Union events for the next six months. [73879]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the table.

Chechnya

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, columns 211–12, on Chechnya, how many rescue attempts were reported in respect of the hostages employed by Granger Telecom prior to 6 December 1998. [73256]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Two Chechen clans linked to Chechen Telecom were reportedly searching for the hostages a week after the kidnap. The Chechen authorities announced that they were planning operations around 24 October to free all hostages in Chechnya, following an unproductive ultimatum to kidnappers. Similar Chechen anti-kidnap operations were reported in late November 1998. On 25 November the Chechen Security Service claimed publicly that it had "operational information" on the hostages and was close to resolving the case.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 212, on Chechnya, when his Department made contact with Granger Telecom following receipt of the Interfax report of 6 December 1998. [73254]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: FCO officials faxed a copy of the media report of 6 December to Granger Telecom, for information, before 1300 on Monday 7 December.

United Nations Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to ensure that the United States of America pays its outstanding payments to the UN. [73252]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Ministers and senior officials have raised UN finance with both the Administration and Congress, urging prompt payment of US arrears. The European Union has taken similar action. We continue to promote the EU's proposals for UN financial reform including tougher penalties for non-payment of UN dues.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries owing payments to the UN, together with the amounts outstanding at 16 February. [73251]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The most recent complete data published by the United Nations, as at 31 December 1998, shows 178 Member States with unpaid contributions, including 135 owing contributions from before the start of 1998 (our normal definition of arrears). Total outstanding contributions from Member States, including 1998 assessments, were $2,031 million. The details are given in the table.

Falklands

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Chilean Government concerning the continuation of flights to the Falklands by Lan Chile after 31 March. [73247]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This is a commercial matter for discussion between Lan Chile and the Falkland Islands Development Corporation. We have, however, expressed our regret to the Chilean Government over their decision to ask Lan Chile to suspend flights to the Falklands and said we do not believe this to be justified. We welcome assurances by Lan Chile that they will honour their contract with the Falkland Islands Development Corporation, which expires on 31 March. We hope that they will continue to fly to the Falklands thereafter.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Chile concerning its formal recognition of the Argentine claim to the Falklands. [73248]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are aware of Chilean statements of support for the Argentine position on the Falklands in recent years. We have made clear to the Chilean Government that we have no doubt abut British sovereignty over the Falklands and have called on them to recognise the right of the Falkland Islanders to determine their own future.

Iran (Russian Technical Adviser)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of reports that Russians are working on Iran's nuclear, chemical and biological programmes. [73250]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Russia has extensive commercial relations with Iran, including in the nuclear energy field. Russia's obligations under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) forbid her to assist any other country's nuclear weapons programme. Its commitments under the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) and the Biological and Toxins Weapons Convention (BTWC) would prevent assistance to the development of chemical or biological weapons. Iran is also a party to the NPT, CWC and BTWC. We have detailed contact with both Russia and Iran on non-proliferation issues. As with other countries, we take up with them directly concerns we have of non-compliance with their obligations under such conventions.

Russian Foreign Minister

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates on which Ministers have (a) contacted and (b) been contacted by the Russian Foreign Minister since 1 November 1998. [73249]

Ms Quin: Contacts between Ministers and Russian Foreign Minister Ivanov are frequent. This continues the pattern established when Mr. Primakov was Foreign Minister. Over the last two weeks alone, the Foreign Secretary has been in contact with Ivanov or Deputy Foreign Minister Avdeev on an almost daily basis concerning the Rambouillet peace process and other international issues. Our contacts since 1 November 1998 are therefore far too numerous to itemise case by case.

Belgrade (Embassy Staff)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British Embassy staff remain in Belgrade. [73275]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Eleven British Embassy staff remained in Belgrade following the withdrawal of non-essential staff and dependants on 19–20 February. Staff were withdrawn due to concern about security in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) as the deadline for the conclusion of the Rambouillet Peace Talks approached.

Yemen

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice the Government have given to British nationals working in Yemen following the threat made by the group calling itself The Army of Suicides, Group Number 66, Bin Laden Militant Wing. [73185]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The safety of British nationals is of paramount importance to the Government. We monitor closely all potential threats to British interests in the UK and overseas.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office travel advice is updated regularly. Currently, we advise against all travel to Yemen. British nationals resident in Yemen are advised to consider whether their presence in Yemen is absolutely necessary, and if not, to leave. If they choose to stay, they should review their security arrangements; be extra vigilant; and stay in close touch with the British Embassy in Sana'a or the Consulate General in Aden.

Arms Sales (Annual Audit)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish the first annual audit of arms sales; and if he will make a statement. [71596]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 81.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Horseracing

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the British Horseracing Levy Board's financial plan. [73513]

Mr. George Howarth: It is the British Horseracing Board (BHB) which has produced a financial plan for British racing. We are having constructive discussions with the Chairman of the BHB on the issues it raises.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met members of the British Horseracing Levy Board; and what was discussed. [73514]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary met the Horserace Betting Levy Board in October 1997. I met the Board on 24 March 1998 and have subsequently had several meetings with the Chairman—most recently on 23 February. We discussed a range of betting and racing issues which impinge on the Board's work.

CABINET OFFICE

Minister for Science

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on how many occasions since July 1998 he has attended a meeting with the Minister for Science where GM foods and crops were discussed; and if the Minister for Science left the room during those occasions. [73126]

Dr. Jack Cunningham [holding answer 25 February 1999]: On the one occasion that policy on GM Foods was discussed in the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification, the Minister for Science left the meeting.

Genetically Modified Goods

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what was the outcome of the departmental stocktake meeting on genetically modified goods held on 22 February. [73724]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: It is not the normal practice of Governments to give details of the outcome of internal meetings.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many air miles have been earned by him and each of his ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73286]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 141–42.

Detailed information on any air miles earned by Ministers in this Department as a result of official travel is not recorded centrally.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Human Rights

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's policy of linking aid to good governance and human rights in (a) Zimbabwe, (b) Burma, (c) Vietnam and (d) Cuba. [73731]

Clare Short: The Government's White Paper on International Development makes it clear that raising standards of governance is central to the elimination of poverty. All our development assistance programmes take good governance and human rights issues into account. We do not have bilateral aid programmes in Burma or Cuba. We have published a detailed Country Strategy paper for our programme in Vietnam and will shortly be publishing one for Zimbabwe which set out our approaches in those countries.

Sudan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how she defines leakage in respect of food aid diversion in southern Sudan. [73175]

Clare Short: In Sudan, we regard "leakage" as being synonymous with "diversion" which refers to food aid that is deflected from reaching its intended beneficiaries.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to visit Zimbabwe. [73729]

Clare Short: I made a brief visit to Zimbabwe in January 1998 and have no immediate plans to visit again. I will make arrangements to visit when and if it would contribute to the reduction of poverty and the promotion of sustainable development in Zimbabwe.

HEALTH

General Practitioners

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the shortages of general practitioners and the action the Government are taking to encourage more doctors to (a) remain and (b) become general practitioners. [70082]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 10 February 1999]: We believe that there is no overall shortage of general practitioners at present; and the supply of new GPs is adequate in the short term. However, there are difficulties in certain localities at present and, potentially, more widespread problems in the future without effective action.

Recent policy initiatives to improve GP recruitment and retention include the salaried doctors scheme and Personal Medical Services Primary Care Act pilots, both of which provide opportunities for doctors to work in general practice in more flexible ways, without committing themselves to long-term financial investment, and to provide services in the areas where there is most need. They also include improvements to the GP retainer scheme, allowing GPs to work in general practice on a limited sessional basis, keeping in touch with practical and educational developments. On a longer time scale, the continuing support of out of hours developments is having a real impact on GPs' conditions and their morale.

In addition, we announced on 22 July 1998 that undergraduate medical school intake to United Kingdom universities would be increased by about 1,000 places, a 20 per cent. increase. Intake is now planned to rise from the 1997 level of 5,050, to about 6,000 places by 2005.

Mumps Vaccine

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the manufacturers from which the NHS purchased the single mumps vaccine for use in the UK, and the dates when it did so; and what is the cost of a dose sufficient to immunise a child; [71314]

(2) between which dates the single mumps vaccine (a) has been available in the UK and licensed for use by the Medicines Control Agency and (b) has been available on the NHS; [71311]

(3) what percentage of immunisations against mumps in the UK on the NHS are by way of (a) the single mumps vaccine and (b) the MMR vaccine. [71310]

Ms Jowell: The vaccines recommended in the childhood immunisation programme in England are centrally purchased and supplied to doctors free of charge. Single antigen mumps vaccine has never been recommended as part of the childhood programme and has, therefore, never been centrally purchased and supplied to doctors. Medicines Control Agency (MCA) records show that a single mumps vaccine, Mumpsvax (supplied by Pasteur Mérieux MSD), has been licensed in the United Kingdom since October 1972, when the licensing of medicines, and records, began and would have been available on prescription. The British National Formulary (September 1998) gives the price of a single-dose vial of Mumpsvax as £4.00. The administration of the vaccine would be a matter between the individual doctor and patient.

During the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998 553,000 children in England received a first dose of mumps, measles and rubella vaccine. Overall, around 1 million children would have received MMR vaccine over the year, taking those who received a second dose into account. Equivalent data on mumps vaccine coverage are not collected, since it is not a recommended vaccine, but, in the same period, a total of 440 prescriptions for mumps vaccine were dispensed. It is not possible to say how many children received the mumps vaccine.

Mumpsvax was available in the UK until recent changes were made to the manufacturing process. Last year the Department was alerted that, owing to production changes, the US mumps vaccine no longer matched the UK licence and that Pasteur Mérieux has no plans to relicense the product. The vaccine has been unavailable on the UK market since August 1998. A small amount of stock may be held by local wholesalers but the Department does not hold this information.

Sodium Consumption

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what studies his Department has assessed which indicate health outcome benefits from a reduction in the dietary sodium intake of the general population; [72325]

(2) if he will request the COMA Panel to review the recommendations on sodium consumption set out in its 1994 report on Nutritional Aspects of Cardiovascular Disease. [72320]

Ms Jowell: The Government's source of independent expert advice on food and nutrition policy is the Committee of Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy (COMA). It considered the dietary requirements for sodium amongst the general population in its 1991 report on Dietary Reference Values, and the relationship between sodium and blood pressure in its 1994 report on the Nutritional Aspects of Cardiovascular Disease. Both of these reports are available in the Library and contain full references of the studies considered. We have no plans to ask COMA to review its recommendations.

However, at the Department's request, the Faculty of Public Health Medicine (a faculty of the Royal College of Physicians) and the British Heart Foundation convened a seminar to review the evidence on the relationship between dietary sodium and blood pressure. This confirmed that there is a large body of authoritative opinion which favours a general reduction in salt consumption, and we have, therefore, asked officials to explore with the food industry the scope for reducing the levels of salt in processed foods.

Schizophrenia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many current occupants of National Health Service hospital and unit beds had a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses in the last year for which figures are available. [72587]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, there were 34,000 estimated finished consultant episodes and estimates occupied bed days of 1,600,000 with the primary diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses in 1997–98, the latest date for which figures are available.

Tobacco

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to recover money from tobacco companies for the NHS treatment of illnesses resulting from tobacco use. [72649]

Ms Jowell: Section 1(2) of the National Health Service Act 1977 requires that the National Health Service be provided free of charge except to the extent that charging is authorised by or under statute.

The Government have no plans to amend the legislation to enable the NHS to recover treatment costs for any cause of ill health.

National Carers Strategy

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by authority the proposed allocations of the additional £140 million for the National Carers Strategy. [72945]

Mr. Hutton: The £140 million covers the years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02. A special grant report, giving details of the allocation of the £20 million for the first year, will be laid before Parliament shortly. As the results of the allocation formula change from year to year because of new data, any figures for 2000–01 and 2001–02 could only be indicative at this stage.

Nurses and Ancillaries (Injuries)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many days lost and early retirements there were in the past 10 years arising from nurses and ancillary staff suffering injury consequent upon their lifting or moving patients; and if he will make a statement. [73705]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not held centrally.

Deaf and Blind People

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide funding for centres for deaf and blind people (a) in Gloucestershire and (b) nationally; and if he will make a statement. [73136]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to provide specific funding for centres for blind or deaf people. It is for local authorities to determine how their funds under the standard spending assessment should be spent. Gloucestershire County Council's personal social services resources will increase by 6.5 per cent. next year.

Gloucestershire Health Authority

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with officials from the Gloucestershire Health Authority regarding the impact on services of the 1999–2000 financial settlement; and if he will make a statement. [73139]

Mr. Denham: Officials at the South West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive have had discussions with Gloucestershire Health Authority in the course of their normal performance management duties. Gloucestershire Health Authority has been allocated £334.6 million for 1999–2000, which represents an increase of £17.4 million (5.5 per cent).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received proposing the making of the (a) basic state pension, (b) SERPS/state second pension, (c) private personal pensions, (d) LISAs, (e) contracted-out/contracted-in occupational pensions, money-purchase/final salary, (f) FURBs, (g) AVCs and (h) FSAVCs into a more simplified system of pension provision. [73394]

Mr. Timms: We have received a number of representations to the Pensions Review calling for greater simplification of some elements of the pensions system. We expect to receive more in response to the Pensions Green Paper consultation exercise.

Correspondence

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency will respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Aylesbury of 22 December about his constituent (N.I. reference ZW755428A), receipt of which was acknowledged by the Benefits Agency on 8 January ref. 7932. [73630]

Angela Eagle: The Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency replied to the hon. Member on 24 February 1999.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those who will no longer be eligible for (a) severe disablement allowance and (b) incapacity benefit have savings of (i) over £8,000 and (ii) between £3,000 and £8,000. [73512]

Mr. Bayley: No information is available on the capital assets of potential future claimants of Incapacity Benefits.

Some of those who in future will be ineligible for Incapacity Benefit (IB) or Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA) will also be unable to receive Income Support (IS) because of the level of their income and/or capital. However, at least 70 per cent. of those who do not qualify for SDA and 70 per cent. of those who do not qualify for IB because of changes to the contribution conditions are expected to be entitled to IS.

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the overpayments of disability living allowance and other benefits, which have come to light as a result of benefit reviews; and if he will make a statement. [74164]

Mr. Bayley: The need to ensure that the amount of benefit paid to claimants is correct at the outset, and remains correct, is an important element in our programme of welfare reform. This requires systems of review which are fair, sensitive and appropriate to the individual circumstances of the claimant.

These requirements are particularly important where the claimant is a severely disabled person. Accordingly, on 28 January 1999, Official Report, column 321, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced that the existing, unsatisfactory system of review of entitlement to Disability Living Allowance—the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP)—would end on 31 March, to be replaced in April by a new, fairer system of periodic review.

There is however an outstanding issue which has arisen from the operation of BIP. This is where because of the claimant's condition, or a change in that condition, entitlement to DLA reduces or ceases altogether. This might be because of an improvement in their physical or mental condition or because the disability proves not to be as severe as was originally thought. Guidance from the Chief Adjudication Officer on this question has indicated that any such changes to entitlement would, to comply with the law, need to be backdated to the point where the change in the condition had actually occurred, or where an erroneous statement had been made on the basis of which the entitlement was awarded. This means that, in any such case, an overpayment is created, which in the normal course of events we would need to take steps to recover.

In the context of DLA, this situation has the potential to cause severe hardship and exceptional difficulty for many severely disabled claimants. For example, a successful operation, the purchase of special aids or equipment, or gradual rehabilitation from a crippling injury can all constitute a change which potentially affects entitlement. Often, the claimants will be quite unaware that this is the case; or even that his or her needs have actually changed. Moreover, because no system of reviewing DLA entitlement existed until 1997, such a change may have gone unnoticed for months or years, resulting in the need to recover sums of money which can amount to many thousands of pounds, often from very vulnerable people who had no idea that this was likely to happen to them.

We regard this situation as unacceptable, and are not prepared to seek recovery in such cases. We have therefore decided to act swiftly, and in the interests of fairness, in two ways.

First, we intend to deal with existing cases, and those which will continue to arise until the arrangements for determining DLA overpayments can be changed in line with our new system of periodic review. We have issued a Direction to the Accounting Officer to ensure that no recovery action is taken in such cases. Thereafter, we intend to seek Parliamentary approval for this approach by taking powers through the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, currently before this House.

Second, we want to make sure that this situation cannot recur in the future, and that in the longer-term, our approach to overpayments of DLA, and also Attendance Allowance (AA) for severely disabled elderly people, is in line with our proposals for a new, fairer review system for these benefits. We therefore intend to lay regulations as soon as possible. These will provide for a fairer system of review and recovery more closely based on the claimant's understanding of his or her condition, and more regularly and sensitively reviewed, to minimise the scope for large overpayments to accrue, but also to ensure that public money is protected and that fraud and abuse does not pay.

These measures will apply not only to DLA and AA, but also to overpayments of other benefits which have arisen as a consequence of a review of DLA or AA.

It is, however, important to be clear that they will apply only to those cases where a review is made in respect of factors directly related to the disability of the claimant. In particular, they will not apply to overpayments created by any fraudulent claims for DLA and AA; or to the much larger number of cases where an overpayment results from changes in the claimant's situation where it was clear that entitlement might be affected and notification required—for example, change of address, going abroad or into hospital.

Although this situation has arisen in the context of DLA, there are potentially similar issues for other benefits such as Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance. We therefore intend to extend the new arrangements to clarify that people do have a duty to report changes which they know could affect their entitlement to these benefits. At the same time we will ensure that when entitlement is reviewed, this is done in a fair and sensitive way.

Bereavement Allowance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number those who will lose the bereavement allowance after six months who will have savings of (a) between £3,000 and £8,000 and (b) over £8,000. [73523]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out.

The information provides figures on the proportion of capital holdings among existing Widow's Pension recipients which might be indicative of the position of future Bereavement Allowance recipients. The information is subject to a wide margin of error.

Around 13 per cent. report between £3,000 and £8,000

Around 26 per cent. report more than £8,000

Note:

Figures are derived from the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey and are presented in 1996–97 prices.

Social Housing

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings he has estimated as a result of his proposal measures to reduce under-occupation of social housing; and on what assumptions his estimate is based. [73524]

Angela Eagle: Under the Housing Benefit under-occupation pilot scheme, tenants living in social housing, who move to smaller accommodation may be entitled to a payment equal to approximately half the Housing Benefit saving in respect of the next three years.

This Department has worked with a number of local authorities to devise the scheme and identify the cost factors. We propose to operate the scheme initially as a pilot in order to evaluate its housing and financial effects.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people claiming social security benefits while receiving a wage paid in cash; and what measures he plans to take to reduce the number. [71098]

Mr. Timms: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security will publish a fraud strategy document which will outline this Department's approach for creating a secure benefit system.

The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Maclean, dated 25 February 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what estimate he had made of the number of people claiming social security benefits while receiving a wage paid in cash; and what measures he plans to take to reduce the number.

The information is not available in the format requested as it is not possible to identify how many claimants of any benefit are receiving a wage paid in cash.

For 'in-work' benefits, for example Family Credit, the claimant may be entitled to work and, should they so wish, receive their wage in cash.

The Benefits Agency employs investigators specially trained in the investigation of employers who are suspected of colluding with people committing benefit fraud. The investigations encompass all benefits with the majority of them involving an element of wages being paid in cash. A significant number of employers are prosecuted each year.

In the current financial year to date (at 31/01/99) there have been 356 collusive employer prosecutions and achieved estimated savings of £27.05 million.

As regards individual customer fraud, so far this year out of a total of 852,246 cases investigated by the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service 434,247 (or 50.9%) related to undisclosed earnings. No doubt many of these involved wages being paid in cash.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

WALES

Mixed-sex Wards

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many mixed sex wards there were in hospitals in Wales in each of the last five years. [71395]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Over-Thirty-Month Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost over the last year of the Over-Thirty-Month scheme in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [72034]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The total cost over the last year of the Over-Thirty-Month Scheme in Wales was £26,770,716

Caesarean Sections

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) in how many health authorities in Wales, and in which ones, the rate of caesarean section exceeds the World Health Organisation recommended rate; [72535]

(2) how many caesarean sections took place in Wales in each of the last five years; and what they were in each year as a percentage of all deliveries. [72536]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The following table shows the number of caesarean sections performed in NHS hospitals in Wales in each of the last five years for which data are available. Two percentage figures are shown: (a) as a percentage of births which took place in those hospitals which perform caesareans (home births, births to Welsh residents outside Wales and births at other hospitals where caesareans are not undertaken are not included in the denominator) and (b) as a percentage of all live births to residents of Wales (some of which may have taken place outside Wales).

| Year | Number of caesarean sections | Percentage (a) | (b) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1993 | 5,508 | 16.0 | 15.1 |
| 1994 | 5,591 | 16.6 | 15.8 |
| 1995 | 5,601 | 17.1 | 16.2 |
| 1996 | 6,062 | 18.1 | 17.4 |
| 1997 | 6,239 | 18.9 | 18.1 |

Source:
All Wales Perinatal Survey and Confidential Enquiry into Stillbirths and Deaths in Infancy
Office for National Statistics (live births to residents of Wales)

The World Health Organisation (WHO) does not make specific recommendations about rates of caesarean delivery which will inevitably vary from place to place and will reflect health, nutritional status of pregnant women and the level of maternity care provision. Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Organic Aid Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what payments he has proposed under the Organic Aid Scheme for (a) Arable Area Payments Scheme eligible land, (b) ineligible land and (c) unimproved grassland or rough grazing. [72619]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Subject to approval by the European Commission, the new payments rates available under the Organic Aid Scheme will be as follows:

£ per hectare

| | Year 1 | Year 2 | Year 3 | Year 4 | Year 5 | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| (a) AAPS eligible land | 225 | 135 | 50 | 20 | 20 | 450 |
| (b) ineligible land | 175 | 105 | 40 | 15 | 15 | 350 |
| (c) unimproved grassland/rough grazing | 25 | 10 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 50 |

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he decided to visit the United States of America. [73008]

Mr. Michael: In January I agreed to undertake an inward investment mission to North America fulfilling a promise given by my predecessor. Dates in March were decided upon following advice from officials and from the Welsh Development Agency. I took the decision to do so in January.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) reviews, (b) task forces and (c) advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71511]

Mr. Byers: Details of the reviews and task forces established by my Department since 1 May 1997, and of the reports published to date, are set out in the table. Expenditure on these reviews and task forces is not separately recorded, and could not be calculated without incurring disproportionate cost.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71275]

Mr. Byers: The DTI is acting to ensure that its policies meet the needs of disabled people and that we comply with our legal obligations. The Department already takes positive steps to make it easier for disabled people to make use of its services. We shall continue to do so, not only by complying fully with new duties in the Disability Discrimination Act but by aiming to exceed them where appropriate.

The Department has recently circulated guidance on mainstreaming to those with responsibility for policy development. This ensures that all new and existing policies and programmes are assessed for any adverse impact not only on disabled people, but on any minority or disadvantaged group and, where necessary, action is taken to remove or reduce any such impact.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71291]

Mr. Byers: During the year 1998–99 the Department allocated the sum of £31,000 for adjustments to information technology and specialist equipment for its staff with disabilities, excluding alterations to premises.

The Department does not separately record the proportion of its total expenditure which goes to the disabled people. However, the Department aims to take account of the needs of those with disabilities in the design of its programmes.

The above excludes the DTI's Executive Agencies, whose Chief Executives have delegated responsibility for disability issues in their Agency.

Ministerial Meetings (USA)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times Ministers in his Department have met their counterparts in the US Administration since 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved, and the name of the US counterpart. [71962]

Mr. Byers: My Ministers and I meet our US counterparts as and when necessary. Since 1 June 1998, there have been the following meetings:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry met William Daley, Commerce Secretary on 13 September 1998, (Johannesburg);

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry met Mrs. Charlene Barshefsky, US Trade Representative on 22 October 1998, (London);

The Minister for Science met Dr. Neil Lane, President's Scientific Adviser, on 4–6 December 1998, (Kyoto, Japan).

Biosafety Protocol, Colombia

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who will represent his Department at the Biosafety Protocol meeting in Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [72230]

Mr. Battle: A senior official from the Department of Trade and Industry was present in Cartagena, Colombia throughout the negotiations.

Media Allegations (Rebuttals)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) those units in his Department and (b) the number of departmental staff which are concerned with preparing rebuttals of allegations in the media; and what is (i) the total cost of their work, including salaries, and (ii) the number of rebuttals issued since May 1997. [71856]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 February 1999]: My Department has no units or staff who are exclusively required to prepare rebuttals of allegations in the media.

Lord Simon

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what systems are in place to ensure that Lord Simon does not see papers which could relate to his financial interests. [72801]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Following the sale of Lord Simon's shareholding in BP, and the transfer of his other shareholdings into a blind trust, no such arrangements are required.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Air Miles have been earned by him and each of his ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73325]

Mr. Byers: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of Air Miles was set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 141-42.

Detailed information on any Air Miles earned by Ministers as a result of official travel is not recorded centrally.

Tobacco and Alcohol Industries

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with representatives of the tobacco and alcohol industries concerning the future of their industries since his appointment. [72199]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 February 1999]: None, although my Officials continue to have regular contact with the Scotch Whisky Association to assist them in resolving many trade problems in a number of exporting markets. For example, at our request the EU has successfully challenged, through the World Trade Organisation, Japanese and Korean discriminatory tax regimes on spirits, and is presently pursuing another against Chile.

My officials also have contact with the Tobacco Manufacturers' Association to discuss issues of current concern to the industry.

Raw Cows' Milk

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he received, and from whom, between 30 January 1998 and 31 January 1999 concerning the Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation into the supply of raw cows' milk in Great Britain. [73350]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has received a number of letters from hon. Members and from members of the public regarding the investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) into the supply of raw milk in Great Britain. Those representations have been passed to the MMC for them to consider.

SCOTLAND

Radioactive Waste

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the conclusions of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee regarding the source of and pathways for highly active particles found at Dounreay and Sandside Beach; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [72332]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 25 February 1999]: My right hon. Friend expects to receive advice from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee shortly. The Committee itself publishes all the advice it gives to Government. A copy of the Committee's report will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Genetically Modified Food

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports he has received from Dr Arpad Pusztai of the Rowett Institute in Aberdeen; when he received them; and if he will place copies in the Library. [72337]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 25 February 1999]: A copy of the report produced by Dr. Pusztai in response to the report of the Rowett Research Institute's Audit Committee was received by The Scottish Office on 26 October 1998. A copy of Dr. Pusztai's report together with the Audit Committee's response to the report has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

National Lottery Funding

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much National Lottery funding has been distributed by (a) the National Lottery Charities Board (Scotland), (b) the Scottish Sports Council and (c) the Scottish Arts Council for projects in (i) Paisley, South Constituency and (ii) Renfrewshire Council area. [71429]

Mr. Banks: I have been asked to reply.

The Local Authority of Renfrewshire (which includes the awards for Paisley, South) has received £3,880,033 covering 123 awards; of these Paisley, South has received £2,210,097 covering 43 awards.

A breakdown of these is set out in the following table:

| Distributing Body | Data | Total |
|---|---|---|
| Paisley, South Constituency | | |
| Heritage Lottery Fund | Value of awards | £1,000,00 |
| | Number of awards | 1 |
| National Lottery Charities Board | Value of awards | £1,140,577 |
| | Number of awards | 40 |
| Scottish Arts Council | Value of awards | £69,520 |
| | Number of awards | 2 |
| Total value of awards | | £2,210,097 |
| Total number of awards | | 43 |
| Renfrewshire Council area | | |
| Heritage Lottery Fund | Value of awards | £1,035,200 |
| | Number of awards | 2 |
| National Lottery Charities Board | Value of awards | £1,500,324 |

TREASURY

Simon de Danser Case

Valerie Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the cost of escorting prisoners in the Simon de Danser case can be recovered from HM Customs and Excise by the Avon and Somerset Police on the same basis as additional costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence have been recovered. [72285]

Dawn Primarolo: No. The arrangement for escorting the prisoners to and from court in the Simon de Danser case was made by the police who are responsible for the costs. The Ministry of Defence costs were incurred during the investigation phase of this case and their arrangement with HM Customs and Excise is for cost recovery.

EU Code of Conduct Group

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1999, Official Report, column 217, on the EU Code of Conduct Group, if he will list those taxes other than corporation tax and equivalent taxes due for consideration by the Group. [72326]

Dawn Primarolo: The Group is considering business taxation measures which affect, or may affect, in a significant way the location of business activity in the Community.

DEFENCE

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what security clearance will be required for the NHS representative on Defence Medical Services management boards established under the review of defence medical services. [70897]

Mr. Spellar: The NHS representative will be subject to the normal security clearance procedures in the same way as an MOD employee.

Centre for Defence Medicine

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the shortlisted candidates for NHS hospitals to be associated with the Centre for Defence Medicine. [70870]

Mr. Spellar: A Statement of Requirement for the new Centre for Defence Medicine is currently being prepared. Expressions of interest from NHS Trusts will be sought once it is complete.

Ocean Wave Deployment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the Ocean Wave deployment; what assessment he has made of the benefits and value of it; and what military tasks were not carried out because of the involvement of personnel in it. [71939]

Mr. Spellar: Ocean Wave was the deployment of a Royal Navy Task Group to the Gulf, Far East and Asia Pacific regions between 13 January and 28 August 1997.

Clear military and strategic objectives were set for the Task Group prior to the deployment. Ocean Wave demonstrated the UK's continued commitment to the Asia-Pacific region after the hand-over of Hong Kong. It underlined our interest in the promotion of regional peace and stability, the protection of freedom of international trade, and promoted bilateral relations by the joint working between military forces in the Asia-Pacific region. There was also considerable benefit to the UK defence industry.

In addition, the Royal Navy were able to test their readiness and to assess how well equipment, procedures and personnel stand up in a realistic scenario with integrated forces. Such interactive training is achievable only when a number of diverse assets are deployed together over a prolonged period.

The additional costs directly attributable to Ocean Wave were about £9.8 million. The main elements of this additional sum were port and harbour dues, Suez Canal transit fees, operational support, additional fuel costs, local overseas allowances, ships taken up from trade and travel subsistence.

Planning for Ocean Wave commenced 2½ years prior to the deployment taking place, so that we were able to ensure that all routine or contingent tasks were also undertaken.

Army Dismissals (Bullying)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army personnel have been dismissed for bullying, or related offences, in each of the last five years. [72932]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency; and what was the figure at its inception. [72957]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from B. J. Cash to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 26 February 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about how many people are currently employed by the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency; and what was the figure at its Inception, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency.

The number of people currently employed by the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency as at 31 January 1999 is 574, comprising of 221 military and 353 civilians.

The number employed at its inception on 1 July 1992 was 541, comprising of 285 military and 256 civilians.

The increase in total numbers of staff is as a result of the Agency expanding its responsibilities to include some overseas locations and the absorption of the MOD Van and Mail Services in the UK.

Army Training and Recruiting Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Army Training and Recruiting Agency published its report for 1998–99; and what was the cost of production of the report. [71904]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 25 February 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. A. Gordon to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 26 February 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the date of publication, and cost, of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency's report for 1998–99 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Deputy Chief Executive of the Agency.

The 1998–99 Annual Report and Accounts for the Army Training and Recruiting Agency are due to be published in July this year. As yet no accurate estimate of the cost of their production is available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the impact on her Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71266]

Mr. McFall: Northern Ireland Departments are acting to ensure that their policies meet the needs of disabled people and that they comply with their legal requirements under the Disability Discrimination Act. Departments already take positive steps to make it easier for disabled people to make use of their services. They shall continue to do so, not only by complying fully with new duties in the Act but by aiming to exceed them where appropriate.

Northern Ireland Departments are committed to equality of opportunity and treatment and are required to promote fair treatment and avoid unfavourable impacts not only on disabled people but on other minority or disadvantaged groups. "Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment" guidelines aim to ensure that issues of equality and equity condition policy making and actions, whether in regulatory and administrative functions or in the delivery of services to the public.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the parliamentary constituencies which she has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71344]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 15 February 1999]: I have visited the following Parliamentary constituencies in an official capacity in the past 12 months:

Northern Ireland

East Antrim
North Antrim
South Antrim
Belfast, East Belfast, North
Belfast, South
Belfast, West
North Down
South Down
Fermanagh and South Tyrone
Foyle
Lagan Valley
East Londonderry
Newry and Armagh
Strangford
West Tyrone
Upper Bann

England

Warrington, South

Scotland

Edinburgh, Central
Galloway and Upper Nithsdale
Glasgow, Kelvin
Kilmarnock and Loudoun

Wales

Torfaen.

Under-age Smoking

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have to discourage smoking by those aged under 16 in Northern Ireland in 1999–2000. [71536]

Mr. McFall: The Government set out their proposals for a comprehensive strategy to tackle smoking across the United Kingdom in the White Paper "Smoking Kills". the White Paper identifies a range of measures that will help protect young people. These include:

minimal tobacco advertising in shops;
tough enforcement on under age sales;
proof of age cards; and strong rules on the siting of cigarette vending machines.

A consultation paper setting out a proposed Northern Ireland implementation programme will be produced later this year and will include measures to ensure a regional focus for the proposed national public information campaign, a prime target of which will be young people.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the incidence was of cigarette smoking among (a) children under 16 and (b) adults in 1998 in Northern Ireland. [71535]

Mr. McFall: The latest available data for children's smoking are from 1997–98 and are available only for children aged 10 to 16. The latest available data for adults are from 1996–97. The incidence of cigarette smoking in Northern Ireland was (a) 19% among children aged 10 to 16—17% males and 21% females—and (b) 29% among adults—31% males and 27% females.

PRIME MINISTER

Overseas Publications

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 642, on overseas publications, if he will deposit in the Library copies of the English versions of the articles he has written for foreign newspapers and journals. [71144]

The Prime Minister: We do not keep a systematic record of the final printed versions or articles written by the Prime Minister for foreign newspapers.

Devolution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the continuing responsibilities of the Lord Chancellor in relation to devolution. [70848]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 February 1999]: The Lord Chancellor chairs the Cabinet Committee on devolution policy. Its terms of reference are:

"To consider policy and other issues arising from the Government's policies for devolution to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and the regions of England and to promote and oversee progress of the relevant legislation through Parliament and its subsequent implementation."

Correspondence

Mr. Trend: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) of 14 January, on the subject of EU fraud and mismanagement. [73265]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 230.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions, when he has met the Minister for Science, genetically modified foods or crops have been discussed. [73025]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 February 1999]: I have regular meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others on a wide range of subjects. As with previous administrations it is not my practice to provide details of confidential discussions.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions, he or his officials have held discussions with (a) Monsanto, (b) Novartis and (c) Agrevo. [73036]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 February 1999]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 232–33.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans the NMEC has to offer concessionary tickets to the Millennium Experience to families on means-tested benefits. [69672]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC) ticketing strategy and pricing structure aims to ensure that as many people as possible who wish to visit the Dome will be able to do so. The structure will include a range of group, family, student and other discounts. In addition, the company is working closely with the travel trade to ensure that attractive packages combining travel and Dome entry are available. In drawing up its pricing structure and discount categories the Company has been informed by the experience and systems of other major visitor attractions both in the public and private sectors. Concessionary tickets for families on means-tested benefits is not standard practice and would be particularly difficult to introduce in a way that would prevent abuse. The NMEC does not therefore propose to introduce such concessions. The Government, and the Millennium Commission, have endorsed this approach.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications have been made for (a) branded restaurants and (b) other catering facilities at the Dome. [67267]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) announced on 18 December agreement with Granada Food Services Ltd., and Letheby Christopher for the provision, respectively of public service catering and hospitality catering. On 26 January the NMEC announced contracts for ten branded catering outlets at the Dome. Contracts for the remaining catering outlets will be announced shortly. The process prior to the appointment of these caterers involved the company in discussions with about one hundred potential caterers; the issue of thirty-one invitations to tender; and interviews with and presentations from sixteen companies in support of their tenders.

English Sports Council

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the English Sports Council's grant-in-aid was spent on (a) staff costs, excluding national centres, (b) administrative expenses, (c) publicity/promotions/communications, (d) grants to national governing bodies, (e) grants to the National Coaching Foundation, (f) sports science, (g) sports medicine, (h) national centres, (i) grants to other national sports bodies, excluding NGBs and (j) regional support in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) what are the provisional spending plans for 1999–2000 to 2001–02. [71745]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The information the hon. Member requested on the English Sports Council's grant-in-aid expenditure is included in the following table.

Percentage

BBC

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the BBC about the amount of money they intend to spend on their Internet and on-line services. [72678]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 24 February 1999]: None. In granting approval for the launch of BBC Online, my right hon. Friend was satisfied that proposed expenditure on BBC Online represented effective value for money in delivering a key part of the BBC's public service remit.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the representations he has made to the BBC on political content since 1 May 1997; [73689]

(2) what representations he has made to the BBC concerning the programme, "One Man and His Dog". [73691]

Janet Anderson: None.

Radio Licences

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the Statutory Instruments made under paragraph 11(5) of Part III of Schedule 2 of the Broadcasting Act 1990; and what plans he has for further statutory instruments under that provision. [73146]

Mr. Chris Smith: Paragraph 11(5) of Part III of Schedule 2 of the Broadcasting Act 1996 sets out the restrictions on participation in companies holding digital radio multiplex licences. There have been no Statutory Instruments under that paragraph to date. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting announced on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 322–23, I intend to lay an order revising these restrictions before the House shortly.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to consult on the relaxation of restrictions on ownership of national (a) analogue radio licences and (b) digital radio multiplex licences. [73145]

Mr. Chris Smith: I consulted broadcasters, broadcast regulators, consumer groups and other interested parties on the relaxation of the restrictions on participation in companies holding digital radio multiplex licences on 26 November last year. I have no immediate plans to consult on the present restrictions on the ownership of analogue radio licences.

Religious Broadcasting

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) which (a) bodies and (b) individuals advise the (i) Independent Television Commission and (ii) Radio Authority on religious broadcasting; [73147]

(2) who appoints members of the Central Religious Advisory Committee; and if he will list the membership of that body. [73195]

Janet Anderson: The Central Religious Advisory Committee (CRAC) advises the Independent Television Commission, the Radio Authority and the BBC on policy matters relating to religion. The members of the Committee are appointed by the ITC and the BBC. The membership of CRAC is as follows.

| Membership | |
|---|---|
| Chirman | |
| The Most Reverend and Rt. Hon. Dr. David Hope | Anglican Archbishop of York |
| Deputy Chairman | |
| The Rt. Rev. Peter Smith | Catholic Bishop of East Anglia |

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Kent Magistrates' Courts' Committee

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list incidents of (a) fraud and (b) gross mismanagement reported or referred to (i) his Department and (ii) HM Magistrates' Courts' Inspectorate relating to (1) payments by and (2) funding of the Kent Magistrates' Courts' Committee from 1 January 1996 to date. [72655]

Mr. Hoon: One potential incident has been reported in respect of the Kent MCC. It has not yet been resolved. There have been exchanges between the Department, the Magistrates' Courts' Inspectorate, the Magistrates' Court Committee and the paying authority and advice has been given and recommendations made. What further action is needed will depend on decisions by the MCC and the paying authority in the light of legal advice they have taken.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the applications he has received for commercial planting of genetically modified crops since 1 May 1997. [72207]

Mr. Meacher: Applications for commercial planting of genetically modified crops need to be submitted to a Member State acting as a competent authority under Directive 90/220/EEC. The UK has not directly received any such applications. It has received dossiers forwarded from other competent authorities for an opinion on whether approval should be granted, as follows:

| Date submitted | Competent authority | Notifier | Description of GMO | Scope of application |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 24 October 1997 | Denmark | I.F Trifolium A/S Monsanto Europe SA Danisco Seed | Fodder beet modified for tolerance to glyphosate herbicides | Production of fodder beet in EC |
| 17 December 1997 | Spain | Monsanto Europe | Cotton modified for tolerance to glyphosate herbicides | The same purposes as non GM commercial cotton varieties |
| 17 December 1997 | Spain | Zeneca Plant Science | Tomatoes modified for delayed ripening | Manufacture into food products |
| 17 December 1997 | Spain | Monsanto Europe | Cotton modified for insect resistance | The same purposes as non-GM commercial cotton varieties |
| 23 June 1998 | Netherlands | Dekalb Genetics Corporation | Maize modified for resistance to European corn borer and for tolerance to glufosinate-ammonium herbicides | The same purposes as non-GM maize grain and processed maize products |
| 14 August 1998 | Netherlands | Florigene Europe BV | Carnations modified for increased vaselife | For production of cut flowers and horticulture |
| 14 August 1998 | Netherlands | Florigene Europe BV | Carnations modified for altered flower colour | For production of cut flowers and horticulture |

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by (a) title, (b) name of author and (c) date of receipt the advice that he has received about the (1) environmental and (2) health consequences of the (i) growth and (ii) sale of genetically modified crops in the United Kingdom; and if he will publish that advice. [73511]

Mr. Meacher: The Secretary of State is advised on the environmental and health consequences of genetically modified crops by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE). The Committee publishes an annual report which is available in the Library. DETR and the Committee have also produced a series of guidance notes and DETR has produced a number of research reports to inform ACRE's advice. These are all published and are listed in the annual reports.

The Deliberate Release legislation requires the Secretary of State to seek advice from ACRE on all consent applications. ACRE advise as to whether or not a consent should be granted and the conditions which should be attached to a consent. As the legislation requires certain information to be made available to the public, DETR maintains a public register of all consent applications and the advice on them from ACRE.

English Nature has also published advice calling for the regulatory process to include an assessment of the risks to wildlife in its "Position Statement on Genetically Modified Organisms", which is also available in the Library.

Greater London Authority

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions where the new Greater London Authority will be located; and if he will make a statement. [73922]

Mr. Raynsford: I have decided to proceed with the scheme for a new building on the London Bridge City site proposed by CIT Markborough Ltd., incorporating an outstanding design by Foster and Partners. The building, on a major brown field site on the south bank of the River Thames, by Tower Bridge, will be very energy efficient, include the provision of significant civic space in and around the building and improve public access to the river.

We shall be working with the developer and his architect over the coming weeks to develop the building design taking account of comments that have been expressed about it, and to agree the detailed terms on which the building will be available. Subject to a satisfactory resolution of these discussions and the developer's securing planning permission quickly, I anticipate that the building will be ready for occupation in 2001.

This concludes a major and very competitive search for a suitable location for the headquarters of the Greater London Authority (GLA). From a long list of 55 initial sites, we invited the developers of seven sites to submit outline proposals which, after a careful assessment, was reduced to a short-list of two. The developers were then invited to submit detailed designs by two of the country's leading architects, for London Bridge City and Victoria House in Bloomsbury Square to show how they would meet the GLA's needs.

Both schemes have since been carefully assessed against the following criteria: location, interior and external design concepts, accessibility, operational suitability, the impact on the environment and value for money. I have also taken into account the views of my design advisory group and the views of Londoners who were invited to give an opinion on both schemes when visiting exhibitions about them late last year.

The new building will not be ready before the Greater London Authority assumes its responsibilities on 3 July 2000. We are currently considering the options for accommodating the new Authority in the interim period and I will make a further announcement in due course.

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with bus companies about introducing wheelchair-accessible low-level buses; what plans he has to speed up the introduction of such buses; and if he will make a statement. [73141]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are introducing regulations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 for all new buses to be wheelchair accessible. An informal consultation on regulations to require improved access to buses and coaches took place in 1998. Copies of the consultation document were circulated widely, including to all bus and coach operators. Meetings were also held with representatives of both manufacturing and operating industry; and a formal consultation on the draft regulations is planned for this year.

The regulations will progressively require a lower first step height, provision for wheelchair users and other passengers with a wide range of disabilities, starting in January 2000. End dates are also being proposed for all regulated buses and coaches to ensure that over a reasonable timescale they all become fully accessible.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with local councils about the design of kerbs with regard to wheelchair accessibility; if he has discussed kerb design with charities for the blind; and if he will make a statement. [73142]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department first issued advice on dropped kerbs almost twenty years ago. Last month we issued new technical guidance to local authorities "Guidance on the use of tactile paving surfaces". The first chapter of that document deals with the design of dropped kerbs for wheelchair users and the provision of tactile paving at such installations to warn blind and partially sighted people that they have reached the edge of the footway. The advice was produced after consultation with local authorities, disability organisations, including those representing blind and partially sighted people, and other interested parties.

We propose to support the advice contained in this document on dropped kerbs with a Traffic Advisory Leaflet which will be issued to local authorities. The leaflet should be available later this year.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce legislation to ensure that all new buildings have wheelchair access to all floors via front and back doors. [73137]

Mr. Raynsford: Part M of the Building Regulations, which applies to all new buildings, requires that reasonable provision shall be made for disabled people to gain access to and to use the building. The Approved Document which gives guidance on meeting this requirement says that the requirement will be met by making it reasonably safe and convenient for disabled people: to gain access to and within buildings other than dwellings and to use them; and from 25 October 1999 to be able to visit new dwellings and to use the principal storey. For the purposes of Building Regulations disabled people are defined as people who have an impairment which limits their ability to walk or which requires them to use a wheelchair for mobility or who have impaired hearing or sight.

The provisions for access and facilities in buildings other than dwellings are for the benefit of disabled people who are visitors to the building or who work in it. One of the objectives of Part M is that disabled people should be able to use the principal entrance provided for visitors or customers and an entrance which is intended, exclusively, for members of staff. The provisions are not described in terms of front and back doors. Another objective of Part M is that in designing buildings, it is important that disabled people are able to reach the facilities that are provided within them and to use them. To this end reasonable provision is to be made for vertical circulation within a building other than a dwelling.

In view of this, I have no plans to introduce further legislation.

Train Information (Blind People)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack regarding the displaying of information which can be understood by blind people; what discussions he has had regarding the quality of broadcasts made on stations about the relaying of train information; and if he will make a statement. [73144]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We work closely with Railtrack on a wide range of issues affecting the needs of disabled rail travellers, including those who are blind. Railtrack, in common with other service providers, are subject to the provisions of Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. From October 1999, service providers will have to take reasonable steps to change practices, policies or procedures which make it impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people to use a service and provide auxiliary aids or services, for example induction loops or information in Braille, which would enable disabled people to use a service.

My Department (in collaboration with representative bodies of local authorities and the professional institutions) is also producing advice for service providers in the transport sector on best practice in meeting the needs of disabled people. That advice, which is due to be published later this year, will include guidance on both audible and visual information.

Foleshill Gasworks

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give the reasons for not calling in the planning applications for a new ground for Coventry City Football Club, retail and other development at Foleshill Gasworks. [73564]

Mr. Prescott: It is not my Department's practice to give reasons for not calling in planning applications. The Courts have endorsed this view.

Under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, my power to call in planning applications is discretionary and I exercise it very selectively. My policy is not to interfere with the jurisdiction of local planning authorities unless it is necessary to do so.

Having had regard to our procedures and all our planning policy guidance, I did not consider that it was appropriate to call in the application for Arena 2000.

Water Companies (Investment Programmes)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will decide the detailed investment programmes for water companies to undertake between 2000 and 2005; and if he will make a statement. [74163]

Mr. Meacher: The Government published "Raising the Quality" on 23 September 1998. This document gave guidance to the Director General of Water Services on the environmental and quality objectives to be achieved by the water industry between 2000 and 2005.

The Director General of Water Services requested that decisions on the detailed programmes needed to achieve these objectives should be made by the end of February, to enable water companies to prepare their business plans.

I shall make a detailed announcement on Monday of the investment programmes to be delivered by 2005. The terms of the announcement will be placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

LEAs (Competitive Bidding)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many bids in respect of the initiatives in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000 involving competitive bidding from local education authorities were (i) made and (ii) successful in each education action zone. [63981]

Ms Estelle Morris: Table 1 shows the bids from local education authorities for schools in education action zones for the School Inclusion: Pupil Support Standards Fund Grant 1999–2000. Table 2 shows bids from local education authorities for the Early Excellence Centre Programme.

There are no other initiatives for which this information can be given as bids are either: (i) made by local authorities but not in respect of named schools; or (ii) made by local education authorities in respect of named schools, but the information on which schools is not held by the department and/or identifying them would incur disproportionate cost.

Au Pairs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to regulate the use of au pairs for childcare; and if he will make a statement. [71974]

Ms Hodge: Following our consultation on the regulation of day care services, we are considering the scope of the regulatory framework and will announce our plans in due course.

Class Sizes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children aged 8 to 11 years in South Gloucestershire were in classes of (a) 35 or above and (b) 31 or above in (i) September 1996, (ii) September 1997 and (iii) September 1998. [69694]

Ms Estelle Morris: The available information for January 1996–98 and September 1998 is shown, information for September was collected for the first time in 1998.

Education SSAs

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the secondary school (11 to 15) standard spending assessment per pupil in (a) City of London and (b) Rotherham; and if he will make a statement. [72958]

Ms Estelle Morris: £9,837 for the City of London and £2,891 for Rotherham when calculated using the overall secondary SSA and the number of pupils aged 11–15 educated by each authority. However, after stripping out the effect of the SSA element for resident pupils, the difference between the two authorities would fall to 1.6:1, which in this case is a better measure of the real difference in secondary SSA funding per pupil.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each English local authority the percentage of the standard spending assessments for education per pupil for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools which was transferred by the local education authority to schools in the last year for which figures are available. [72885]

Ms Estelle Morris: This question cannot be answered in the form in which it has been tabled. Education SSAs have a wider coverage than funding which is delegated to primary and secondary schools. They have to cover costs such as home-to-school transport, school meals, special schools, and some central costs which cannot be delegated to schools, such as the LEA contribution to the Standards Fund. In addition, pupils are counted at different dates for the purposes of calculating education SSAs and delegated school funding respectively.

Education Budget (Staffordshire)

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much new spending on education in Staffordshire since May 1997 has resulted from (a) changes in the standard spending assessment distribution, (b) ring-fenced programmes and (c) other central Government funding. [73111]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table sets out the information requested.

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| SSA distribution changes | 2.1 |
| Extra ring-fenced programmes | 23 |
| Other central government funding | 10.7 |

Notes:

1. Education SSAs were changed in 1998–99 to distribute the under fives sub-block on the basis of provision rather than population.

2. The increase in ring-fenced funding through the Standards Fund includes the LEA contribution, as well as Government grant. For most Standards Fund grants in 1997–98 the DfEE contribution was 60 per cent., whereas in 1998–99 it was 50 per cent.

3. Other central government funding consists of additional loan sanction above the 1997–98 baseline figure and the New Deal for Schools to fund additional investment in school buildings. New Deal for Schools grant was fully funded by DfEE.

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of Employment Service offices are accessible by wheelchair. [73143]

Mr. Blunkett: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Foster to Mr. Laurence Robertson, dated 25 February 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked Leigh Lewis to reply direct to your question concerning the percentage of Employment Service offices that are wheelchair accessible. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to Mr. Lewis as Chief Executive of the Agency. I am replying in his absence.

For each of the past three years, the Employment Service has carried out an annual audit of the progress on its planned programme of works to improve the accessibility of Employment Service offices to people with disabilities. The annual audit is undertaken to ensure that we comply with the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act within the timescales set. The audit indicates whether our buildings have wheelchair access, loop hearing and disabled toilets.

The latest audit results show that from a total of 1180 premises, 93% have either equal or special wheelchair access for clients. The remaining 7% which do not allow wheelchair access offer alternative arrangements for access to our services, to clients with special needs, either arranging interviews at a nearby office with disabled access or by visiting clients in their homes. Of these offices, there are proposals to remedy difficulties in 12 of them next year. The remaining offices will present longer term difficulties because structural or other constraints mean that it is not possible to replace steps with ramps, or the office is located on an upper floor of a building where it is not physically possible to install a lift or chair lift.

We are of course, exploring all feasible means of overcoming these obstacles to access. Some 64% of Jobcentres have disabled toilets, and 72% have loop hearing facilities. It is planned to increase the provision to 66% and 90% respectively by April 1999 as part of our planned improvement programme.

I hope that this information will help reassure you that the Employment Service is doing all it practically can to provide access to its buildings for people with disabilities.

Didbrook School

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 1999, Official Report, column 706, what figures have been submitted by Gloucestershire County Council to his Department as to the cost of upgrading Didbrook School, following the proposed closure of Toddington School and a subsequent amalgamation of the two schools on the Didbrook site. [73156]

Ms Estelle Morris: Gloucestershire County Council has indicated that the overall gross capital cost of implementing these proposals would be £670,700, offset by capital receipts of some £244,000 and savings in recurrent expenditure.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

India (Christians)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of India regarding attacks made on Christians; if he has discussed the provision of protection for India's Christians; and if he will make a statement. [73148]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 395–96.

Panel 2000

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the members of the Panel 2000 Task Force, on how many occasions it has met since its establishment; who was present at each meeting; what was discussed; what its work in progress is; and what conclusions it has reached to date. [72966]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: The members of Panel 2000 are listed. There have been five plenary meetings of the Panel; members, or their representatives, were present as indicated. Panel members received no fee. Additional ideas were generated by sub-groups and input from others in the public and private sectors. The work of the Panel is reflected in a Consultation Document published on 10 September 1998 and placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Following the consultation period the Panel met on 17 December and confirmed the recommendations it had contained. These are now in the process of being implemented, with the contribution of expertise from individual Panel members.

Departmental Expenditure

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to reduce the central administration costs of his Department. [73270]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: The Department's efficiency programme is set out in the White Paper "Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability" (Cm 4181, page 77). It includes consolidation of business units that supply services within the FCO into a Service Organisation which will lead to a smaller central administration. Together with on-going efficiency reviews and further devolution of budgets for support services to operational consumers, these changes are expected to yield efficiency gains of some £7 million by 2001–02.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total expenditure of his Department on (a) property and land purchases and (b) vehicle purchases, from 1 April 1997 to the latest date for which information is available; and what expenditure on property purchases is planned for the next two years. [72813]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: Since 1 April 1997 the total expenditure by the FCO on (a) property and land purchases was £9.41m and on (b) vehicles £7.42m. We are planning to buy property in the next two years but, if we were to announce the details in advance, it could prejudice our ability to secure better value for money. Decisions to purchase will be taken in the light of value for money considerations including local market conditions, prevailing exchange rates and if, it is a replacement property, the ability to sell the existing building.

Pakistan

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the USA about the request by Pakistan to lift the restrictions under the Pressler amendment. [73273]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: We have made no such representations.

Indonesia

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government concerning the investigation into the deaths of Malcolm Rennie and Brian Peters. [73272]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: We have regularly raised the matter of the deaths in 1975 of the British journalists at Balibo, East Timor, with the Indonesian government. I did so with President Habibie in October and he undertook to look into the matter again.

Privatisations

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to privatise the provision of (a) language training, (b) translation, (c) interpretation, (d) IT, (e) deployment of security officers, (f) security vetting procedures, (g) conference organising and (h) visit organising and (i) printing and publishing. [73271]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: With the exception of London based security guards (intended to be privatised next year), there are no plans for wholesale privatisation of any FCO support services.

Human Rights Workshop (New Delhi)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Human Rights Workshop organised by the UN High Commissioner's office in New Delhi. [73193]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 February 1999]: Our High Commission in New Delhi has had contacts with some of the participants in the workshop, which was organised by the Indian Government and opened by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. The High Commission was not invited to attend the workshop.

Technology Export Curbs (Russia)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of allegations that Russian companies have broken curbs on technology exports. [73253]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 February 1999]: We are concerned that a number of Russian companies and institutions may have exported technology and goods to organisations in countries of proliferation concern. Our concerns have been raised with the Russians by Ministers and officials.

Leakage of this kind is to not consistent with Russia's commitments under the terms of the export control regimes of which Russia is a member.

Intelligence constraints prevent us naming any institutions which we suspect of involvement in technology leakage.

Middle East Conference

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards the Palestinian Authorities' request for an international conference to discuss 4 May 1999. [73192]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: We have received no request from the Palestinian Authority for a conference to discuss 4 May, nor are we aware of any such conference.

British Embassies

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date he authorised the creation of a new organisation to supply logistical support to British embassies. [73269]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: Setting up a Service Organisation to deliver service to the FCO and Posts abroad was agreed as part of the CSR process in March 1998, and included in the CSR Implementation Plan given to Parliament.

China

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government concerning (a) the ratification of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, (b) the detention of political prisoners, (c) the policy of re-education through labour and (d) the China Democracy Party. [73194]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: Through our bilateral human rights dialogue, we have urged China to ratify and implement the International Covenant on Economic Social and Cultural Rights, suggested reforms to the system of re-education through labour and raised the cases of individuals detained in China, including a review of the cases of all those detained for "counter-revolutionary" offences. The recent imprisonment of pro-democracy activists is unacceptable. We have made our views clear to the Chinese authorities, both bilaterally and in conjunction with EU partners and others. I have also raised our concerns with the Chinese Ambassador.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights in China. [73276]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: We continue to have many serious concerns about human rights in China, and the recent imprisonment of Chinese pro-democracy activists is a particularly worrying development. We have been addressing these concerns directly with the Chinese authorities through the continuing bilateral and EU human rights dialogues. With our EU partners, we are reviewing the progress made in these dialogues and shall be deciding in due course what position the EU will take on China at the forthcoming UN Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other EU foreign ministers regarding human rights in China and the possibility of a resolution on the subject at the United Nations; and if he will make a statement. [73245]

Mr. Fatchett: We are concerned at recent developments in the area of human rights in China. We are in regular contact with our EU partners on how best to bring about positive change there. Together with our partners, we are reviewing the progress made in our dialogue with the Chinese authorities on this subject, and shall be deciding in due course what position the EU will take at the UN Commission on Human Rights.

Yemen Trial

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the findings of Dr. Christopher McIlroy following his examination of the five British citizens on trial in the Yemen. [73274]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 25 February 1999]: The decision to publish Dr. McIlroy's report belongs to the families and representatives of those detained, who commissioned the report.

Morocco

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to secure a copy of the autopsy report and other information relating to the death of Sara Barhandi in Morocco and to make that available to her family. [73082]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Consulate-General in Casablanca has obtained copies of the police and autopsy reports into the death of Sara Barhandi. Copies of these reports are being sent to the FCO and will be forwarded to Sara Barhandi's mother as soon as possible.

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Morocco requesting an inquest into the reported death of Sara Barhandi. [73081]

Mr. Fatchett: None. The autopsy report shows that Sara Barhandi died of natural causes.

EU Commissioners

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made on the suitability of (a) Padraig Flynn, (b) Edith Cresson and (c) Manuel Marin as EU Commissioners; and if he will make a statement. [73178]

Ms Quin: None. The Committee of the Wise set up by the European Commission and European Parliament is to establish by 15 March the extent to which the Commission, either collectively or individually, bears responsibility for the recent allegations of fraud, mismanagement and nepotism.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71270]

Mr. Morley: The Department has already taken positive steps to meet the needs of disabled people using its services—for example, the provision of information in alternative formats such as Braille where requested—and is improving access to its buildings. These efforts will continue to ensure compliance with the law and wherever possible, best practice.

The Department has in place guidance on mainstreaming to ensure that all new and existing policies are assessed for any adverse impact on different groups. Policies must comply with the law, and action taken to remove or reduce any adverse impact on these groups where necessary. This complements the guidance "Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment" which the Cabinet Office issued to all Government Departments last November.

Flood Defences (Edgware and Burnt Oak)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress on the flood defence plans for Edgware and Burnt Oak. [72296]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry provided the Environment Agency with feedback in January on the technical, economic and environmental aspects of their outline flood alleviation strategy for the whole of the Silk Stream Catchment. The Agency are continuing to prepare a more detailed strategy with a view to obtaining the necessary approvals.

Mink

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will write to appropriate district councils and other relevant authorities outlining his Department's contingency plan for dealing with the release of large numbers of farmed mink. [72280]

Mr. Morley: Officials are in correspondence with appropriate local authorities and arranging meetings to discuss contingency plans in respect of released mink.

Biosafety Protocol, Colombia

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who will represent his Department at the Biosafety Protocol meeting in Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [72226]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 207.

Genetically Modified Material

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of those he has nominated to the Advisory Committee to Her Majesty's Government on Releases of Genetic Material into the Environment, together with (a) their qualifications (b) details of relevant (i) public and (ii) private interests and (c) dates of appointment; if he will make a statement on the resources allocated to the Committee; and if he will set out the references to any of the Committee's published reports. [72557]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 205–06.

Pilot Projects

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the pilot projects instigated by his Department since 1 May 1997, indicating the area in which each pilot took, or is taking, place. [72635]

Mr. Morley: The list of pilot projects instigated by MAFF since 1 May 1997 is as follows:

Arable Stewardship Pilot Scheme—This project aims to help restore wildlife in arable farmland areas. Grants are available in two areas, East Anglia and West Midlands. This is a three-year pilot scheme, launched in January 1998.

The Uplands Experiment—This project involves an integrated approach to a number of existing grant schemes including Countryside Stewardship rather than a new scheme and will be available in two areas, Forest of Bowland in Lancashire and Bodmin Moor in Cornwall. This is a 2 year pilot due to be launched on 1 March.

"Operation Gangmaster"—This project seeks to clamp down on exploitative agricultural gangmasters: co-ordinated enforcement by up to 8 agencies of legislation relevant to casual and seasonal workers, in East Anglia/East Midland area. It began in the 1998 summer season.

Flood and Coastal Defence Capital Programme—The Environment Agency, in liaison with MAFF, is undertaking a formal test of the market on two pilot Public Private Partnership (Private Finance Initiative) projects—at Pevensey Bay in Sussex and Broadland in Norfolk. Both schemes have been included on the HM Treasury list of "significant projects" and have been given "pathfinder status". Invitation to Negotiate documents were issued on Pevensey in September 1998 and Broadland in October 1998, and the Agency will continue negotiations with selected consortiums with a view to contracts being let in Autumn 1999. The wider application of this procurement approach to the flood and coastal defence programme will be examined in the light of experience gained from these two pilot projects.

A pilot study in the UK is being conducted in preparation for a National Survey on the "Microbiological quality and Heat Processing of Cows Milk".

A project on the development and testing of a manual designed to help farmers minimise waste was completed in February 1998. Areas covered were Cheshire, Herefordshire, Lancashire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, and Dyfed.

A large-scale anonymous postal survey of British sheep farmers concerning the incidence of scrapie took place in November/December 1998 from which the data are presently being analysed. Two pilot studies preceded this survey:

(i) In February 1998, a pilot study of 20 farmers in England and Wales nominated by their veterinary surgeons was conducted to investigate whether a survey of sheep farmers could obtain a valid estimate of the incidence of sheep scrapie.

(ii) A pilot study conducted in May-June 1998 trialled questionnaires amongst 300 sheep farmers throughout Great Britain.

Economic Evaluation of the Sheep Annual Premium Scheme—United Kingdom.

Inhumane Slaughtering

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the total number of cattle and sheep inhumanely slaughtered in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [72715]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Inhumane slaughter would contravene the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995 which implement the provisions of a 1993 EU Directive. The Meat Hygiene Service enforces these rules on a daily basis in licensed slaughterhouses and the State Veterinary Service monitors compliance on farms and other premises. It is not feasible to assess how many animals may have been slaughtered in contravention of the law: however, the Government seek full compliance with these regulations and does not hesitate to take action where there is evidence of contraventions. Prosecution action has been taken in 13 case since the regulations were introduced in April 1995.

Organic Farming

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what payments he has proposed under the Organic Aid Scheme for (a) Arable Area Payments Scheme eligible land, (b) ineligible land and (c) unimproved grassland or rough grazing. [72620]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The proposed rates of aid under the Organic Farming Scheme in England are as follows:

£/ha

| Type of land | Year 1 | Year 2 | Year 3 | Year 4 | Year 5 | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Eligible for AAPS or under permanent crops | 225 | 135 | 50 | 20 | 20 | 450 |
| Improved land not eligible for AAPS | 175 | 105 | 40 | 15 | 15 | 350 |
| Unimproved land | 25 | 10 | 5 | 5 | 5 | 50 |

Mr. Soley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) financial and (b) other support he is currently giving to organic farming. [72960]

Mr. Morley: Support for organic farming is delivered in the following ways:

under the Organic Aid Scheme, payments are made to farmers who convert to organic farming methods. Payments in England for this financial year total £776,567 to end December 1998. The amount paid in 1997–98 was £570,614. Subject to the approval of Parliament, a new scheme, the Organic Farming Scheme, will be introduced in Spring in which the rates of aid for most types of land will be almost doubled. Payments in England are estimated to increase to a total of £9 million by year 2000; there is a dedicated research and development programme. Expenditure for the current financial year is estimated at £1.5 million and expected to increase to £2 million in 1999–2000;

MAFF funds the Organic Conversion Information Service (OCIS) which operates a "Helpline" providing advice to potential organic farmers and offers free on-farm advisory visits.

Minister for Science

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions have been held between his Department and the Minister for Science concerning GM foods or crops since July 1998. [73124]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 February 1999]: This Department has had no discussions with the Minister for Science on either of these two issues.

Recombinant Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to validate safety tests in the USA and Canada on Monsanto's genetically engineered bovine growth hormone recombinant bovine somatotropin prior to consideration of its approval in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [73259]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 February 1999]: The use of recombinant bovine somatotropin (rBST) is subject to a European Union moratorium, which is likely to be reviewed before it expires on 31 December. There could be no unilateral decision in the UK to approve its use. I have asked the Veterinary Products Committee to review recent scientific evidence, including evidence from the USA and Canada, on the safety of rBST in order to inform the Government in preparation for EU discussions on the moratorium.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 1 March 1999

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Drugs Companies

Mr. Austin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will refer to the Serious Fraud Office recent allegations that irregular and unauthorised payments have been made by a drugs company (a) to avoid tax and (b) to encourage doctors to prescribe certain drugs; and if he will make a statement. [73527]

The Attorney-General: Section 1(3) of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 empowers the Director of the Serious Fraud Office to investigate any suspected offence which appears to her on reasonable grounds to involve serious or complex fraud. If my hon. Friend has relevant evidence or information, he should make it available to the Director of the Serious Fraud Office.

WALES

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his current estimate is of the number of households of working age in which there is no-one in work for each local authority area in Wales. [72641]

Mr. Hain: According to the Spring 1998 Labour Force Survey household dataset, there were an estimated 195,000 working-age households in Wales with no-one in employment; a breakdown by local authority area is not available due to the sample size.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Primary Class Sizes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of ordinary classes in primary schools contained more than 30 pupils in January 1998. [73110]

Mr. Hain: In January 1998, 28 per cent. (2,735) of ordinary classes in primary schools had more than 30 pupils.

On the basis of grant approvals for local authorities to employ additional teachers from September 1998 to reduce infant class sizes, it is estimated that there are 722 fewer infant classes with over 30 pupils than would have been the case without grant. The additional £50m provided for schools in the local government revenue settlement for 1998–99 will also have had an impact. The results of the January 1999 schools' census will give the actual position.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Brit Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those Ministers in his Department who were present at the recent Brit awards in an official capacity; and who or what organisation was acting as their sponsor or host. [73348]

Mr. Michael: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), was at the awards as the guest of BPI (the British Phonographic Industry Ltd.).

National Assembly

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he or his predecessors have signed an agreement to lease land adjacent to Crickhowell House in Cardiff for use as a site for the National Assembly Building. [73620]

Mr. Michael: A lease has been signed for a parcel of land of approximately one acre which comprises one half of plot 1E adjacent to Crickhowell House for a term of 150 years from 29 September 1998.

Rural Development Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much matching funding has been given for European rural development grants in Wales in the current financial year; how many projects are awaiting match funding and what would be the total requirement of matching funds to enable them to progress; and what funding has been agreed for such match funding for 1999–2000. [72824]

Mr. Hain: In the current financial year Rural Development Grant of £809,000 has been committed to support European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund (EAGGF) Objective 5b awards.

There are currently 35 projects under consideration arising from successful EAGGF Objective 5b bids under Rounds 7 and 8. These represent a total bid of some £3.8m over the financial years 1998–99 to 2001–2002.

The Secretary of State will be making decisions shortly about further funding for the scheme based on the merits of individual projects and our priorities for securing the long-term future of the agriculture and food industries.

Supermarkets (Regional Selective Assistance)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department has paid in regional selective assistance for supermarket developments in Wales in each of the past three years. [73566]

Mr. Hain: Retail developments of this type are not eligible for regional selective assistance.

TREASURY

Tax Burdens (Businesses)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received regarding the tax burden on business. [72341]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of representations on this issue.

Taxation (Charities)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the ending of ACT recovery on the finances of charities; and if he will make a statement. [72773]

Ms Hewitt: The withdrawal of payable tax credits will be completed from 6 April 1999. We recognise the special position of charities and provided generous compensation for them through public expenditure, for the withdrawal of their payable tax credits. This compensation takes the form of a payment to a charity of a percentage of the dividends it receives, and will apply for five years from 6 April 1999 on a tapering basis, giving charities an opportunity to adjust to the withdrawal of payable tax credits.

Sierra Leone (Weapon Supplies)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action Customs and Excise is taking to investigate allegations that Sky Air Cargo of London and Occidental Airlines have been supplying weapons to rebels in Sierra Leone. [73266]

Dawn Primarolo: The investigation of alleged breaches of United Kingdom legislation implementing arms embargoes is a matter for the Commissioners of HM Customs and Excise. It is not the Commissioners' general practice to comment publicly about the existence or nature of such investigations.

Fatal Illnesses

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the 20 most prevalent fatal illnesses in terms of annual death rates. [72713]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Maclean, dated 1 March 1999:

To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will list the 20 most prevalent fatal illnesses in terms of annual death rates.

The information requested is given in the attached table.

The International Classification of Diseases (ICD) breaks down causes of death, disease and injury into 17 Chapters. It assigns different code numbers to different causes, thus providing a language-independent method of coding causes of death, injury and disease. Since many diseases have alternative names, the ICD system groups all synonymous terms for a particular condition under the one ICD code number assigned to the condition.

We have avoided including in the ranking the ICD Chapter heading or diseases that cover too broad a range of codes e.g. malignant neoplasms (cancers) coded 140–208 are the most common cause of death, accounting for approximately 1 in 4 deaths in 1997. Rather than present this as a single cause we have broken it down into significant identifiable illnesses.

The table presents diseases defined by either a group of codes or an individual code, depending on the disease e.g. ischaemic heart disease is coded 410–414, but female breast cancer is coded 174.

Crude death rates[1] for the twenty most common causes of death in England and Wales, 1997

| Rank | Cause of death (ICD9 codes[3]) | Rate per 100,000 |
|---|---|---|
| | All causes[2] | 1,064 |
| 1 | Ischaemic heart disease (410–414) | 234 |
| 2 | Cerebrovascular disease (430–438) | 111 |
| 3 | Pneumonia (480–486) | 109 |
| 4 | Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus, and lung (162) | 57 |
| 5 | Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (490–496) | 52 |
| 6 | Malignant neoplasm of female breast (174) | [4]45 |
| 7 | Malignant neoplasm of prostate (185) | [5]33 |
| 8 | Malignant neoplasm of colon (153) | 20 |
| 9 | Malignant neoplasm of lymphatic and haematopoietic tissue (200–208) | 19 |
| 10 | Malignant neoplasm of ovary (183) | [4]15 |
| 11 | Senile and presenile organic psychotic conditions (290) | 13 |
| 12 | Malignant neoplasm of stomach (151) | 13 |
| 13 | Diabetes mellitus (250) | 11 |
| 14 | Malignant neoplasm of oesophagus (150) | 11 |
| 15 | Malignant neoplasm of pancreas (157) | 11 |
| 16 | Malignant neoplasm of rectum, rectosigmoid junction and anus (154) | 9 |
| 17 | Malignant neoplasm of bladder (188) | 9 |
| 18 | Chronic liver disease and cirrhosis (571) | 8 |
| 19 | Ulcer of stomach and duodenum (531–533) | 8 |
| 20 | Accidental falls (E880-E888) | 7 |

[1] Rates per 100,000 population
[2] The death rate for 'all causes' includes deaths to those under 28 days old. Rates for individual causes of death do not.
[3] International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision
[4] Per 100,000 female population
[5] Per 100,000 male population

ECOFIN

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the issues for discussion before the ECOFIN Council on 15 March indicating the position he proposes to take on each issue. [72741]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Every six months, at the beginning of an EU Presidency, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin), outlines to the House the main items of business expected during the Presidency. Every month, she gives the House details of the items expected at meetings of the Council of Ministers during the month. After each meeting of the ECOFIN Council, I report back to the European Scrutiny Committee on the business conducted at the ECOFIN meeting. This has been the practice under successive Governments.

Brit Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those Ministers in his Department who were present at the recent Brit awards in an official capacity; and who or what organisation was acting as their sponsor or host. [73494]

Ms Hewitt: None.

European Central Bank

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the consultations he has had with the European Central Bank since 1 January. [71495]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 25 February 1999]: The Chancellor regularly meets his colleagues from other Finance Ministries and Central Banks.

Single Ombudsman Scheme

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to proposals for a single ombudsman scheme as set out in the draft Financial Services and Markets Bill; and if he will make a statement. [74393]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are committed to improving consumer protection, and the creation of the single ombudsman scheme is an important element in delivering such protection. The response to the draft Bill published in July 1998 showed strong support for the creation of the single ombudsman scheme. The Government, however, intend to amend some of the relevant provisions of the Bill to meet valid concerns raised.

The draft Bill allows for an appeal to the courts against the ombudsman's determination by either respondent or complainant on a point of law. Consistent with the objective of resolving disputes quickly and with minimum formality, we have decided to remove this provision.

Currently, the Bill allows the Ombudsman to order complainants to pay costs if they behave improperly or unreasonably. In order that complainants should be able to approach the Ombudsman without the fear of being ordered to pay the respondent's costs, we have decided to provide for the scheme operator to make rules authorising awards of the scheme's costs against either party, limited in the case of the complainant to the costs of the scheme operator.

We also intend to widen the FSA's discretion over which complaints are to be included in the compulsory jurisdiction. The FSA will be able to include all financial services carried out by authorised persons, not just those listed in Schedule 2 to the Bill. This change will allow the FSA to bring within the compulsory jurisdiction the large majority of disputes involving authorised persons which can currently be dealt with by the existing schemes, including the Banking and Building Societies Ombudsmen. We will also give the FSA sufficient flexibility to exclude some categories of regulated firms where there is a case to do so. We propose that the scheme operator should have similar discretion over the scope of the voluntary jurisdiction.

DEFENCE

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of creating a new chief of staff post on the Surgeon General's staff; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the employment that will be covered under that part of his remit which involves the implementation of the changes following the strategic review of defence medical services. [70879]

Mr. Spellar: The upgrading of the Chief of Staff post in the Surgeon General's Department will not result in any additional personnel cost as the new incumbent will replace the current Chief of Staff who, as a medical officer, is in receipt of additional remuneration to reflect his professional qualifications. The new Chief of Staff's responsibilities will include ensuring that the changes to the Defence Medical Services announced by the Secretary of State for Defence on 14 December 1998 are implemented expeditiously and cost-effectively.

South Africa (Military Cargo)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has had from South African police on the incident in May 1998 involving a cargo of military equipment flown from RAF Manston destined for South Africa which failed to reach its destination; and what his response was. [71565]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The Ministry of Defence has not received any representations from the South African police or other authorities on this matter. This is a matter for Customs and Excise. I refer my hon. Friend to the response given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary on 8 February 1999, Official Report, column 22.

Fast Insertion Craft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisation supplies his Department with fast insertion craft; and which other countries have been supplied with similar vessels. [72644]

Mr. Spellar: Fast insertion craft are currently supplied to the Ministry of Defence by Halmatic, who are now part of the Vosper Thornycroft group of companies. Vessels of this type have been procured by Singapore.

Sir Charles Masefield

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long after he ceased to be Head of Defence Export Services Sir Charles Masefield joined the Board of GEC; and if he will make a statement. [73267]

Mr. Spellar: Sir Charles Masefield joined GEC on 14 December 1998, the day that Mr. Tony Edwards succeeded him as Head of Defence Export Services, HDES. Sir Charles originally joined the MOD on 1 September 1994 on secondment from his previous employer, Airbus Industrie, a subsidiary of BAe. As a secondee, we would have expected Sir Charles to return to industry on completion of the HDES appointment.

RN Personnel (Drug Trafficking Control)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times in each of the last five years Royal Navy personnel have been involved in activity to assist Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and other agencies to control drug trafficking. [72937]

Mr. Spellar: The number of occasions on which Royal Navy personnel have been involved in support of HM Customs and Excise counter-drug operations over each of the last five years is as follows:

1998: 3

1997: 3

1996: 6

1995: 3

1994: 4

In the Caribbean, the West Indies Guardship has been operating in support of the US led Joint Inter-Agency Task Force (East) on a regular basis throughout the past five years.

Defence Agencies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the (a) Defence Medical Training Organisation and (b) Army Personnel Centre published its report for the year 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [73012]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Major General C. G. Callow to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 1 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the date that our annual report for 1997–98 was published and the cost as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Medical Training Organisation.

It was published on 27 July 1998 at a cost of £2,130.

Letter from G. A. M. Hammond to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 1 March 1999:

I am replying on behalf of the Chief Executive of the Army Personnel Centre (APC), in his absence on business, to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the date upon which the APC published its report for the year 1997–98 and the cost of producing the report, as this matter falls within the responsibility of this Agency.

The APC Annual Report and Accounts for the year 1997–98 was published on 29 July 1998 at a cost of £4035 (excluding VAT).

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what official visits he, his Ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73457]

Mr. Spellar: There have been no visits by MOD Ministers to Zimbabwe since May 1997. Two senior MOD officials visited Zimbabwe in 1998 where they met UK staff working for the regional British Military Assistance Training programme, gave presentations on the UK Strategic Defence Review, held workshops on management issues and paid office calls on Defence Ministers, senior members of the Armed Forces and senior officials. A senior MOD official has been on secondment since May 1995 assisting in the restructuring and management of the Zimbabwean MOD.

There have been a number of visits by other officials and military staff for a variety of reasons. The cost of listing them all would be disproportionate.

ASTOR

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to deploy unmanned aerial vehicles in tandem with an airborne stand off radar system. [72755]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 25 February 1999]: The planned Airborne Stand-Off Radar, ASTOR, programme, together with the in-service Phoenix unmanned aerial vehicle and future UAV programmes, such as SENDER and SPECTATOR, will form an important part of our integrated Intelligence, Surveillance, Target Acquisition and Reconnaissance, ISTAR, capability.

Long range surveillance and reconnaissance assets, such as ASTOR and longer range radar and UAVs, will help to cue and subsequently direct medium and short range reconnaissance and target acquisition assets, such as Phoenix, to identify, prioritise and engage enemy targets from long range before they can inflict damage on our and friendly forces. This integrated approach ensures our ground attack air assets and long range artillery assets are used to maximum effectiveness.

Army Training and Recruiting Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Army Training and Recruiting Agency; and what was the figure at its inception. [72818]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 25 February 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. H. Gordon to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 1 March 1999:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the numbers of people currently employed by the Army Training and Recruiting Agency, and at its inception, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Deputy Chief Executive of the Agency.

The numbers employed are as follows:

| | Military Personnel | Civilian Personnel | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1996–97[1] | 5,832 | 4,360 | 10,192 |
| 1997–98[1] | 6,101 | 4,541 | 10,642 |
| 31 Dec 1998[2] | 6,178 | 4,410 | 10,588 |

[1] average over the year
[2] actual numbers at this date

The Agency was formed as the Army Individual Training Organisation on 1 April 1996. It was relaunched as the Army Training and Recruiting Agency with effect from 1 July 1997, although it was effectively restructured on 1 April of that year, when it absorbed the functions of the former Directorate of Army Recruiting.

Old Gym, Caerwent

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Old Gym at Caerwent military base. [73649]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The Army is currently in discussions with Caerwent Community Council regarding the sale or lease of the Old Gym at Caerwent Training Area to the Council.

Defence Dental Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to set targets for the Defence Dental Agency for the year 1999–2000. [72979]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I aim to announce the key targets for the Defence Dental Agency in April.

Military Exercises (Poland)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries had armed forces involved in the brigade exercise in Poland carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [72847]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Exercise ULAN EAGLE, which took place at the Drawko-Pomorskie training area in north east Poland in October 1997, was a British Army exercise undertaken by 20th Armoured Brigade. No other countries' armed forces were involved.

Defence Codification Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Defence Codification Agency published its report for 1997–98; and what was the cost of production of the report. [73035]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Codification Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. A. Bradshaw to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 1 March 1999:

Publication of the Defence Codification Agency's Annual Report for 1997–98

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about publication dates and costs associated with the Annual Report for 1997–98 of the Defence Codification Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Defence Codification Agency published its annual report on 27th of July 1998. The cost of the publication was £2695.00.

For background information, this was the Defence Codification Agency's first Annual Report since its launch in July 96, it was published using the services of the Stationery Office and the Agency has a Treasury Direction and a clean audit opinion.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Defence Codification Agency; and what the figure was at its inception. [72978]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Codification Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. A. Bradshaw to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 1 March 1999:

Staff Employed by the Defence Codification Agency

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about staff employed within the Defence Codification Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Defence Codification Agency currently employs 93 staff (including nine surplus staff). At the Agency inception in July 1996 we employed 168 staff.

For background information, following the vesting of the Defence Codification Agency in July 96 a Competing for Quality Feasibility Study was conducted. This included details of plans to increase efficiency and reduce staffing levels. These measures have been implemented and a staff reduction of 50% will have been achieved once the nine surplus staff have been assigned to new posts.

Defence Bills Agency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed by the Defence Bills Agency; and what was the figure at its inception. [72839]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Bills Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from I. S. Elrick to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 1 March 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about numbers employed in the Defence Bills Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

There were 699 people employed in the Agency as at 31 January 1999 and these equate to 662 full-time equivalents. The comparable figures for 1 January 1996 are 680 and 655 respectively, while the full-time equivalent figure for the base line year against which the Agency's effectiveness is measured is 716.

For a meaningful comparison of numbers employed currently against those employed at the Agency's inception, due allowance should be made for changed circumstances in the intervening period. The Service Level Agreement which the Agency has with the Department was amended on 27 June 1997, to effect a budget increase which was based on an additional 30 employees who were required to cope with changed business practices which were introduced to facilitate the introduction of Resource Accounting.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration (Adjudicators' Decisions)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department by what means members of the public may obtain access to an indexed collection of determinations by immigration adjudicators in order to find out if there is a relevant decision relating to their case. [72862]

Mr. Hoon: No collection of indexed adjudicator determinations exists. Adjudicators' decisions are not binding on other adjudicators. Determinations are retained on tribunal files and are available to the public only with an adjudicator's permission.

Immigration Appeal Tribunal decisions are available from the Supreme Court Library on request and are available to subscribers on the Electronic Immigration Network Database via the internet.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetic Modification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) on how many occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Mr. Stan Greenberg of Greenberg Research; [72248]

(2) on how many occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials in his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Dave Hill of Bell Pottinger; [72066]

(3) on how many occasions (a) Ministers and (b) officials of his Department have (i) spoken with and (ii) received representations regarding genetic modification from Cathy McGlynn of Bell Pottinger. [72059]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 23 February 1999]: I and my officials are in regular contact with representatives of all those with an interest in biotechnology—including environmental groups, consumer groups and biotechnology companies. It is not the normal practice of Governments to give details of specific meetings with private individuals or companies.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations (a) he and (b) his ministers have received on genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry from the US Government. [72762]

Mr. Prescott: The Department has received one representation on this subject from the US Government.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the sites in Northavon where genetically modified crops (a) are currently grown and (b) have been grown in the last three years. [73910]

Mr. Meacher: No genetically modified crops are currently grown or have been grown in the last three years in Northavon.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require the Health and Safety Executive to institute prosecution proceedings against Zeneca for a breach of the regulations governing the escape into the environment, through the consumption by Zeneca staff, of genetically modified tomatoes and tomato seeds. [73402]

Mr. Meacher: HSE inspectors have sought clarification from Zeneca regarding reports in the national press that members of staff have eaten whole genetically modified tomatoes as part of taste trials. If this had taken place it would have represented a possible breach of environmental safety regulations. This is because tomatoes are a seed bearing fruit and the inadvertent dispersal of seeds from genetically modified tomatoes could have given rise to growth of genetically modified plants in the environment. The concern would have been that seeds would have dispersed through the sewage system, thereby breaching containment requirements.

It has been found that there were major inaccuracies in the reporting. In particular, it would appear that taste trials have been undertaken only using tomato tissues from which all seeds have been removed. Therefore, there would not appear to have been any breach of environmental safety legislation.

The photograph of Zeneca staff eating whole tomatoes, which appeared in one newspaper, was posed for the cameras using non-modified tomatoes.

Pilot Projects

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the pilot projects instigated by his Department since 1 May 1997, indicating the area in which each pilot took, or is taking, place. [72634]

Mr. Meale: A table setting out the pilot projects which have been instigated by my Department and its Executive Agencies since 1 May 1997 has been placed in the Library.

Empty Council Properties (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with London borough councils as to the number of empty council properties within their boroughs and the period of time that such properties are empty; and if he will make a statement. [72629]

Mr. Raynsford: I have had no such discussions. However, officials of the Government Office for London regularly discuss with Borough officials, as part of the annual Housing Investment Programme determination, many aspects of the Borough's housing strategy and of its performance as a housing authority. Empty council properties are one aspect of that discussion. The Government regularly mention the number of empty houses in each local authority area, and encourage all local authorities to implement strategies to minimise the number of empty houses in their area.

Special Areas of Conservation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the United Kingdom land area he has designated as special areas of conservation; and what the percentage is for other EU member states. [72775]

Mr. Meale: A total of 333 UK sites have been submitted to the European Commission as candidate SACs covering over 1,687,000 hectares. This accounts for 3.4 per cent. of the UK land surface. A similar additional area is covered by marine sites below mean low water. The Department does not have official information about other Member States, which is a matter for them and the European Commission.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the designation of new special areas of conservation; and what was his evaluation of each suggestion. [72647]

Mr. Meale: 333 UK candidate Special Areas of Conservation have been submitted to the European Commission following consideration of all representations made as a result of consultation. Many representations related to specific proposed sites; others, mainly from environmental organisations, suggested additions to the list. Where these suggestions were judged, on the advice of the nature conservation agencies through the JNCC, to be consistent with the Habitats Directive's criteria and requirements, they have been adopted. The JNCC publications, The Habitats Directive: selection of Special Areas of Conservation in the UK (Report No. 270), sets out the rationale that has been applied. It was published in October 1997 and placed in the Library of the House at the time.

Transport (London)

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will lay a specific duty on Transport for London to provide services at their existing levels on those parts of the Underground network outwith Greater London. [72653]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We do not intend to place such a duty on Transport for London. TfL will be directly accountable to the Mayor who, subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, will be responsible for arranging for the setting of the general level of services provided or secured by Transport for London. More widely, the Mayor will be under a duty to develop and implement policies for the promotion and encouragement of safe, integrated, efficient and economic transport facilities and services to, from and within Greater London. This duty therefore encompasses services to be provided by Transport for London outside the Greater London boundary.

The Mayor will also have a duty to draw up an integrated transport strategy for London, while taking account of national policy including the Government's integrated transport strategy. The Government have made it clear that their policy is to promote and encourage integrated public transport and the Mayor will need to bear that in mind when making decisions about the level of services provided or secured by Transport for London outside the Greater London boundary.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he proposes that representatives of those areas served by Transport for London railways outside Greater London will be consulted on the development of the services. [72654]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Subject to the passage of the Greater London Authority Bill, the Mayor will be under a duty to prepare a transport strategy document. It will be open to the Mayor to consult any body or person he or she thinks it appropriate to consult about the preparation of his or her transport strategy.

In addition, we will establish a new body to represent the interests of users of all modes of transport in London, including all services and facilities provided or secured by Transport for London. The new body will be known as the London Transport Users' Committee (LTUC). We envisage that LTUC will have regular contacts with Transport for London.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he plans to give to London's Mayor over the former British Rail network within Greater London. [73171]

Dr. Reid: Our proposals were set out in our White Paper "A Mayor and Assembly for London" (Cm 3897). Paragraph 5.27 of the White Paper indicates that the Mayor will be able to:

- issue guidance to OPRAF regarding franchisees in London;
- secure the provision of new passenger services to be operated in London;
- promote or fund new network improvements, as well as investment in new stations or improvements to existing ones;
- require operators to participate in new multi-modal ticketing arrangements or concessionary travel schemes; and
- ensure Transport for London is consulted on timetable decisions to ensure that bus, rail and tube services can be planned to complement each other.

The White Paper made it clear that OPRAF would not be bound to accept the Mayor's guidance if it would have an adverse impact beyond London or would result in additional financial liability to the taxpayer. Transport for London will also be able to exercise powers inherited from London Transport to ensure consistency between rail, Underground and bus services in terms of Travelcard fares and ticketing, marketing and passenger information. Transport for London will also have the power to oppose rail schemes which it thinks are contrary to the Mayor's transport strategy or other policies, or to the interests of Londoners.

Clauses 163 to 166 of the Greater London Authority Bill currently set out the draft provisions which will give effect to our proposals. Those clauses were debated in Standing Committee on 23 February 1999, Official Report, Standing Committee A, columns 723–49.

Thameslink 2000

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current estimate for the start date of the construction of the Thameslink 2000 rail scheme. [73092]

Dr. Reid: The start of construction work on the Thameslink 2000 rail project is dependent on two factors:

Firstly, the project requires construction powers to be granted under the Transport and Works Act 1992 (TWA). Railtrack submitted an application for a TWA Order for Thameslink 2000 in November 1997. Following consideration of representations made in respect of that application, and changes resulting from a review of the project, Railtrack is currently preparing a supplementary TWA Order application. A decision on when any public inquiry into the proposed scheme might be held has therefore been deferred until December 1999. The earliest an Inquiry could realistically be expected to commence is Spring of 2000. The timing of the Secretary of State's decision on whether to grant powers following the Inquiry Inspector's report, and—if powers are granted—the start of construction work, would depend on a number of factors, including the length of the Inquiry and the Inspector's findings.

Secondly, the Thameslink 2000 project is dependent on Stage 2 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) for the provision of certain works at St. Pancras. Railtrack has said that it intends to proceed with the exercise of its option to construct Stage 2 of CTRL, but believes that it would be inappropriate to make such a commitment until after the outcome is known of the Rail Regulator's review of access charges. If this option were exercised in 2001, construction of Thameslink 2000 would start in early 2002 and the service could be operational in 2006.

Robin Hood Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he plans to take to provide future funding security for, and protection of, existing service levels on the Robin Hood line between Nottingham and Mansfield. [73095]

Dr. Reid: The Office of Passenger Rail Franchising (OPRAF) is in discussion with the local authorities and Central Trains about the future arrangements for the funding and provision of services on the Robin Hood line. For the current financial year (1998–99), OPRAF is providing a contribution of £350,000 to Central Trains in respect of Robin Hood Line services.

OPRAF

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising has concerning proposals made by train operating companies to (a) reduce staffing levels and (b) change staff pay and conditions. [73107]

Dr. Reid: The Franchising Director does not have any power to prevent train operating companies from reducing their staffing levels. He has rights of approval over changes to pension arrangements and changes to pay and conditions which would leave undesirable legacies for the next franchisee.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising made of the likely impact on staffing levels of the successful bids for rail franchises; and if he will place a copy of each such assessment in the Library. [73152]

Dr. Reid: Bids for franchises were assessed on value for money for the provision of passenger rail services. The contents of the bids remain confidential and therefore copies of the assessments cannot be placed in the Library.

Rail Staff Redundancies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many rail staff took redundancy in each of the years between 1992–93 and 1997–98. [73169]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), on 16 December 1997, Official Report, columns 152–53. I understand from the British Railways Board that, in 1997–98, 310 British Rail staff were made redundant.

East Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Government will take into account Sea Containers' punctuality record when evaluating the company's request for a franchise extension for the East Coast main line. [73090]

Dr. Reid: As I announced at the rail summit on 25 February, the track record of franchisees will be one of the factors in considering proposals for renegotiation.

Rail Network (Crime)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what surveys of public opinion (a) his Department and (b) the British Transport Police have carried out in the last five years into fear of crime on the national rail network. [73104]

Dr. Reid: In 1997 the Department published a report entitled "Perceptions of safety from crime on public transport". This was the outcome of a number of surveys and focus groups carried out across England which included train travel. In the last five years the British Transport Police have carried out annual surveys alternately with railway passengers or staff and these included questions on the fear of crime.

Disabled Travellers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total sum invested in measures specifically to improve access to stations for travellers with disabilities in each of the years between 1987–88 and 1997–98. [73103]

Dr. Reid: Information on specific expenditure on disabled access is not available for those years.

However, all new stations planned or in build will provide full unassisted wheelchair access. In addition, Railtrack are on course to meet the target, set in the Network Management Statement 1998, of providing unassisted wheelchair access at a further 119 stations this year.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what duties will be given to the Strategic Rail Authority in regard to improving access to the rail network for travellers with disabilities. [73102]

Dr. Reid: Subject to Parliament's consideration of the necessary legislation, the Strategic Rail Authority will have a duty to have regard, in particular, to the interests of disabled people. The SRA would also inherit the Rail Regulator's code of practice for protecting disabled railway passengers and a duty to revise it from time to time and encourage its adoption and implementation. The Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations 1998, which came into effect on 1 January this year, have set clear technical requirements for wheelchair access and a range of other features that will apply to all new rolling stock coming into service from that date.

Rail Tickets

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the average annual increase in the cost of (a) supersaver, (b) cheap day return and (c) standard single tickets on the national rail network for each year from 1992–93 to 1997–98. [73091]

Dr. Reid: This information is not available in the form requested. However, I will write to my hon. Friend about the data that are available.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many, and what proportion, of journeys on the InterCity and former InterCity network were made using (a) supersavers and (b) savers in each of the last 10 years. [73106]

Dr. Reid: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) family railcards, (b) network cards, (c) forces railcards and (d) all-line rail rovers were issued in each of the last 10 years. [73105]

Dr. Reid: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if those rail services provided under the Rail Regulator's Moderation of Competition proposals will be required to accept national interavailable protected fares. [73190]

Dr. Reid: In all the access agreements which the Rail Regulator has approved to date, the acceptance of national interavailable protected fares has been a requirement. The Rail Regulator has indicated that he would not expect to approve access rights for new services where he had reason to believe that approval was likely to result in the loss of network benefits. Those benefits include the provision of interavailable tickets. For franchise operators, the obligation to accept interavailable tickets is a condition of their franchise agreement.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what instructions he gave to passenger transport authorities in regard to fares levels in connection with the payment of the special rail grant to passenger transport executives. [73094]

Dr. Reid: None. Where Passenger Transport Authorities (PTAs) have chosen to retain responsibility for setting fares on the rail services which they support, they are free to raise or lower fares as they wish. However, the amount of grant entitlement will take account of the financial consequences of fares changes which diverge from the national fares cap set by the Franchising Director. Fares in the areas of the two PTAs which have chosen to pass responsibility for setting fares to the train operating companies are subject to the regulated fares cap set in franchise agreements, i.e. RPI-1 from 1 January 1999.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria were used by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising to assess the impact on existing or potential rail services of the coach links which OPRAF approved as part of the Virgin/Stagecoach deal for the InterCity West Coast Main Line and Cross Country Franchises. [73089]

Dr. Reid: The Criterion for securing the bus links was the integration of public transport in line with our recent White Paper, A New Deal for Transport. The primary aim was to transport passengers to rail heads by bus from areas not currently served by rail services and thus to encourage greater use of train services from these rail heads.

Passenger Train Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total number of passenger train services on the national rail network for each year between 1985–86 and 1997–98. [73093]

Dr. Reid: Information is not held in this form. However, I will write to my hon. Friend about alternative statistics that are available.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made by the DVLA in reaching their target to deliver 95 per cent. of vocational licences within nine working days. [73097]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since the beginning of 1998–99 the target has been met or bettered during every month except for April 1998, when a 10 day turnaround was recorded. DVLA expects to deliver an 8 day performance for the year as a whole.

Structure Plan (Hampshire)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from Eagle Star in relation to the structure plan for Hampshire. [73181]

Mr. Raynsford: Following publication of the Hampshire Structure Plan Examination in Public panel report in May 1997, Eagle Star forwarded to the Secretary of State in October 1997 a copy of the Company's response to Hampshire County Council Conservative Group's press release on the structure plan. In October 1998 the Secretary of State received two representations from Eagle Star asking him to intervene in the Hampshire Structure Plan.

Number Plates

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to require motor vehicle registration number plates to comply with the laid-down specification. [73255]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Enforcement is a matter for the police. We are, however, planning to introduce new regulations, later this year, on the display of number plates which will facilitate enforcement and should reduce abuse. From 1 March this year, motorists who mis-represent their vehicle registration marks may also have them withdrawn.

London Regional Transport

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last advertised posts of (a) Chairman, (b) Vice-Chairman, (c) Executive members and (d) non-executive members of the Board of London Regional Transport. [73506]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is set out:

Chairman

It is not common practice for posts at Chairman level to be advertised. PricewaterhouseCoopers were appointed last spring to assist us in the search for a new Chairman.

Vice-Chairman

It has been the practice to appoint the Vice-Chairman from within the existing Board, rather than through external advertising. This appointment is made by the LT Board itself, not by the Secretary of State.

Executive Members

The post of Managing Director of London Underground Limited was advertised last July.

Non-Executive Members

It has been the practice to appoint non-executives from recruitment searches, or from names supplied by the Public Appointments Unit (PAU). Those appearing on the PAU's list are largely self-nominated.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the current members of the Board of London Regional Transport, (b) the dates on which they were first appointed and (c) their (i) qualifications and (ii) experience. [73510]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is set out.

| Member | First appointed to Board | Qualifications and Experience |
|---|---|---|
| Chairman: Sir Malcolm Bates | 11 February 1999 | Sir Malcolm is Chairman of the Pearl Group and Premier Farnell plc. Until Easter 1997 he was also Deputy Managing Director of GEC plc, and Joint Managing Director of Wm. Brandt & Sons. He is also a member of the Industrial Development Advisory Board, has chaired the Government's Engineering Deregulation Task Force, and was a member of the Treasury's Private Finance Panel. |
| Chief Executive: Denis Tunnicliffe | 1 November 1993 | Mr. Tunnicliffe joined London Transport as Managing Director of London Underground in 1988, and became a full Board member in 1993. This led to his becoming Chief Executive last May. Prior to joining London Transport, Mr. Tunnicliffe worked for British Airways, and subsequently the International Leisure Group. |
| Managing Director, London Underground: Derek Smith | 1 February 1999 | Mr. Smith worked in NHS management prior to joining the LT Board. He has experience of running a large organisation through a period of change, and has experience of dealing with Private Finance programmes. |
| Managing Director, London Transport Buses: Clive Hodson | 1 August 1995 | Mr. Hodson became Managing Director of London Buses Ltd. in 1989. His performance there, and his stewardship of the privatisation of the LBL subsidiaries led to his joining the LT board in 1995 as MD of London Transport Buses. |
| Non-executive Vice-Chairman: Brian Appleton | 1 September 1995 | Mr. Appleton is a former Director of ICI and Polymers, and assessor to the Piper Alpha Inquiry. In 1992 he carried out a study for the HSE of the extent to which London Underground had achieved the right balance in responding to fire and bomb threats. He advises LT on safety matters. |
| Non-executive: Michael Lawrence | 29 June 1994 | Mr. Lawrence was formerly Chief Executive of the London Stock Exchange. His previous experience included being a partner in Price Waterhouse, Group Finance Director for the Prudential Corporation, non-executive Director of the Port of London Authority, and Chairman of the Hundred Group of Finance Directors. He is Chairman of the Financial Audit Committee at LT. |
| Non-executive: Sally O'Sullivan | 1 August 1995 | Ms O'Sullivan's background is in publishing. She is also a member of the Broadcasting Standards Council, and of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs. She focuses on consumer issues at LT. |
| Non-executive: Sir Alan Bailey | 1 December 1991 | Sir Alan was formerly a Permanent Secretary at the Department of Transport, and formerly worked within the Treasury, Civil Service Department and Cabinet Office. He is Vice-Chairman of London Transport Buses. |

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Air Miles have been earned by him and each of his Ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73336]

Mr. Prescott: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 141.

Detailed information on any air miles earned by Ministers as a result of office travel is not recorded centrally.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what official visits he, his Ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73462]

Mr. Prescott: There have been no official visits by DETR Ministers to Zimbabwe since May 1997.

There has been one official visit on 27–30 January 1998 when a senior Departmental official represented DETR at an International Workshop on Strategic Approaches to Freshwater Management. The event was attended by some 80 countries, together with NGOs, industry and International agencies. This event was hosted by the Zimbabwe Government with EC support, and helped pave the way for the Commission for Sustainable Development's Sixth meeting at which a formal Decision on Strategic Approaches to Freshwater Management was adopted by CSD, and later endorsed by UNGASS.

Zoos

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what criteria are used in assessing the suitability of people to be appointed to Government Zoo Inspectors' List A and Government Zoo Inspectors List B; [73725]

(2) what plans he has to assess the continuing suitability of those on the Government Zoo Inspectors Lists A and B. [73726]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The requirements for selecting zoo inspectors are set out under Section 8 of the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. The list of inspectors is compiled after consultation with the British Veterinary Association, the Federation of Zoological Gardens and other bodies. The list consists of two parts: the first part contains the names of veterinary surgeons and practitioners who have experience of animals of the kinds that are or may be kept in zoos; the second part contains the names of other persons who are in the Secretary of State's opinion competent to inspect animals in zoos, to advise on keeping them and on their welfare, and to advise on the management of zoos generally. The Secretary of State may, after the required consultation, vary the list of inspectors by adding or deleting names.

Following the Government's review last year of the operation of the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 we plan to revise and update the current list of zoo inspectors. A new advisory body, the Zoos Forum, which we will be establishing shortly will also have an important part to play in reviewing the current list of inspectors and advising on further nominations for appointment.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what standards his Department uses to determine whether a (a) circus and (b) zoo elephant has been excessively shackled; and if he will make a statement; [73727]

(2) what guidance he has given Government Zoo Inspectors on action to be taken in respect of elephants which have been excessively shackled. [73728]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 26 February 1999]: All zoos in Great Britain are required to comply with the Standards of Modern Zoo Practice issued by the Secretary of State under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. The Standards do not at present specifically cover shackling. We announced a package of proposals in September last year to modernise the British zoo licensing system, and this included a review of the Standards, which is currently under way.

Local authorities are responsible for the issuing of licences and other executive functions under the Act. In considering whether to issue a new or renewed licence under the Act, local authorities may attach any conditions or recommendations which they consider necessary or desirable, having regard to the Standards. Local authorities may also refuse to grant a licence, or to revoke an existing licence, if a zoo is not meeting required standards. The Act provides for inspections of zoos by teams of experts to ensure that the arrangements for accommodation, staffing or management are adequate for the proper care and well being of zoo animals.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has the lead responsibility in Government for the regulation of circuses.

Homelessness

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 445, what consultation is taking place regarding further assistance and protection for homeless people; what representations he has received on the restoration of a duty to fund permanent housing; when he plans to complete his consideration of the further steps to be taken referred to in his answer; and if he will make a statement. [73526]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The Government have received representations from Shelter about making changes to the homelessness legislation which we are considering carefully. The Government intend to consult very widely on any proposals for strengthening the assistance and protection available to homeless people which it brings forward. No date has been set for completion of consideration of the steps that might be taken.

Social Housing

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what strategy he has to meet the need for social housing over the next 20 years; and if he will make a statement. [73517]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 26 February 1999]: Our aim is to offer everyone the opportunity of a decent home and so promote social cohesion, well-being and self-dependence. The provision of good quality, efficiently managed social housing plays an important part in meeting that aim.

We are making available an extra £5 billion for housing over the life of this Parliament, giving local authorities increased scope to invest in new social housing where this best reflects local needs and priorities, and boosting the Housing Corporation's support for new social housing relative to the last Government's spending plans.

However, the overall number of new social houses built is not a full or satisfactory measure of a successful housing strategy. Decisions on investment have to strike a balance between the need for new social housing and the requirement to invest in improvements to the existing social and private sector stock. They must also take proper account of the demand for social housing, which varies greatly between regions and even between local neighbourhoods. It is important, therefore, that investment decisions reflect local circumstances. The policies we are putting in place following the Comprehensive Spending Review are designed to ensure that investment decisions are based on robust local assessments of housing need, reflected in housing strategies drawn up by local authorities in partnership with their communities.

Revenue Support Grant (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the revenue support grant for Gloucestershire for the last five years for which figures are available; and what revenue support grant he is providing for 1999–2000. [73140]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The information requested is shown in the table:

£ million

| | 1994–1995 | 1995–1996 | 1996–1997 | 1997–1998 | 1998–1999 | 1999–2000 |

[1] Gloucestershire Police Authority came into existence in April 1995. In 1994–95, police services were provided by the County Council.

Transport on Water Association

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations he has received recently from the Transport on Water Association regarding river transport to and from the Millennium Dome; and if he will make a statement; [73528]

(2) what correspondence he has received from the Transport on Water Association since 1998; and if he will lay copies of the letters and his replies in the Library; [73530]

(3) when he first received a copy of the Transport On Water Association's study of the future of passenger services on the River Thames; and what assessment he has made of their recommendations. [73529]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My hon. Friend the Minister for London and Construction received a letter from the Chairman of the Transport on Water Association dated 27 July 1998 asking a number of questions about the Government's plan for encouraging new river transport services on the Thames, including services to the Millennium Dome. I replied on 28 September. As requested, I am placing copies of both letters in the Libraries of the House.

My Department first received a copy of the Association's proposals for a system of passenger transport on the Thames in 1994. These were taken into account along with other studies and advice, in developing the Government's own proposals under our Thames 2000 initiative.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of planning appeals dealt with by means of written representations since 1 May 1997 have conformed with the timescales required by the Written Representations Regulations 1987. [73403]

Mr. Raynsford: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the Inspector's Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 1 March 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about planning appeals which have conformed with the timescales required by the Written Representations Regulations.

The Written Representations Regulations 1987 require parties to an appeal (including third parties) to comply with a number of timescales set out in the Regulations. These cover such things as the time when the LPA should notify other parties that they have received the appeal (within 5 days) and other timescales for submitting statements and responses. If these are all conformed to the date for the site visit, which would be set by the Inspectorate, could be in 8–10 weeks from the appeal start date.

In a significant number of cases, however, we are not placed to set the site visit in the 8th week because one or other of the parties fails to abide by the time limits (as provided for by the Regulation). Because of the number of stages (or time limits) involved we do not keep records of conformity in the procedural stages.

However the Inspectorate is set performance targets by the Minister. For Written Representation cases the timeliness target for this year is that in 80% of cases a decision should be issued within 18 weeks of the receipt of the appeal. So far since April 1998 we have achieved this target in every month.

Tufnell Park Railway Station

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what evaluation his Department has made of proposals for the possible construction of a new railway station at Tufnell Park on the Barking to Gospel Oak line. [73160]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a commercial matter for Railtrack. The construction of a new station at Tufnell Park is dependent on an approach from the train operating company and/or the local council. I am advised that to date no formal proposal has been received.

Railway Lines (Re-openings)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the proposals currently being considered by his Department for the re-opening of closed railway lines. [73159]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No specific proposals are currently under consideration, but we announced on 25 February that the Franchising Director is taking forward a wide ranging consultation on the future development of rail services. Proposals for the re-opening of lines may also be submitted under the Rail Passenger Partnership Fund effective from 1 April. The Office of Passenger Rail Franchising will be publishing guidance for bidders shortly.

Antarctica

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the environmental changes in Antarctica since the agreement of the Environmental Protocol. [73166]

Mr. Meacher: The Environmental Protocol entered into force in January 1998, although the UK had implemented its provisions soon after its adoption in 1991. Operational procedures in Antarctica have changed considerably within the past few years to take on board the tough provisions of the Protocol, e.g., the regular use of Environmental Impact Assessments, rigorous waste disposal standards, etc. All activities of British citizens in Antarctica, including the scientists of the British Antarctic Survey, are the subject of permits issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. An assessment of compliance with environmental standards is a routine part of permitting procedures. From our knowledge of the operations in Antarctica of other Treaty parties it is apparent that all, to a greater or lesser extent, have embraced the provisions of the Protocol.

Scientists from the British Antarctic Survey continually monitor conditions in Antarctica. Whilst the Environmental Protocol has strengthened the environmental protection of Antarctica from activities which are carried out there, changes to Antarctica's environment are occurring due to the impact of wider global events, e.g., pollution from industrial areas outside of Antarctica.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions partly funds the Hadley Centre to analyse global temperature trends, although they have not studied Antarctica specifically. We do not fund measurements of ozone depletion in the Antarctic although the British Antarctic Survey do so, funded by the National Environmental Research Council.

The Department does, however, follow the work of scientists working in the region. We have also just let a contract to make a risk assessment on the possibility of collapse of the West Antarctic Ice Sheet in the face of climate change. The results of this survey should be available by the end of this year.

Elderly People

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the incidence of elderly people living alone because their extended families have moved elsewhere due to the lack of local affordable housing. [73164]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has made no specific assessment of this issue. Indeed, given the number of factors likely to affect the decisions of individual households, it is difficult to envisage any meaningful conclusions arising from any such assessment.

Rate Support Grant (Islington)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of, and what representations he received on, the spending needs of Islington Council prior to the rate support grant announcement for 1999–2000. [73165]

Ms Armstrong: We looked carefully at the pressures and burdens on all local authorities and the scope for further efficiency savings, taking into account the views of the Local Government Association, when considering the level of provision for local government over the next three years, as set out in the Comprehensive Spending Review. We also looked in detail with local authorities at the distribution of grant to continue our aim of providing a fairer distribution of resources. We consulted local authorities during December and early January on the local government finance settlement 1999–2000 which was approved by Parliament on 4 February. Islington Council did not comment on our proposals during that consultation.

Traffic Speeds (Central London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates his Department has made of average traffic speed in central London (a) in each of the last 15 years and (b) at the latest available date. [73157]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Speed surveys covering central, rest of inner, and outer London are conducted on a rotating basis, with each of these three areas surveyed every three to four years. The latest survey in central London was carried out in 1997. The estimates of average traffic speeds (mph) in central London over the last 15 years are as follows:

| | Morning peak | Daytime off-peak | Evening peak |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1983 | 11.8 | 11.9 | 11.5 |
| 1986 | 11.5 | 11.0 | 11.0 |
| 1990 | 10.3 | 10.6 | 10.3 |
| 1994 | 10.9 | 10.9 | 10.8 |
| 1997 | 10.0 | 10.0 | 10.2 |
| Peak times | 7.45am-9.15am | 10.00am-4.00pm | 4.45pm-6.15pm |

Millennium Dome

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of the Millennium Dome on economic regeneration in London. [72127]

Mr. Meale: The building of the Millennium Dome, and its proposed long-term retention, will have major regenerative benefits for London, the full effects of which will become increasingly apparent over time.

Before the decision was taken to site the Millennium Dome at Greenwich, the Greenwich Peninsula was one of the largest derelict sites in the country, suffering from heavy contamination. Yet it lies only a few miles from the centre of London and close to the many historic attractions of Greenwich. The extensive site preparation works and infrastructure improvements required for the Millennium Experience have acted as the catalyst for a major mixed-use development project on the Greenwich Peninsula, under the direction of English Partnerships. This project, including the new Millennium Village that is being built in the southern part of the site as a model for sustainable regeneration of a brownfield site, will establish the Peninsula as a vibrant new urban quarter for London, with ensuing economic, social and environmental benefits for the capital—and beyond.

Furthermore, the Government intend shortly to launch a competition to find an alternative use for the Dome after the Millennium Experience finishes. We consider that retention of this unique structure with a new use that is both suitable and sustainable can make a substantial and lasting contribution to development of the Greenwich Peninsula, and give an added impetus to the long-term regeneration of the Thames Gateway. My hon. Friend will appreciate that different types of use could have widely varying impacts, both locally and nationally. We are confident, however, that the competition will bring forward a wide range of imaginative proposals and an outcome that will be of major benefit to London.

Red Squirrels

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been his Department's expenditure on research on red squirrels since May 1997. [73906]

Mr. Meale: The Department's statutory scientific advisers, English Nature, have spent approximately £100,000 on a Species Recovery Programme for the red squirrel, which includes a research element.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the presence of red squirrels in South East Britain. [73907]

Mr. Meale: Red squirrels are absent from South East Britain, with the exception of the Isle of Wight and islands in Poole Harbour, where the populations are estimated to number 4,000 individuals.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the United Kingdom Red Squirrel Group is taking to encourage red squirrels in West Sussex. [73905]

Mr. Meale: There are no known populations of wild red squirrels in West Sussex. The focus of work by the UK Red Squirrel Group is currently in areas where there is the best chance to assist the long-term survival of red squirrel populations.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

38. Miss McIntosh: To ask the President of the Council what recent discussions she has had with transport providers on problems concerning millennium compliance and insurance cover for travel on 1 January 2000; and if she will make a statement. [72134]

Mrs. Beckett: I have not had any discussions with transport providers on the issue of insurance cover for travel on 1 January.

Responsibility for the transport and insurance industries rests with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Treasury respectively. In my role as Chairman of MISC4 I have however received reports on Year 2000 preparations across the transport and insurance sectors.

House of Lords Reform

39. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on progress being made towards establishing a royal commission on reform of the House of Lords. [72135]

41. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on progress being made towards establishing a royal commission on reform of the House of Lords. [72137]

Mr. Tipping: The members of the Royal Commission have all been appointed and the Secretariat has started work in its new premises. The first formal meeting of the Royal Commission is being held today.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Council how many Air Miles have been earned by her and her Minister; and how she proposes to use them. [73342]

Mrs. Beckett: As part of our official duties at the Privy Council Office neither I nor the Parliamentary Secretary have earned any Air Miles.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Council what official visits she, her Ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73460]

Mrs. Beckett: No visits have been made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Regional Affairs Committee

42. Mr. Watts: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on progress on reviving the Standing Committee on the English regions. [72139]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, Central (Ms Winterton).

Reporting

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what action she plans to take to improve the facilities for reporting of the House. [72130]

Mrs. Roe: There are no plans at present to change the arrangements for access to, or the facilities available in, the Reporters' Gallery and Lobby. The latter consist of working space (which includes the Press Gallery library, dining room, cafeteria and bar), and telephones for representatives of the media provided free of charge over three floor levels in the area behind the Speaker's Chair. Filmed interviews of hon. Members by the media may take place in the Interview Rooms off Westminster Hall, the Jubilee Room and the Conference Rooms in the Parliamentary Outbuildings and are also permitted on the Terrace, in New Palace Yard and on Abingdon Green, where permanent power cables are provided for this purpose. It is always open to officers and members of the Press Gallery and Lobby Journalist Committees to present proposals for improvements to these facilities, should they wish to do so.

With respect to the availability of the Official Report, on the Parliamentary website, a matter which I understand is of interest to the hon. Lady, the recommendation of the Procedure Committee was that the electronic Hansard should be made available on the day that the printed report is available. The rules governing the production of the Official Report stipulate that no one may see the contents of the printed report before it is available in the Vote Office the following morning. The only exceptions to that rule are that an hon. Member may read his or her own speech and, of course, the Chair has access to the report if needed.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Flights

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 283, on Concorde flights, if he will list the Ministers who have taken a Concorde flight; and what was the total cost of the flights. [71307]

The Prime Minister: Since 2 May 1997, I and the following Ministers have taken scheduled Concorde flights: my right hon. Friends the Deputy Prime Minister; the Secretary of State for Defence; the Secretary of State for Health; the Foreign Secretary; the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett); the Minister for the Cabinet Office; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department. The total costs of these flights is some £86,800. This compares with 11 Ministers using Concorde on a total of 13 occasions during the last two years of the previous Administration.

Expenditure on these flights is part of the Government's expenditure on Ministers visits overseas of £6.1 million for the period 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1998, and £4.0 million for the period 1 April to 31 December 1998. By comparison, in the last year of the previous Administration, expenditure on overseas visits was £7.8 million.

In addition, as accounted for in answers to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 14 July 1997, Official Report, column 46, and the hon. Member for Lichfield (Mr. Fabricant) on 13 March 1998, Official Report, columns 366–67, I have also chartered Concorde, as did my predecessor.

Genetic Modification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what factors underlay his statement that genetically modified food is beneficial for human consumption. [72240]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 February 1999]: All genetically modified food produced in the United Kingdom has been approved by independent expert scientific advisers as part of an extensive regulatory process designed to protect both consumers and the environment. No approvals have been given since 1 May 1997.

Genetic modification has the potential to enable us to produce food that is more nutritious and better tasting.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received on genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry from the US Government. [72763]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 31 July 1998, Official Report, column 600.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84, what his definition is of the term "pooling sovereignty". [73597]

The Prime Minister: In his statement to the House on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–88, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that to share a common monetary policy with other Member States represents a major pooling of economic sovereignty.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on progress made on passing each of the five economic tests for joining the euro; if deadlines have been imposed; and what staff have been tasked to monitor progress. [73596]

The Prime Minister: The Government have said that, barring some fundamental and unforeseen change in economic circumstances, making a decision during this Parliament to join the single currency is not realistic. The UK economy needs a period of stability in order to demonstrate sustainable convergence. The Government have put in place a new macroeconomic framework and introduced a series of microeconomic reforms which are both in the national economic interest and will help to deliver the stability required to demonstrate that convergence is sustainable. As I said in my statement to the House on 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84, we cannot say that yet.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister who will judge whether the five economic tests for United Kingdom participation in the EMU have been passed; and who will be consulted. [73594]

The Prime Minister: The Government have said that the determining factor in any decision to recommend membership of the single currency will be the national economic interest. In order to make the assessment the Government have set out five economic tests which must be met before the UK could join. The final decision on whether or not the UK should join is for Government, Parliament and the British people in a referendum.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84, if he will list the Ministers in each department responsible for euro preparation. [73519]

The Prime Minister: The following Ministers have responsibility for departmental euro preparations:

| Department | Minister |
|---|---|
| HM Treasury | Ms Patricia Hewitt MP |
| Department of Trade and Industry | Lord Simon of Highbury |
| Ministry of Defence | Doug Henderson MP |
| Department of Health | Baroness Hayman |
| Department of Social Security | Ms Angela Eagle MP |
| Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food | Lord Donoughue |
| Department for Education and Employment | George Mudie MP |
| Home Office | Ms Kate Hoey MP |
| Foreign and Commonwealth Office | Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean |
| Department for International Development | George Foulkes MP |
| Department for Culture, Media and Sport | Mrs. Janet Anderson MP |
| Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions | Alan Meale MP |
| Northern Ireland Office | Paul Murphy MP |
| Welsh Office | Peter Hain MP |
| Scottish Office | Lord Sewel |

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84, what estimate he has made of the cost to private sector business of conversion to the euro. [73520]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The level of costs would depend on the approach adopted by individual companies. The Outline Changeover Plan should help businesses as they develop their thinking on this issue. Effective preparations undertaken in good time and with a clear planning lead by Government should reduce the total costs involved.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84, what estimate he has made of the cost to the public sector of conversion to the euro. [73521]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The cost to the public sector of conversion to the euro would depend on the detailed approach that the UK took to the changeover. The outline National Changeover Plan is a first step in planning how the UK would make the changeover to the single currency. A further plan will be published in around a year's time.

The cost to the public sector would also depend on the extent to which organisations are able to build in euro compatibility where IT systems are being upgraded or purchased for other reasons. Effective preparations undertaken in good time and with a clear planning lead by Government should reduce the total costs involved.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–84, what estimate he has made of Government expenditure necessary to inform the public of the facts regarding the euro. [73522]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 February 1999]: As outlined in chapter eight of the Outline Changeover Plan, if the UK were to join the single currency, there would need to be provision of practical and objective information delivered to the general public and consumers to enable these groups to deal with each of the phases of the changeover.

The cost of any such public information campaign would depend on the particular requirements of the audiences involved and would also be dependent on the extent to which other bodies (for example, banks and retailers) were themselves providing appropriate information. Effective preparations undertaken in good time and with a clear planning lead by Government should reduce the total costs involved.

European Movement

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of (a) the European Movement and (b) the Federal Trust; and if he will list the subjects discussed. [73595]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Boston and Skegness (Sir R. Body) on 19 October 1998, Official Report, column 917.

Terrorism

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the nature of the material evaluated in preparing the periodic terrorism threat assessment document. [73771]

The Prime Minister: A number of reports and assessments are used within Government, and the threat from terrorism is kept constantly under review in the light of all the available information.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 39–40, on departmental asset sales, if he will give details of the two fixed related assets which have been sold; what the sales processes were in each case; and if he will make a statement. [73732]

The Prime Minister: [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The two related fixed assets which have been sold were an electrically operated fork lift truck and associated battery charging unit which I am advised was used by Recruitment and Assessment Services (RAS) at their Basingstoke office.

Expressions of interest were invited to buy them as one lot. Three companies responded; the highest final bid was accepted.

Referendums

Sir George Young: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 193, when he will respond to the Committee on Standards in Public Life's recommendations on conduct of referendums. [73965]

The Prime Minister: As we made clear when the Neill Committee report on the funding of political parties in the United Kingdom was published in October 1998, the Government will announce their conclusions on the recommendations contained in the report, including those on the conduct of referendums, when we publish a White Paper and draft Bill before the Summer Recess.

EU Meeting (Petersberg)

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Prime Minister if he will report on the outcome of the informal meeting of the EU Heads of State and Government in Petersberg, Germany on 26 February. [74131]

The Prime Minister: The meeting at Petersberg was an informal meeting in preparation for the full European Council in Berlin on 24–25 March, at which a broad range of issues were discussed. No formal decisions were taken. The meeting reviewed progress on the "Agenda 2000" package of negotiations on European Union finances and expenditure, the Common Agricultural Policy and the Structural and Cohesion Funds. I set out the Government's objectives: control and stabilisation of expenditure, genuine and affordable reform of the CAP, a fair outcome for United Kingdom recipients of the structural funds, and a fair deal for taxpayers. I made it clear that the Government will maintain the United Kingdom abatement.

Negotiations will continue in the Agriculture Council, which reconvenes on 2 March, and the ECOFIN and General Affairs councils, in preparation for the European Council meeting later this month, when the Presidency hopes to bring the negotiation to a conclusion.

Heads of State and Government also discussed duty free sales, negotiations between the EU and South Africa, relations between the EU and Russia, and the situation in Kosovo and the Middle East.

Select Committees (Leaked Documents)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his Department's policy to return to the relevant Select Committee leaked copies of unpublished committee documents. [73935]

The Prime Minister: As Members of the House, Ministers abide by its practices and conventions. I note that the Speaker has said in her letter of 1 March to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Standards and Privileges that the fundamental responsibility of Members who find themselves in possession of leaked committee papers must be to act in a way which does not impede the committee in the discharge of its responsibilities to the House. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made it clear on 24 February 1999, Official Report, column 417, that he and the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), had acted properly in this regard by not taking any action to interfere with the work of a Select Committee or give premature disclosure.

I also note that the Speaker has requested that, in the absence of an existing decision by the House, the Committee consider the points of order raised with her by the hon. Member and the hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Woodward) with a view to drawing up guidance for general application in such circumstances. Ministers, as members of the House, would of course abide by any future ruling on this matter.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

World Cup Bid

8. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what current actions his Department is taking in support of the 2006 world cup bid. [72096]

Mr. Banks: The Government will continue to provide the fullest diplomatic and promotional support for The FA's bid in accordance with FIFA bidding guidelines. I believe it is an excellent bid with a very good chance of success. My Department is currently helping The FA draft the formal bid submission and I have arranged to meet members of the FIFA Executive visiting this country over the coming weeks.

I am determined that The FA's bid should continue to be pursued with the utmost vigour and integrity, and very much hope that the bidding process between now and March 2000 will be conducted in a spirit of friendly rivalry.

Performing Arts

10. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he proposes to (i) extend access to the performing arts and (ii) reduce the costs of (a) performances and (b) tuition. [72098]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department regards increasing access to all artforms as a key objective. The Arts Council's New Audiences programme is already funding a number of pilot projects which reduce the cost of performances, and further grants have recently been announced.

My Department is setting up the Youth Music Trust which, as an early priority, will wish to review the issue of charging for music lessons. New arrangements were also announced in November to provide more equitable funding support for professional dance and drama students.

11. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to improve the accessibility of the productions of national theatre, opera and ballet companies for those living outside London. [72099]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Arts Council of England encourages the national companies to ensure the widest possible access to performances. Many of the national companies, including Royal Ballet, Birmingham Royal Ballet, Royal Shakespeare Company and Royal National Theatre, tour extensively across the country. In addition, the Arts Council announced last month a range of initiatives under the New Audiences programme which will cover the whole of England.

Library Service

13. Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to improve standards in public libraries. [72102]

16. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department has made of the service currently being provided by public libraries; and if he will make a statement. [72107]

Mr. Alan Howarth: For the first time in 1998 all library authorities were required to prepare an Annual Library Plan. I have sent each library authority both an overall appraisal of the 1998 Annual Library Plans and individual feedback about their own. The vast majority are to be congratulated on their Plans to build on and improve library services we can all be proud of, but I am asking 15 authorities to carry out more work on their Plans and a further 6 authorities to explain proposed cuts in services.

20. Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how he is encouraging Britain's library service to extend access to the new technologies. [72112]

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to help Britain's library service to extend access to new technologies. [72100]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government are committed to ensuring that every public library is connected to the National Grid for Learning through the Public Library IT Network by 2002, where practicable. To this end, £70 million of Lottery funding will be available from the New Opportunities Fund for the development of new digital resources and the provision of ICT training for public library staff together with £6 million from the DCMS/Wolfson Challenge Fund for pathfinder projects to support the development of ICT infrastructure.

The Government are now considering responses to the consultation document 'New Links for the Lottery' which set out proposals for a programme of 'Community Access to Lifelong Learning' which will further support the development of ICT infrastructure for public libraries.

Hospitality and Tourism Industries

14. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for improving the competitiveness and quality of service of the UK hospitality and tourism industries. [72103]

15. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his priorities are for improving the competitiveness and quality of the UK hospitality and tourism industries. [72105]

Janet Anderson: "Tomorrow's Tourism", the new strategy which we published on 26 February, contains a number of recommendations for action by central and local government, the tourism industry and other key players to improve the competitiveness and quality of the industry, and thus make it a world leader.

A copy of the strategy has been sent to every hon. Member.

Millennium Awards

17. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many communities have received Millennium awards. [72108]

Mr. Chris Smith: Thousands of communities throughout the UK are benefiting from awards from the Millennium Commission. Work is underway on capital projects on over 3,000 sites. Nine hundred and fifty communities across the UK have benefited so far from the awards scheme for individuals and last week I announced over 1,000 celebratory events as part of the Millennium Festival.

BBC (Free Television Licences)

18. Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the benefits of using advertisements as a means to fund free television licences for pensioners as part of the review of future funding of the BBC. [72109]

Janet Anderson: The current review of the future of the BBC licence fee after 2002 includes a consideration of the structure of the existing concessionary television licence scheme and whether a suitable alternative structure could be available. The independent review panel has invited written submissions on a number of matters, including possible alternative concessionary arrangements and how they might be funded. The panel will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the end of July this year. There will then be a period of public consultation on the panel's recommendations. It would not be right for the Government to preempt the outcome of the review.

Chess

19. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to promote the designation of chess as a sport. [72111]

Mr. Banks: I am very supportive of chess and have impressed on the Sports Councils the need for them to review their recognition criteria. My Department provides some £49,000 each year to the British Chess Federation (BCF) and I am looking very carefully at the ways in which chess can benefit from additional sources of funding.

Liquor Licensing Laws

21. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received regarding the effect on tourism in England and Wales of liberalising the liquor licensing laws. [72113]

Janet Anderson: We have received a number of representations from organisations and individuals in the tourism, hospitality and leisure industry. These have arisen in correspondence, in the course of meetings I have held with trade organisations, and during visits to industry events. I have also met my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for fire and emergency planning, liquor, drugs and local elections to make him aware of the importance of this issue to the tourism industry.

Tourism

23. Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department will take to ensure that growth in tourism is sustainable and does not damage the countryside or built heritage. [72115]

25. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department will take to ensure that growth in tourism is sustainable and does not damage the countryside or built heritage. [72117]

Janet Anderson: The long-term success of our tourism industry depends upon our safeguarding the best of our countryside and built heritage for future generations. The Government's new Tourism Strategy, Tomorrow's Tourism: A growth industry for the new Millennium, places sustainability at its core. It contains specific proposals for action to help tourism move towards a more sustainable future.

Sports Council

24. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of the Sports Council's Lottery grants have been directed to the council's priority areas. [72116]

Mr. Banks: Since the introduction of the Lottery Sports Fund, over £880 million has been awarded to over 2,700 projects. Of these, over 400 grants have been made to areas of identified deprivation, totalling over £240 million. This accounts for 15 per cent. of all awards and 27 per cent. of the total amount awarded.

Millennium Experience

29. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to include exhibits in the millennium experience relating to the brain's capacity to make ethical distinctions. [72121]

Janet Anderson: As the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) announced in November 1998, the MIND zone within the Dome will combine art and technology in its exploration of many aspects of the human mind—celebrating the unique creativity of the human brain. In addition, the Body and the Spirit zone will provide an opportunity to explore wider ethical issues.

30. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those who have agreed to sponsor the spirit zone. [72124]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is in positive discussion with a number of charitable organisations affiliated to major faith groups about support for the Spirit Zone. The company will confirm the involvement of particular organisations at an appropriate stage in those discussions.

Royal Naval College

31. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions the New Millennium Experience Company has had with the Royal Naval college, Greenwich, about co-operation during 2000. [72125]

Mr. Chris Smith: The New Millennium Experience Company's very successful Visitor Centre is located at the Royal Naval College in Greenwich and working relationships between the two organisations are excellent. These include discussions about plans for co-operation during the year 2000.

Millennium Dome (Insurance)

32. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the dome is insured for. [72126]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has a range of insurance cover relevant to different aspects of its legal and other responsibilities—and that includes building insurance. As is normal practice, the maximum sum payable under certain circumstances would enable the Dome to be rebuilt should that be necessary.

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made on the establishment of the UK Sports Institute. [74117]

Mr. Chris Smith: The English Sports Council is announcing today, Monday 1 March, with the Government's support, the United Kingdom Sports Institute's (UKSI's) network of centres around England. The English Sports Council is prepared to commit, in principle, up to £100 million of Lottery funding to help British athletes achieve future gold medals.

The provision of Lottery funding for the English network will, of course, remain a matter for the English Sports Council to decide on the basis of a full and proper assessment of suitable applications from the sites that have been identified, in line with the Policy and Financial Directions I have given them, and in line with advice from the UK Sports Council and UK Sports Institute when operational.

The Government are determined to ensure our leading sportsmen and women—now and in the future—have access to the very best sporting facilities and services to enable them to compete successfully against the world's top athletes. We have listened to their needs and concerns. The package announced today will deliver the right blend of local provision and central co-ordination. This is what sports want, it is what competitors want and I am confident we have got it right.

The network centres are central to delivering the UKSI's objectives. They will enable our sportsmen and women to have access to the most modern training facilities and methods in the world, near where they live. Competitors will in future be able to spend more time and energy in improving performance and less on struggling to find and get to the right place to train.

Facilities, expertise, resources and services will be sport specific and delivered where, when and how athletes want them. All sports will be able to make use of the facilities and services. There will be a mix of private and public investment. The public investment will be through Lottery funding. The UKSI will concentrate on the Olympic sports and those minority sports lacking a commercial element.

The UKSI will consist of a Headquarters in Sheffield, already announced, supported by network centres across England in 10 areas of England, as well as centres in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. In England these will be at Bath University, Bedford, Bisham Abbey, Crystal Place, Gateshead, Holme Pierrepont/Loughborough, Lilleshall, Manchester, Southampton University and Sheffield. These will be supported by regional sites of expertise; ensuring all best practice is harnessed for the benefit of athletes and coaches through a consortium approach.

The investment of £100 million of Lottery Funds into the network in England brings with it a commitment from the sports in the programme to make use of the services and facilities for a significant amount of time. Therefore the Sports Councils will expect the commitment to the network by the governing bodies of sport to be linked to the Lottery funding they receive through the World Class Performance Plans they produce.

Each of the networks in England, plus those in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, will have access to specialist science and medical advice from the UKSI's headquarters in Sheffield. The HQ will also co-ordinate research and other athlete services and training support to ensure that the UK's top athletes, wherever they may live, have access to the very best facilities and services through UKSI, with an emphasis on making the facilities easily accessible throughout the country. A separate announcement has already been made in respect of Scotland.

The UKSI's headquarters in Sheffield is also moving forward and announcements will be made at each key stage, as appointments are made and designs finalised.

Today's announcement adds another dimension to the extensive support now being provided to the UK's leading athletes. It will build on the success of the World Class performance programme and the English Sports Council's recent announcement extending this Lottery support to programmes for World Class Start and World Class Potential.

Sporting success brings with it an enormous sense of pride. Pride for the individual competitor; pride for those close to them; and pride for those of us who support the endeavours of British athletes. The UKSI is not a quick fix. It is a long term investment in the future performance of British sportsmen and women.

Work has already been undertaken in full consultation with Performance Directors, coaches, athletes and service providers to develop a menu of 40 UKSI services to be delivered directly to athletes by the network. The list has been further refined to indicate those which would be provided from the HQ and those services which must be provided via each of the network locations.

There has always been a commitment to deliver urgently needed support services as soon as they are ready, particularly those that do not currently exist. The athlete personal development programme, ACE UK, will be the first of these launched in May this year.

With the very best facilities, the best coaching, and the best scientific and medical support, I am confident that our top athletes—both those of today and of future generations—will have the best opportunity to turn potential into medals.

Departmental Asset Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the items sold by his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies from those listed in the National Assets Register of November 1997; if he will give in each case the amount of money realised; if he will estimate the total cash raised from such sales to date; and if he will make a statement. [70408]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 11 February 1999]: The Department itself has sold no assets since November 1997 and its agency, the Royal Parks Agency, has sold one horse which generated proceeds of £2,800. The information for the Department's associated public bodies is listed by asset category, which is in the format as shown in the National Asset Register. The total proceeds from asset sales by associated public bodies amounts to £195,082.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, columns 29–30, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred by (a) his agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (b) the Central Office of Information for relevant work carried out for his Department. [71026]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: No expenditure has been spent on behalf of my Department by its agency, non-departmental public bodies or the Central Office of Information. However, the following expenditure has been incurred by my Department's agency and non-departmental public bodies from their own resources.

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Public Opinion Research | 2,849,124 |
| TV, Radio and Newspaper Advertising | 12,507,977 |
| Direct Mail | 1,056,080 |

The figures may also include expenditure met from non government funding.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, columns 29–30, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71027]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The following expenditure has been incurred by my Department's task forces and review bodies. I have no focus groups.

| Title | Cost incurred to date £ | |
|---|---|---|

| The Library and Information Commission's public library network implementation Committee | £200,000 | Report "Building the New Library Network" published October 1998 |

DCMS staff costs for all reviews, taskforces and advisory groups were met from within the Department's existing running costs.

This excludes Advisory NDPBs which have been established since 1 May 1997.

Disabled People

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what amounts in his Department's budget for 1998–99 can be attributed to spending on disabled people; and what proportion this represents of total departmental spending. [71285]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department takes the principle of equal opportunities very seriously. Facilities and support to ensure reasonable access to persons with disabilities is built into many of my NDPBs' main programmes. However, it is not always possible to disaggregate all spending on specific initiatives/activities for disabled people within those programmes. It is not, therefore, possible to provide a meaningful answer on the amounts spent attributable to disabled people and the proportion this represents of my Department's total budget.

Heritage Lottery Fund

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 1999, Official Report, columns 77–78, on the Heritage Lottery Fund, if he discussed his answer with the (a) former and (b) present Chairman of the Heritage Fund. [72228]

Mr. Chris Smith: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts did not discuss the Answer with either the former or the present Chairman of the Heritage Lottery Fund. The guarantee we have given that there will be no further adjustments to the percentage shares of Lottery income for the arts, sport, heritage and charities, and that each can count on receiving 16 per cent. after the current temporary reduction ends in May, and beyond 2001, is excellent news for these good causes and for the Heritage Lottery Fund.

Award Ceremonies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what awards ceremonies he has attended since becoming Secretary of State. [72708]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 24 February 1999]: I have attended the following awards ceremonies:

ABSA Pairing Scheme Reception on 24 February 1999

Local Radio Licences

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what representations he has received from the Chairman of Southampton City Radio Ltd. concerning that company's bid for a local radio licence; [73117]

(2) what representations he has received concerning the award of local radio licences in Southampton, Bournemouth and Winchester. [73116]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 February 1999]: I have received one letter from a company in support of the Radio Authority's award of a licence to Southampton City Radio Ltd. and one from a group expressing their concern about the award of independent local radio licences in the area of Southampton, Bournemouth and Winchester.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what official visits he, his Ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73455]

Mr. Chris Smith: Neither my Ministers, officials nor I have visited Zimbabwe since May 1997.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many Air Miles have been earned by him and each of his ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73334]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 141.

No air miles have been received by me or my Ministers in connection with any travel on official business.

Arts Boards

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received on the funding of arts boards. [72092]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My department has received a number of representations concerning the Regional Arts Boards on a variety of issues, including funding.

Musical Instrument Tuition

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he has taken to increase young people's access to musical instrument tuition. [72110]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced last summer the creation of a new independent Youth Music Trust with £10m Arts Council Lottery funding a year, which will work to enable greater access to instrumental music making for young people. It will be operational in April. Taken together with the Standards Fund announced on 27 January by my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, this provides a total minimum investment of £180m over three years for the improvement of music making opportunities.

SCOTLAND

New Housing Partnership

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the timescale is for the implementation of the New Housing Partnership scheme. [70314]

Mr. Macdonald: New Housing Partnerships were introduced in 1997–98 there were two rounds of bidding for resources. A third round, for resources in the period 1999–2002, is at present in progress.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fisheries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (i) the successful applications (a) by location and (b) by value and the (ii) the total value of the awards made in the most recent round of the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance scheme. [70714]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The information is as follows:

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has sought from the LECs in determining which projects to assist under the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance scheme. [70715]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The views of the Local Enterprise Companies are taken into account in the appraisal process which precedes every round of awards under the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the next round of the Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance scheme will open. [70717]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 22 February 1999]: Applications for the next and final round under the current Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance had to be submitted by 31 December 1998. Decisions on these awards are expected to be announced before the end of June 1999. The possibility of a successor scheme and its funding is being negotiated in the context of the Agenda 2000 proposals.

Genetically Modified Food

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the food industry anent the production of genetically modified food; and if he will make a statement. [69799]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 15 February 1999]: Scottish Ministers have had no recent discussions with the food industry about the production of genetically modified food. However, the industry is included in the broad public consultation on the biosciences currently being undertaken to ensure that the comprehensive framework to regulate and assess genetically modified products will continue to keep pace as this potentially very beneficial area of science develops.

The Government's overriding duty is to safeguard the public and the environment and this is achieved through rigorous regulation and assessment of products based on the best possible scientific advice.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the full research findings of Dr. Pusztai in respect of genetically modified food. [72208]

Mr. Macdonald: Copies of the Audit Committee Report and the accompanying Press Release issued by the Rowett Research Institute on 28 October 1998; Dr. Pusztai's Report in response to the Audit Committee's Report; the Audit Committee's further response to Dr. Pusztai's report and the accompanying Press Release by the Rowett Research Institute on 16 February 1999, have been placed in the House of Commons Library. These reports cover all the relevant experiments carried out at the Rowett Research Institute.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the parliamentary constituencies which he has visited in an official capacity in the past 12 months. [71340]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 15 February 1999]: The information requested, for visits I have made during the past 12 months in my capacity as Secretary of State, is shown in the table.

Open Countryside

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land held by his Department he estimates would fall within the definition of open country as set out in the consultation document Access to the Open Countryside of February 1998. [71634]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 22 February 1999]: The consultation document Access to the Open Countryside did not apply to Scotland where the law and traditions relating to access differ from those in England and Wales. Earlier this month my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced our intention to lay formal legislation for consideration by the Scottish Parliament that would introduce a right of access, to be exercised responsibly for informal recreation and passage.

The land held by the Scottish Office has not been classified according to the definition of open country set out in the consultation document.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Further Education

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the costs for (a) line management time, (b) teaching time spent on commercial activities, (c) non-summable teaching time, (d) in-service training, (e) costs for premises not used for summable teaching activity and (f) administration staff costs not related to summable teaching staff activity are included in the staff cost per weighted sum shown on pages 44 and 45 of the Further Education in Scotland 1997 report; [71955]

(2) if the costs for (a) teaching non-staff costs related to non-summable teaching activity, commercial activity and line management, (b) other premises costs for premises not used for summable teaching activity and (c) other administration costs not related to summable teaching activity are included in the non-staff cost per weighted sum shown on pages 44 and 45 of the Further Education in Scotland 1997 report. [71956]

Mrs. Liddell: The unit cost tables on pages 44 and 45 of the Further Education in Scotland 1997 Report include only costs relating to college activity which is fundable by The Scottish Office. No costs relating to non-SUMmable activity are therefore included in either the staff or non-staff costs per weighted SUM shown on those pages.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what year funding in respect of bursaries was classed as income for further and higher education colleges. [71937]

Mrs. Liddell: The incorporated further education colleges in Scotland assumed responsibility for bursaries from 1 April 1996. Since that date annual grant in aid allocations have been made by the Secretary of State to the colleges for bursary purposes.

From 1 July 1999 the Secretary of State's powers to fund further education colleges will pass to the Scottish Further Education Funding Council.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that Unit Costs Data Form BMU submissions by incorporated colleges are (a) accurate and (b) submitted on a comparable basis; [71935]

(2) if he will make a statement on the (a) internal and (b) external auditing arrangements for the Unit Cost Data Form BMU submitted by incorporated colleges. [71936]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scottish Office provides detailed guidance to colleges regarding completion of the Unit Cost Data Forms BMU, in order to ensure accuracy and comparability. Although the forms are not themselves audited the figures are reconciled with colleges' audited annual accounts.

From 1 July 1999 the responsibility for issue or analysis of such forms will pass to the Scottish Further Education Funding Council.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public funds available to further and higher education colleges as income. [71938]

Mrs. Liddell: The public funds available to colleges of further and higher education as income include grant in aid allocations made by the Secretary of State, tuition fees paid by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland, contractual income form the Employment Service (including in respect of New Deal activity), the local enterprise network (for Skillseekers and other training) and the Secretary of State (for Project 2000 nurse training) and other grant income which may include European Regional or Social Funds, local authority grants and research grants.

From 1 July 1999 these will be matters for the Scottish Parliament, apart from the grant in aid allocations which from that date will become the responsibility of the Scottish Further Education Funding Council.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount each further and higher education college has acquired from his Department's budget in terms of (a) recurrent grant in aid, (b) bursaries, and (c) restructuring and capital costs in each year since incorporation in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms at 1998–99 prices. [72039]

Mrs. Liddell: In view of the volume of information requested I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House of Commons.

From 1 July 1999 the Secretary of State's powers to fund further education colleges will pass to the Scottish Further Education Funding Council.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (a) guidelines and (b) penalties apply to spending by incorporated colleges of grant allocation on (i) non-teaching staff, facilities and equipment and (ii) teaching staff, facilities and equipment. [71934]

Mrs. Liddell: The Financial Memorandum between the Secretary of State and the Boards of Management of the Colleges of Further Education, dated February 1996, sets out the guidelines and penalties which apply to spending by incorporated colleges of all grant in aid allocations. The Secretary of State may require the repayment, in whole or in part, of sums paid by him if any condition subject to which sums were paid is not complied with.

From 1 July 1999 the Secretary of State's powers to fund further education colleges will pass to the Scottish Further Education Funding Council.

Dr. Pusztai

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what employment procedures were followed during the recent dismissal of Dr Pusztai from the Rowett Institute. [71952]

Mr. Macdonald: Following his formal retirement from the Rowett Research Institute in 1990, at the age of 60, Dr. Pusztai was engaged as a consultant and Senior Research Fellow on a year-to-year contract, while drawing full pension. The Director of the Rowett Research Institute informed him in August 1998, in writing, that his existing contract would not be renewed when it ended on 31 December 1998.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he has given to businesses in central Edinburgh on the potential impact of (a) the interim location of the Scottish Parliament in the Assembly Rooms, (b) the new parliament building at Holyrood on its completion, (c) the estimated completion date of the new building and (d) the estimated date of transfer of the parliament from the Assembly Rooms to Holyrood; how often he gives local business such guidance; and if he will make a statement. [72299]

Mr. Dewar: My Ministerial colleagues and I meet regularly with a wide variety of representatives of the Edinburgh business community and other local organisations. Views are exchanged on the impact of the new Parliament in both of the proposed locations.

The Scottish Office, the City of Edinburgh Council and Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise Ltd. are joint sponsors of a study on "The Scottish Parliament: Maximising Local Economic Benefit through Area Regeneration". The study team has consulted with all identified interested parties, including representatives of local commerce and industry. The final report is expected shortly.

The estimated completion date of the new Parliament building at Holyrood is autumn 2001; the transfer date will be a matter for Members of the new Scottish Parliament to decide.

Caesarean Sections

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many caesarean sections took place in Scotland in each of the last five years; and what they were in each year as a percentage of all deliveries. [72534]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is as follows:

Maternities—Scotland
Number and percentage involving a caesarean section;

| Year ending 31 March | Maternities | Caesarean sections Number | Percentage |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1994 | 61,954 | 9,716 | 15.7 |
| 1995 | 59,862 | 9,688 | 16.2 |
| 1996 | 58,478 | 9,604 | 16.4 |
| 1997 | 57,499 | 9,802 | 17.0 |
| 1998[1] | 57,478 | 10,386 | 18.1 |

[1] Provisional data

Notes:
1. The information shown in the table has been extracted from the Scottish Morbidity Record (SMR02)—Maternity discharge.
2. Maternities are defined as a pregnancy which results in a live or stillbirth, multiple pregnancies being counted only once.
3. In multiple deliveries individual babies may have different modes of delivery.
4. The data exclude maternities delivered at home.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many health authorities in Scotland, and in which ones, the rate of caesarean section exceeds the WHO recommended rate. [72533]

Mr. Galbraith: The World Health Organisation (WHO) does not make specific recommendations about rates of caesarean delivery which will inevitably vary from place to place and will reflect the health and nutritional status of pregnant women and the level of maternity care provision. The rate of caesarean section for each Health Board in Scotland is as follows:

Maternities—Scotland; by Health Board area of treatment
Number and percentage involving a caesarean section
Year ending 31 March 1998

| Area of treatment | Maternities | Caesarean sections Number | Percentage |
|---|---|---|---|
| Scotland | 57,478 | 10,386 | 18.1 |
| Argyll and Clyde | 4,517 | 927 | 20.5 |
| Ayrshire and Arran | 3,864 | 770 | 19.9 |
| Borders | 973 | 169 | 17.4 |
| Dumfries and Galloway | 1,531 | 258 | 16.9 |
| Fife | 3,181 | 598 | 18.8 |
| Forth Valley | 3,288 | 536 | 16.3 |
| Grampian | 5,996 | 1,064 | 17.7 |
| Greater Glasgow | 12,877 | 2,283 | 17.7 |
| Highland | 2,393 | 470 | 19.6 |
| Lanarkshire | 4,635 | 872 | 18.8 |
| Lothian | 9,053 | 1,635 | 18.1 |
| Orkney | 116 | 18 | 15.5 |
| Shetland | 193 | 10 | 5.2 |
| Tayside | 4,667 | 743 | 15.9 |
| Western Isles | 194 | 33 | 17.0 |

Notes:
1. The information shown in the table has been extracted from the Scottish Morbidity Record (SMR02)—Maternity discharge.
2. Maternities are defined as a pregnancy which results in a live or stillbirth, multiple pregnancies being counted only once.
3. In multiple deliveries individual babies may have different modes of delivery.
4. The data exclude maternities delivered at home.
5. The data provided are provisional.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Rowett Institute

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the annual reports of the Rowett Institute for the years 1997 and 1998. [71953]

Mr. Macdonald: The Rowett Research Institute's Annual Report for 1997–98 should be available in March-April 1999. The Report for 1998–99 should be available at the same time next year.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make publicly available all the research documentation concerning the experiments carried out with genetically modified potatoes at the Rowett Institute. [71954]

Mr. Macdonald: Copies of the Audit Committee Report and the accompanying Press Release issued by the Rowett Research Institute on 28 October 1998; Dr. Pusztai's Report in response to the Audit Committee's Report; the Audit Committee's further response to Dr. Pusztai's Report and the accompanying Press Release by the Rowett Research Institute on 16 February 1999, have been placed in the House of Commons Library. These reports cover all the relevant experiments carried out at the Rowett Research Institute.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Sheriff Court, Dumbarton

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) solemn and (b) summary, (i) civil and (ii) criminal cases which have been adjudicated upon at the Sheriff Court in Dumbarton in each of the past five years. [72884]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is given in the following table:

Dumbarton Sheriff Court

| Cases Concluded | 1994 | 1995 | 1996 | 1997 | 1998 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Criminal | | | | | |
| Summary Cases | 2,775 | 2,584 | 2,646 | 2,654 | 2,419 |
| Solemn Cases | 92 | 80 | 72 | 76 | 90 |
| Civil[1] | | | | | |
| Ordinary Actions | 1,000 | 1,038 | 967 | 895 | 1,052 |
| Summary Cause | 2,544 | 2,150 | 1,996 | 2,040 | 2,042 |

[1] Civil does not include miscellaneous civil proceedings e.g. adoptions, simplified divorces, sequestrations etc.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Social Exclusion

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Government in tackling social exclusion in Scotland. [74118]

Mr. Dewar: Social exclusion is a pernicious phenomenon and we have made clear our determination to confront it. Since coming into office we have put in place a wide-ranging and well resourced programme of action. We have today published a social inclusion strategy for Scotland, which has been developed and endorsed by the Scottish Social Inclusion Network, chaired by my noble Friend Lord Sewel. The strategy aims to ensure that action already underway achieves the greatest possible impact, and that future action to promote social inclusion is integrated, evaluated and informed by new ideas and existing best practice.

A statement of the Government's programme of action is set out in a companion document to the strategy, also published today. Copies of both documents are available from the House Library.

From 1 July 1999 action taken forward under the social inclusion strategy will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Elderly (Long-term Care)

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to respond to the report of the Royal Commission on Long Term Care of the Elderly. [74394]

Mr. Dewar: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has indicated today, we have just received the Royal Commission's very full and detailed report. I join my right hon. Friend in his tribute to the work of the Commission, under the chairmanship of Sir Stewart Sutherland. We are grateful to all the Commission members, including the other Scottish-based member, Professor Mary Marshall of the Dementia Services Development Centre at the University of Stirling.

The report's recommendations are important and wide ranging. They will require very careful consideration. Some relate to matters such as social security and pensions which are to be reserved to Westminster. Scottish Ministers and officials will play a full part in inter-departmental discussions on these matters, both now and, I am sure, after devolution. Other recommendations relate to matters such as social work, health and housing, which will be devolved. From 1 July 1999 these will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament and the response to the recommendations will be for the Scottish Executive and Parliament to take forward in the light of the informed debate which the Commission hopes to see, and our proposals for modernising social work services which will be set out in a White Paper later this month.

The Commission has made two key recommendations. The first is that personal care as defined by the Commission (that is, not including the costs of board and lodging) should be free in all settings. This recommendation will clearly have to be addressed in the light of the spending priorities of the Scottish Parliament. The second is that there should be a National Care Commission to look at the whole system in a strategic way, represent the interests of older people receiving services and produce national benchmarks. Again this will have to be considered carefully.

I congratulate the Royal Commission and Sir Stewart on the production of this report. I am confident that the Scottish Executive and Parliament will give it the full consideration it deserves and requires.

Seals

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of seal damage to salmon in the last five years. [73908]

Mr. Macdonald: Seals are opportunistic predators which take whatever prey is locally abundant, and only by studying rivers on a site-by-site basis can the effects of seals on salmon be measured.

A study based on direct observation of seals and their impact on salmon in the estuaries of the Rivers Dee and Don was conducted between 1993 and 1996. This found that common seals were the most prevalent species, that peak numbers were seen in the winter months, but that the number of individual seals was very low.

A new project studying the interaction between the two species has begun on the River Conon, funded by The Scottish Office, through the Marine Laboratory, and Aberdeen University.

There are no estimates of predation on salmonids in the open sea.

From 1 July 1999 the protection and management of seals in Scottish waters will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to control the seal population. [73909]

Mr. Macdonald: A delicate balance must be struck between maintaining a sustainable population of seals and protecting legitimate fishing interests. Current legislation provides local solutions to local problems.

Under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, fishermen are permitted to shoot seals during the open seasons, providing an appropriately licensed firearm is used. Limited shooting under licence is permitted during the close seasons for the prevention of damage to fisheries.

Throughout the year, fishermen may shoot seals to prevent them from causing damage to a fishing net or fishing tackle, or to any fish captured by that net or tackle.

In April 1998 we announced the lifting of the year round protection given to common seals in Shetland under the Conservation of Seals (Common Seals)(Shetland Islands Area) Order 1991. We have no plans at present to change the existing management regime. This matter is kept under constant review.

From 1 July 1999 the protection and management of seals in Scottish waters will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total number of cases referred to, and awaiting review by, the Criminal Cases Review Commission; [72772]

(2) how many cases are awaiting intensive review by the case review managers that work for the Criminal Cases Review Commission. [72771]

Kate Hoey: I understand that, at the end of January, 1,055 cases were awaiting review by the Criminal Cases Review Commission (of which 1,010 were awaiting detailed review) and 482 cases were under active review.

Police (Millennium Celebrations)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 February 1999, Official Report, columns 92–93, on policing Millennium celebrations, what proportion of the £176 million additional special payment is in respect of the Millennium. [72665]

Mr. Boateng: The £176 million special payment allocated to the Metropolitan Police is in recognition of the force's distinct national and capital city functions which, in the next financial year, include policing related to Millennium celebrations. It is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to decide on the operational deployment of his resources.

Pilot Projects

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the pilot projects instigated by his Department since 1 May 1997, indicating the area in which each pilot took, or is taking, place. [72638]

Mr. Straw: Details of key pilot projects instigated by the Home Office since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

| Peer partnership (basic skills) | 7 prisons across the estate | August to September 1998 |
| | Birmingham | January 1999 |
| Disinfecting tablets | 11 prisons across the estate | July to November 1998 |

A number of pilot projects will also form part of the Crime Reduction Programme, beginning in April 1999. There will be about 70 projects initially, launched as part of the burglary and targeted policing initiatives within the Programme. There will be others to follow. The first projects are expected to be confirmed shortly, following validation of the bids that have been submitted to the Home Office.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 on domestic violence. [72769]

Mr. Boateng: Tackling domestic violence requires partnership working between agencies in the public, private and voluntary sectors. The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 has reinforced the statutory framework under which such partnership working can take place. We have always made it clear that we expect the local crime and disorder partnerships set up under the Act to identify the level of domestic violence in their area and to develop and implement strategies for reducing it.

The first crime and disorder audits and strategies should be in place by 1 April 1999 and are currently being drawn up. It is too early to draw from them any general conclusions, but a number of audits—including Croydon's—have already identified domestic violence as a priority.

Deportations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners sentenced to life imprisonment (a) have been deported upon release in each of the last five years and (b) will be deported on release; and to which countries in each case. [72930]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the precise information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The available information, relating to deportation removals following recommendation by a court, or on grounds conducive to the public good following conviction for a criminal offence, is given in the table.

Deportation removals[1] following recommendation by a court[2] or on grounds conducive to the public good[3] following conviction for a criminal offence, 1994–1998[4]

Number of persons

| | Removed or departed voluntarily[5] |

| 1998[6] | 320 |

[1] Includes persons departing voluntarily following initiation of deportation action against them.
[2] Under section 3(6) of the Immigration Act 1971.
[3] Under section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971.
[4] Data are rounded.
[5] 1998 data are provisional and relate to 1 January to 30 November only.

Drugs Misuse

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the occasions on which gammahydroxybutyrate has been referred to the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs; and what representations have been made on its use; [72902]

(2) what criteria are applied in determining whether the degree of abuse of a drug and the social consequences arising from its misuse are sufficient to warrant (a) the banning of the drug under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and (b) other Government action. [72903]

Mr. George Howarth: Representations have periodically been made since 1994 for the control under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 of gammahydroxybutyrate. In total, eight Parliamentary Questions have been answered in this House and nine letters from Members.

The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, which is established under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 to advise the Government on drug misuse issues, has considered the misuse of gammahydroxybutyrate on three occasions—in May 1994 shortly after the drug first appeared as a drug of misuse in this country; in November 1996; and in May 1998.

Section 1 of the 1971 Act provides that the Council has a duty to keep under review drugs which are being or appear likely to be misused and of which the misuse is having to appear capable of having harmful effects sufficient to constitute a social problem; and to give to Ministers advice on measures (whether or not involving alteration of the law) to be taken for preventing the misuse of such drugs or dealing with social problems connected with their misuse.

When reviewing the misuse of a substance and deciding what measures should in its opinion be taken, the matters which the Council take into account include the substance's pharmacology; availability (including any existing controls on the substance); prevalence of misuse; effects on health; abuse liability; dependence potential; and therapeutic usefulness.

EU Nationals

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters have been sent to Community nationals in the United Kingdom advising them that they are no longer considered to be exercising treaty rights and should therefore leave the United Kingdom since 1 February 1998. [72865]

Kate Hoey: Between 1 February and 31 August 1998, 9 Residence Permits or Documents were revoked.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many EU nationals are estimated to have been exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72871]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information available relates to the number of nationals of other European Union countries who were usually resident in the United Kingdom in autumn 1998. There were some 870,000 such persons, of whom 450,000 were citizens of the Irish Republic.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average time for consideration of applications for residence documents or evidence of residence made by third country family members of EU nationals exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom during the period 1 February 1998 to date; [72870]

(2) what was the average time for consideration of applications for residence documents for EU nationals exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72869]

Kate Hoey: The information sought is not recorded in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) residence permits and (b) leave to remain as the spouse of an EEA national exercising treaty rights, were refused on the basis that the marriage was one of convenience over the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72875]

Kate Hoey: From 1 February to 31 August 1998, 216 applications for residence documents on the basis of marriage to an European Economic Area (EEA) national were refused. The reasons for refusal are not separately categorised. The granting of leave to remain relates to applications made under the Immigration Rules and does not apply to requests for residence documents by the spouses of EEA nationals exercising treaty rights.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the length in time of residence documents or endorsements given to third country national spouses of EC nationals exercising treaty rights who have been granted indefinite leave to remain. [72855]

Kate Hoey: Where a European Economic Area (EEA) national has been granted indefinite leave to remain, the third country national spouse may apply either for leave to remain under the Immigration Rules on the basis of marriage to a person present or settled in the United Kingdom or for a residence document in accordance with European Community law. In the former case, the applicant, if successful, would be granted 12 months' leave to remain in the first instance; in the latter case, the third country national spouse may apply for a residence document which, if issued, would have the same validity as any extant residence permit issued to the EEA spouse. If the EEA spouse no longer holds a valid residence permit, one would be issued with five years' validity as the basis for the issue of a residence document of the same validity to the third country national.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many EU nationals were refused entry to the United Kingdom on the grounds of (a) public policy, (b) public security and (c) public health during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72866]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information relates to European Union nationals who were refused leave to enter because their exclusion from the United Kingdom was deemed conducive to the public good or because they were medically undesirable. A provisional total of 46 persons in the first of those categories were removed between February and December 1998. During the same period, no European Union nationals were recorded as having been refused and removed on health grounds.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measure has been implemented in the United Kingdom to give effect to the decision of the European Court of Justice in the case of Vander Elst [1994] ECR 1-3803 to the effect that third country national employees of service providers based in another member state are entitled by Community law to exercise on behalf of their employers the right to provide services in the United Kingdom. [72873]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Effect is given to implementing this judgment through instructions that third country national employees of service providers established in another member state are not required to obtain work permits when they are sent to provide services in the United Kingdom.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for residence permits were made by EU nationals exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom in the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72861]

Kate Hoey: From 1 February to 31 August 1998, 1,424 applications for residence permits were received.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for residence documents and endorsements by third country national spouses of Community nationals exercising treaty rights were refused entry on the basis that he considered the marriage to be one of convenience during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72872]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret the information requested is not available in the form requested.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for residence documents by third country national family members of EU nationals exercising treaty rights were made in the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72877]

Kate Hoey: From 1 February to 31 August 1998, 2,608 applications for residence documents by third country national family members of European Union nationals exercising treaty rights were received.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for residence documents by EU nationals exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom were granted in the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72857]

Kate Hoey: Between 1 February and 31 August 1998 (the latest date for which figures are available), 894 residence permits were issued to European Union nationals exercising Treaty rights.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residence documents and evidence of residence were granted to third country national family members of EU nationals exercising treaty rights in the United Kingdom during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72864]

Kate Hoey: From 1 February to 31 August 1998, 1,596 residence documents were issued to third country national family members (spouses and other family members) of European Union nationals.

Passports and Identity Documents

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) passports and (b) identity documents purporting to be issued by a member state presented on arrival in the United Kingdom have been the subject of inquiries with the authorities of the member state as to their (i) genuineness and (ii) correct issuance during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72858]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Statistics are not kept of the number of such inquiries. Normally, document abuse is identified without the need to refer to the issuing authority. In 1998, 3,478 forged European Union/European Economic Area travel documents were detected at our ports of entry.

Entry Clearance

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-EEA family members who arrived in possession of entry clearance holding an EEA family permit were refused entry by the immigration officer at a British port of entry during the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72874]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for leave to remain in the United Kingdom were submitted in the last year; and how many are currently outstanding. [73002]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that full information is not available in the form requested. In 1998, some 46,000 asylum applications, including those at the ports of entry but excluding dependants, were received and at the end of the year 68,400 applications were outstanding. The number of applications received from non-European Economic Area nationals for an extension of stay is not available, but 157,000 initial decisions were made in 1998 and it is estimated that around 27,000 applications were outstanding at the end of the year.

Lowdham Grange Prison

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the arrangement between Premier Prisons Services and his Department for the employment of prisoners at Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange, Nottingham; and how many other such arrangements are proposed, where and with whom. [73173]

Mr. George Howarth: The aim is to generate work for the certified normal accommodation of 500 prisoners at Lowdham Grange prison. Approximately 150 prisoners are employed on jobs servicing the prison such as in the kitchens, cleaning and gardening. There is capacity for 350 prisoners at the industrial complex within the prison. At present, some 250 prisoners are employed at the complex on work for five different companies. The work consists of coat hanger recycling, paper hat manufacture for the catering industry, welding, painting model soldiers and folding and enveloping charity bags. Premier Prison Services Ltd. manages the prison and is actively seeking work for the remaining 100 prisoners from other companies in the locality.

Premier Prison Services' policy, which is in line with that of the Prison Service, is to seek work for prisoners which is not economically viable elsewhere, cannot be done in the United Kingdom or cannot be organised by a company due to restrictions on its premises or labour force.

The industrial complex at Lowdham Grange is operated on a cost recovery basis and, should any profit be generated, it would be returned to the prisoners' amenities fund.

Turkish Workers

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory provision gives effect to the rights of Turkish workers as regards residence and employment in accordance with Article 6(3) of the Association of Council Design 1/80 adopted under the Turkey/EC Association Agreement 1963 and its Protocol. [72867]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no separate statutory provision which gives effect to Article 6(3) of the Agreement. Instructions to caseworkers ensure that Turkish nationals who have rights under the Agreement are granted leave to remain in the United Kingdom, as appropriate.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people, on average, were employed in the EC group of the Immigration and Nationality Department between 1 February 1997 and 31 January 1998. [72863]

Kate Hoey: The number of staff in post for each month from February 1997 to December 1998 is given in the table. Responsibility for EC casework was transferred from EC group of the European Directorate to the Integrated Casework Directorate in December 1998.

European Directorate (EC group) monthly staff in post

| Month | 1997 | 1998 |
|---|---|---|
| January | — | 28 |
| February | 22 | 28 |
| March | 21 | 28 |
| April | 23 | 28 |
| May | 23 | 28 |
| June | 23 | 28 |
| July | 23 | 28 |
| August | 23 | 28 |
| September | 23 | 28 |
| October | 23 | 29 |
| November | 27 | 27 |
| December | 27 | 0 |

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters sent to the Immigration and Nationality Department by special and recorded delivery in the last six months have not yet been opened. [72859]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are currently 4,730 items of recorded and registered post to be opened in the Integrated Caseworking Directorate Mail Handling Section. The earliest date of unopened post is 9 February 1999. There are a further 507 items to be opened in the Travel Documents Section. The earliest date of unopened post is 3 February 1999. Despite the disruption caused by the move of offices, the backlog on post opening should reduce further in the weeks to come.

Young Offenders

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the report on the former young offenders' institution at the Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester. [73238]

Mr. George Howarth: It is intended to publish the full results of the evaluation of the young offender regime at Colchester Military Corrective Training Centre at the end of 1999, when one-year reconviction data will be available.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the education facilities that exist in each of the establishments in England and Wales where young offenders are held. [73497]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 13 January 1999, Official Report, column 198.

Education for prisoners over the age of 16 years is entirely optional. Education provision in prison establishments in England and Wales where young offenders are held focuses on remedial education in basic skills, combined with a wide variety of experience and training to equip young offenders to deal more effectively with life after imprisonment.

Education provision for those under 17 years of age is linked to the National Curriculum for schools insofar as facilities allow.

Information on educational facilities in each of the establishments in England and Wales where young offenders are held is not held centrally. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unsolved Murders

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police officers in England and Wales who have been murdered in the last 10 years and in respect of whom no one has been brought to court charged with their murder; and if he will make a statement. [73554]

Mr. Boateng: I will write to the right hon. Member with full details.

Speeding (Loughton)

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been fined for exceeding the speed limit at Forest Side, Claypit Hill, Gravel Hill, Pynest Green Lane and Wellington Hill, all situated in High Beech, Loughton, in each of the last five years. [73615]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Air Miles have been earned by him and each of his ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73340]

Mr. Straw: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 141.

Detailed information on any air miles earned by Ministers as a result of official travel is not recorded centrally.

Victim Support

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Government funding for Victim Support has been for each of the last 12 years. [73553]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office grant to Victim Support in each of the last 12 financial years is as follows:

| Financial Year | Grant (£ million) |
|---|---|
| 1987–88 | 1.763 |
| 1988–89 | 2.740 |
| 1989–90 | 3.910 |
| 1990–91 | 4.735 |
| 1991–92 | 5.670 |
| 1992–93 | 7.260 |
| 1993–94 | 8.375 |
| 1994–95 | 10.016 |
| 1995–96 | 10.817 |
| 1996–97 | 11.682 |
| 1997–98 | 12.682 |
| 1998–99 | 12.682 |

As announced on 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 210, the grant is being increased substantially from 1 April 1999 and, by 2001–02, will have risen to some £19 million, a 50 per cent. increase over the current figure.

Schizophrenia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those convicted of crimes in England in the last year for which figures are available have ever been admitted to National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses. [73358]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 25 February 1999, Official Report, column 393.

Stephen Lawrence Inquiry

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 21–34, if he will describe the procedure to be used in the inquiry by his Permanent Secretary into the unauthorised publication of extracts from the Macpherson report; when he expects the inquiry to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [73518]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 26 February 1999]: My Permanent Secretary has instituted a leak investigation under well established procedures. An independent investigator will be assisted by my Department's Security Unit. He will report in the first instance to the Permanent Secretary, who will report to me. It is not known how long the investigation will take. I will inform the House of its outcome in due course.

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 21–34, how many copies were in circulation of the Macpherson report prior to 21 February and who had access to them; what steps were taken to preserve the security of the report; and if he will make a statement. [73525]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 26 February 1999]: It would not be in the interests of the investigation now under way into the leak of parts of Sir William Macpherson's Report on the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry to give these details. I will inform the House of the outcome of that investigation in due course.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in full the diary of official appointments for the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), from 15 February to 21 February; [73713]

(2) if he will list those journalists who entered the Home Office to meet Ministers or officials during the period 15 February to 21 February; [73710]

(3) if he will list the journalists met by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), in his official capacity in (a) the Home Office and (b) his room at the House from 15 February to 21 February; [73712]

(4) if he will list all those questioned by the leak inquiry team on the Macpherson report; [73734]

(5) which Home Office Ministers were provided with a full copy of the Macpherson report prior to 21 February; on what date each was given the copy; and if any Ministers were given extra copies; [73711]

(6) if he will list those journalists granted a pass to visit ministers in the Home Office in the period 15 February to 21 February. [73709]

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each day from his receipt of Sir William Macpherson's report on Stephen Lawrence's death of 21 February, how many copies were out of the Department and in whose possession each copy resided while out of the Department. [73800]

Mr. Straw: It would not be in the interests of the investigation now under way into the leak of parts of Sir William Macpherson's Report on the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry to give these details.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report on the leak inquiry on the Macpherson report. [73733]

Mr. Straw: There is no fixed length of time for the leak investigation; the investigating officer will make his report as soon as he is able to do so.

Airport Liaison Officers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each airport to which an airline liaison officer has been posted, the number of people who have been prevented from boarding planes as a result of action taken by the officers. [73888]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Airline liaison officers are posted overseas to offer advice and assistance to airlines on inadequately documented passengers. Any decision to refuse carriage to a passenger is solely a matter for the airline concerned. In 1998, airlines operating from the five locations where airline liaison officers were based refused carriage to 2,095 prospective passengers who were not adequately documented for travel to the United Kingdom. The figures for each location are: Accra 592; Colombo 191; Delhi 922; Dhaka 220; and Nairobi 170.

Police (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with senior police officers of Gloucestershire Constabulary concerning the impact on services of the 1999–2000 financial settlement; and if he will make a statement. [73138]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The Chief Constable of the Gloucestershire Constabulary (Mr. Tony Butler) wrote to my officials about the 1999–2000 funding settlement and met them subsequently to discuss the force's financial position. My officials replied to Mr. Butler on 18 January.

Gloucestershire Constabulary's funding will be £62.4 million in 1999–2000, an increase of 1.4 per cent. over 1998–99. According to latest information from the Audit Commission, expenditure on policing per head of population in Gloucestershire is £105.79. This expenditure level is higher than that in 19 other forces.

It is for the chief officer of each force to decide on the operational deployment of the total resources allocated to them.

Security Service

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the present remit of MI5 extends to monitoring pressure groups involved in campaigns against genetically modified food. [73399]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service has no powers to investigate any such pressure group and therefore does not do so unless it is suspected of presenting a threat to national security or to the economic well-being of the United Kingdom; or unless the Service has been tasked by a law enforcement agency to investigate the group because it is suspected of involvement in serious crime.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if MI5 is empowered to disconnect phone lines connected to organisations for the purpose of preventing possible subversion; if explicit authorisation is required from him for such action; and if he will make a statement. [73407]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service will undertake operations involving entry onto or interference with property only in accordance with its statutory functions and under the authority of a warrant issued by the Secretary of State in accordance with section 5 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994. It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose information about Security Service operations.

Greenpeace

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Merseyside into the incident in which his officers recently intercepted a number of members of Greenpeace at a Cheshire motorway service station. [73398]

Mr. Boateng: I have received a report from Merseyside Police who have informed me of the following:

On Wednesday 17 February, Merseyside Police became aware of the presence of a large group of Greenpeace activists at Hapsford Service Station on the M56 in Cheshire. It was apparent to the police that the members of Greenpeace were intending to demonstrate at Liverpool Docks in order to disrupt commercial trade. After consultation with Cheshire Constabulary, Merseyside Police officers attended and, given the dangers of any potential demonstration, seized a number of dinghies under section 19(3) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; section 3 of the Criminal Damage Act 1971 and section 12(1) of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990. I understand that the seizure was carried out with the co-operation of the demonstrators and the dinghies were placed in a safe location.

The following day, Thursday 18 February, 11 Greenpeace activities were arrested for aggravated trespass under section 68 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 at the Seaforth Dock on Merseyside. Ten people were later charged and will appear at South Sefton Magistrates Court on 25 March.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of administration of the subsistence benefit system for asylum seekers by local authorities. [73158]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Local authorities can include reasonable administration costs in their claims for asylum seekers subject to an overall unit cost limit. Administration costs are not disaggregated.

Charities

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Treasury over the future fiscal framework under which charities will operate. [72106]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office continues to work closely with the Treasury and all Government Departments on matters relating to the charitable sector. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor intends to publish the consultation document on the Charity Taxation Review at the time of the budget.

Licensing Hours

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the licensing hours that his Department will recommend to licensing justices for the period of 30 December 1999 to the 2 January 2000 inclusive. [73565]

Mr. Straw: We have just consulted on proposals for extending permitted hours on the Millennium Eve and subsequent New Year's Eves. Our preference was for an all-night relaxation, but we also sought views on a more modest extension to 4am. We will announce the outcome shortly.

We have not proposed any change to the hours on 30 December or 2 January.

Green Goddess Fire Appliance

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for supply of fuel for the Green Goddess fire appliances when the new petroleum regulations on leaded petrol are implemented. [74037]

Mr. George Howarth: Extensive tests undertaken on two appliances indicate that the engines will run on unleaded fuel with minor routine adjustment. We have also carried out conversions to the cylinder heads of two engines, which should enable them to run on unleaded fuel without further adjustment. The converted engines will be evaluated under test conditions before further conversions are undertaken. We are also evaluating proprietary fuel additives, which are claimed to allow vehicles such as the green goddesses to run on unleaded fuel without polluting the environment.

Au Pairs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the immigration status of au pairs; and if he will make a statement. [71967]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1999, c. 392–93]: Under the Immigration Rules, an au pair must be unmarried, aged between 17 and 27 and without dependants, and come from one of the designated countries. They may stay in the United Kingdom for up to two years, living as part of an English speaking family and learning the language. They may help in the home for no more than five hours a day, with two days off per week, in return for a reasonable allowance.

Drug Conference (Rangoon)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government will be represented at Interpol's fourth International Drug Conference in Rangoon on 23 to 26 February. [72886]

Mr. Fatchett: I have been asked to reply.

The UK, along with a majority of EU Member States, was not represented at Interpol's International Drug Conference in Rangoon held from 23 to 26 February.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment was made of the security and safety arrangements covering the plutonium shipments from France to Japan in 1992 prior to deciding upon the appropriate arrangements for the forthcoming shipment of plutonium MOX fuel from Sellafield to Japan. [72962]

Mr. Battle: The transport of MOX fuel from Europe to Japan will be undertaken in full accordance with internationally agreed commitments and recommendations on physical protection, reflecting the concern of all parties to prevent the proliferation of sensitive nuclear materials. The Government are satisfied that the security measures proposed for the shipment of MOX fuel provide at least the same level of protection as the arrangements which were in place for the 1992 shipment of plutonium from France to Japan and that they are adequate and make the security risks negligible.

The ships which will be used for the shipment of MOX fuel meet the highest safety rating of the International Maritime Organisation (IMO), a United Nations agency, which regularly reviews its regulations. The design and construction of the ships are approved by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and by Lloyds Register. The ships have a range of safety features which exceed those found on conventional cargo vessels. PNTL has been safely transporting nuclear fuel by sea for over thirty years during which time its ships have covered over 4.5 million miles without a single incident involving an escape of radioactivity.

Wind Turbines (North-East)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with north east industrialists involved in the manufacturing and supply of components for off-shore wind energy turbines; and if he will make a statement. [73174]

Mr. Battle: Last year I addressed two conferences held by the British Wind Energy Association (BWEA), many of whose members are based in the North East of England. At the Cardiff conference I launched a consultation exercise on the most suitable arrangements for incorporating the development of offshore wind energy into the NFFO process. I have also visited several wind projects including that of Border Wind at Blyth Harbour which will be one of the first UK offshore wind installations.

Through the New and Renewable Energy (NRE) programme, my Department has also held seminars aimed at encouraging engineering companies to invest in the manufacturing and supply of components for wind farm sites. One such event was held in September 1997 in Durham where firms from the region were given a detailed outline of the technology, the market and the opportunities open to engineering industry. The programme has supported 10 projects to develop wind turbine components to date. These projects are worth a total value of £2.4 million. In addition, the programme has supported a number of companies visits to wind turbine manufacturers in Europe as part of this initiative.

Transatlantic Post

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the criteria which the United Kingdom and United States of America Governments use in tendering for the contracts to transport post in each direction between the United Kingdom and the United States of America. [72882]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Within the United Kingdom it is the Post Office rather than the Government that has responsibility for postal operational matters such as the tendering for contracts to transport mail. Contracts are awarded by the Post Office, in accordance with public procurement regulations, based on the most economically advantageous tenderer against a range of criteria which may vary from one route to another including, but not limited to, the ability by an airline to serve the destination; carry the weight of traffic tendered; achieve required handover time; service quality; price; and acceptance of Post Office terms and conditions. I am advised by the Post Office that routes are normally tendered annually or bi-annually.

I am unable to comment on the detail of procurement procedures that are applicable to the operations of the postal administration of the United States of America.

Steel Products (Dumping)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to prevent dumping of steel products in the United Kingdom. [73472]

Mr. Wilson: It is the responsibility of the European Commission, on behalf of the Community and Member States, to investigate complaints about dumped or subsidised imports if they believe there is sufficient evidence to warrant doing so. The Commission is currently investigating six complaints of allegedly dumped steel imports and three complaints of allegedly subsidised steel imports.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what official visits he, his Ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73557]

Mr. Byers: The information is as follows:

15–20 November 1997: Peter Watford, Export Promoter for Southern Africa. Met with Government Officials, representatives from UK and Zimbabwean Industry. Trade and commercial issues were discussed.

3–5 February 1998: Lord Clinton Davis, as Minister for Trade. (To attend UK/Zimbabwe Co-operation week.) Met with Zimbabwean Ministers, Government Officials, representatives from the UK and Zimbabwean Industry. Trade and commercial issues were discussed.

3–6 February 1998: Peter Watford, Export Promoter for Southern Africa; Dave Waring Head of Southern Africa Region; Steve Clarke, Country Manager for Zimbabwe. (To attend UK/Zimbabwe Co-operation week.) Met with Government Officials, representatives from UK and Zimbabwean industry. Trade and commercial issues were discussed.

17–18 September 1998: Mark Runacres, Director, Trade Promotion for Sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia. Met with Government Officials, representatives from UK and Zimbabwean industry. Trade and commercial issues were discussed.

17–19 September 1998: Peter Watford, Export Promoter for Southern Africa. Met with Government Officials, representatives from UK and Zimbabwean industry. Trade and commercial issues were discussed.

British Shoe Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he proposes to take to limit job losses in the British shoe manufacturing industry. [73306]

Mr. Battle: My Department is working closely with the British shoe manufacturing industry to improve its competitiveness in domestic and overseas markets. I launched an Action Plan designed to achieve this at the National Footwear Conference in Rossendale in February 1998. The Plan is being taken forward by the Footwear Liaison Action Group (FLAG). This is an industry led Group which has representatives from companies, trade associations, unions, training organisations, Business Links, DTI and DFEE. My Department is supporting a number of projects developed under this initiative.

Quidhampton (Power Plant Construction)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on the proposed construction of a mini-power plant at Quidhampton near Salisbury. [73382]

Mr. Battle: This is one of a number of cases which are being carefully considered and on which an announcement should be made shortly.

Caribbean Countries

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what efforts his Department is making to increase the volume of United Kingdom trade with the countries of the Caribbean; and if he will make a statement. [72630]

Mr. Wilson: My Department offers a full range of services, including support for trade missions and trade fairs, to British companies seeking business in the Caribbean.

During the current financial year, we have provided financial support and assistance for trade missions organised by CARITAG (to Cuba and the Dominican Republic), the Hull & East Riding Chamber of Commerce and Shipping (to Trinidad & Tobago, Barbados and Jamaica), the Bristol Chamber of Commerce and Initiative (to Trinidad and Tobago, Barbados and Jamaica) and CARITAG in association with the Leicester African Caribbean Business Association (to Antigua, St. Kitts, St. Lucia and St. Vincent). We also provided financial support, under the Trade Fair Support Scheme, for a British pavilion at the Havana International Trade Fair, which took place in November 1998.

Working closely with multiplier organisations in the United Kingdom, we also arrange seminars and workshops throughout the country to promote market opportunities in the Caribbean region.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Ministers from his Department who have visited Caribbean countries since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [72632]

Mr. Wilson: I visited Cuba in November 1998. No other Minister from this Department has visited the Caribbean since 1 May 1997.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations (a) he and (b) his ministers have received on genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry from the US Government. [72761]

Mr. Battle: My Ministerial colleagues and I have regular contacts with US Government representatives across the whole range of issues for which we are responsible. Trade in genetically modified crops and the biotechnology industry are two subjects amongst a great many which have been raised in those contacts.

Recycling

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the EU regarding the harmonisation of recycling requirements and certification for all firms selling their products within the EU. [73653]

Mr. Battle: Prevention of distortions in the Internal Market is a key objective in the Government's consideration of any proposed EU measure to promote recycling, and will be among the issues that the UK will ensure is brought out during the discussions now taking place in the EU Recycling Forum, where options for improving the competitiveness of the recycling industries are currently being considered.

The Packaging and Packaging Waste Directive (94/62/EC), the only Directive containing recycling targets so far adopted, harmonises Member States' management of packaging waste. It also lays down certain "essential requirements" with which packaging must comply before being allowed to circulate within the Community. These provisions in the Directive were transposed into UK law in the Packaging (Essential Requirements) Regulations 1998.

Digital Economy (Special Representative)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) budget and (b) resources will be available to the Special Representative on the Digital Economy. [72800]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The detail of remuneration and day to day support for the e-Envoy will be agreed with the successful candidate. They will also be expected to draw resources broadly from this Department and others in Whitehall.

New York Fashion Show

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department is doing to promote British fashion at the New York Fashion Show. [72705]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 24 February 1999]: My Department has taken many steps to promote British Fashion in the US market over the past year. Notably a major British promotion of SAKS Fifth Avenue which focused on fashion, culture, food and design took place over a week in September 1998.

Internal Market

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the internal document on the development of the internal market. [73268]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 25 February 1999]: I am not entirely certain to which document the hon. Member is referring. A copy of the European Commission's latest document charting progress in the internal market, published in October 1998 and entitled Single Market Scoreboard No.3, can be found in the Library of the House. An explanatory memorandum on this document was submitted to the Parliamentary scrutiny committees on 11 December. I understand that the Commission intends to issue shortly a communication which assesses progress on the Single Market Action Plan. When published, this will be placed in the Library of the House according to normal procedures, although I expect that it will be available sooner via the European Commission's website.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate how many workers in the Barnsley, East and Mexborough constituency will benefit from the implementation of the national minimum wage. [73373]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jeff Ennis, dated 1 March 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question requesting information about the number of people who will benefit from the introduction of the national minimum wage in the Barnsley East and Mexborough constituency.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. Estimates of the proportion of people who are currently earning below the proposed minimum wage for a range of geographical areas have been placed in the House of Commons Library under the title of 'New Earnings Survey (NES) 1998— National Minimum Wage Distribution Tables'. However, figures for workers in Barnsley East and Mexborough earning less than the minimum wage are not given since the sample size is too small to provide reliable estimates.

I will arrange for a copy of this letter to be placed in the Library.

Petrol and Diesel Fuel

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what cost compliance assessment has been made for Directive 98/70/EC. [72532]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

A compliance cost assessment was provided to the House under cover of a Supplementary Explanatory Memorandum (SEM) dated 15 January 1998 reference number 8822/97 on the European Parliament and Council Directive relating to the quality of petrol and diesel fuel. A copy of the SEM is available in the House Library.

HEALTH

Mental Health Services

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental illness hospital beds have been (a) opened and (b) closed in each health authority in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [72579]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not available centrally.

A national inquiry has been set up to give advice on the future number, mix and use of NHS beds in England. This inquiry has recently been extended to include psychiatric services which will cover the whole age range from child and adolescent mental health services through to services for older people and to consider services for learning disabilities. The inquiry's findings will be published in spring 1999.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent in England and Wales in the last year on the care and treatment of patients suffering from schizophrenia; and what percentage that figure represents of total expenditure on (a) mental and (b) all health services. [72578]

Mr. Hutton: Over £2,767 million was spent on National Health Service care and treatment of patients suffering from a mental illness in 1997–98 in England, but we cannot break this down to separately identify each condition such as schizophrenia. The total expenditure on the purchase of healthcare for 1997–98 was nearly £28,956 million.

Ministerial Meetings (US Ministers)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times Ministers in his Department have met their counterparts in the US Government since 1 June 1998; and if he will list the (a) dates, (b) locations, (c) ministers involved and (d) names of the US counterparts at each meeting. [71984]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the United States Secretary of State for Health, Donna Shalala, in Washington DC on 21 October 1998. No other meetings have taken place.

Respite Care

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, following the Devon High Court judgment, what plans he has to amend the eligibility criteria used by health authorities to make decisions on joint funding of respite care to include those in need of nursing home care. [72767]

Mr. Hutton: Following the judgment in R v. North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte Coughlan, the health authority submitted an application for leave to appeal against the High Court's decision. In light of the impact on policy of the High Court's view on funding of nursing care, we decided to support the health authority's application for leave to appeal, given the importance of clarifying the judgment and making the legal position clear. This application for leave to appeal was granted on 4 February. We will consider the need for guidance to Health and Local Authorities once the result of the appeal is known. In the interim, health authorities and social services departments are advised to seek their own legal advice if they have any concerns. The overall implications of the case are still being assessed.

Medical Research Ethics Committee

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) local medical research ethics committees, (b) members on each committee and their qualifications and (c) clinical trials each one has authorised in the last five years; and if he will place a summary of the result of each trial in the Library. [73239]

Ms Jowell: The latest available list of Local Research Ethics Committees (LRECs) has been placed in the Library. Information about LREC members, and clinical trials authorised by LRECs is available only from health authorities.

Since 1991, LRECs are established under Departmental guidance. Each health authority is required to set up at least one LREC, and there are approximately 211 operating in England. In addition, Multi-Centre Research Ethics Committees (MRECs) were established in 1997 and there is one MREC attached to each English region, one in Scotland and one in Wales.

LRECs have eight to twelve members and should include hospital medical staff, nursing staff, general practitioners and lay persons who are appointed in a personal capacity and recognised for their experience and sound judgment in their respective fields. MRECs have 15 to 18 members from similar backgrounds to LREC members (some may also be serving LREC members).

Information about clinical trials authorised by an LREC is available from the annual report which each is required to submit to the health authority. These annual reports should also name the members and give details of the number of research proposals considered. MRECs submit their annual reports to the my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, which must include a list of proposals considered. MRECs considered about 600 applications in 1998.

To achieve greater coherence and uniformity of practice in the operation of Research Ethics Committees we are currently conducting a review of the system as a whole.

Prostheses Users

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to ensure that prostheses users are able to obtain out of area treatment after April 1999 if their local limb centre cannot meet their needs for comfort, capability and cosmesis. [73182]

Mr. Hutton: The arrangements for commissioning patient services from 1 April 1999 will ensure that all referrals to National Health Service hospitals are covered by either the new long-term service agreements or the new arrangements for access to specialised services.

Where there are consistent patterns of referrals to a service, whether a specialised service or more locally, these are being built into service agreements. Cases that do not fit this will be covered by the new arrangements for out of area treatments.

All out of area treatment referrals will be covered by the standards for quality and effectiveness specified in the main commissioner's service agreement and will be treated under the same agreements and on exactly the same basis. Prior approval will not be required for out of area treatment.

Under the new arrangements, general practitioners and consultants will retain the clinical freedom to refer patients for the most appropriate treatment. However, they should explore fully the scope to make maximum cost-effective use of local NHS facilities before contemplating recourse to non-NHS provision.
The decision to commission services provided by non-NHS facilities will continue to be made locally and will be made in the interests of the patient.

Smoking-related Diseases

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with his European counterparts on the cost of health services for the treatment of patients with smoking-related diseases. [73179]

Ms Jowell: We have had no discussion on this specific aspect of smoking policy.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the annual cost to the NHS of the treatment given to patients with smoking-related diseases. [73180]

Ms Jowell: The annual cost to the National Health Service of treating smoking-related disease is estimated to be between £1.4 billion and £1.7 billion for England.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what official visits he, his ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; who they met; and what was discussed. [73456]

Ms Jowell: No official visits have been made to Zimbabwe by Ministers or officials of this Department since May 1997.

NHS Staff (Pay)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the increase in pay between 1984 and 1998 for NHS staff covered by the Pay Review Body; and what was the pay rise for the same period for those NHS professional staff not covered by the Pay Review Body separately identifying (a) laboratory scientists, (b) technicians, (c) clinical psychologists, (d) pharmacists and (e) speech and language therapists. [71806]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The percentage increase in basic pay rates for National Health Service staff covered by the Pay Review Body and those five groups not covered by the Pay Review Body between 1984 and 1998 is set out in the table.

Percentage

| Name of profession | Minimum | Maximum |
|---|---|---|
| Doctors | 125 | 126 |
| D grade Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors (and 1984 equivalent) | 138 | 123 |
| Professions Allied to Medicine | 146 | 140 |
| Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers | 137 | 122 |
| Technicians | 146 | 145 |
| Qualified Clinical Psychologists | 113 | 145 |
| Speech and Language Therapists | 158 | 170 |
| Hospital Pharmacists | 118 | 116 |

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what date he plans to have completed the collection of information relating to the composition of primary care group boards. [73801]

Mr. Denham: The process for collecting the information relating to the composition of primary care boards will commence shortly. The data collection will be completed once all board members have been appointed.

Dental Services

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of NHS dentists. [73204]

Mr. Denham: The investing in dentistry (IID) initiative, which we launched in September 1997 is designed to help improve access to National Health Service dentistry. IID provides grants to enable dentists to expand existing practices or to set up new ones in those areas of the country where the provision of NHS dental services is inadequate and oral health inequalities are most acute.

IVF Treatment

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1999, when he expects to send a substantive reply to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury. [73536]

Ms Jowell: A reply setting out the current position on IVF and the Department's plans for re-assessment of infertility services in light of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists guidance will be sent shortly.

Speech Therapists (West Sussex)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of speech therapists required in West Sussex; and how many are in post at present. [73904]

Mr. Hutton: Estimates of the number of speech therapists required in West Sussex are not available centrally.

The latest information available is that 60 whole-time equivalent staff, rounded to the nearest ten, are classed as therapists working in the speech and language therapy area of work in West Sussex. West Sussex includes West Sussex Health Authority, Crawley and Horsham National Health Service Trust, Worthing Priority Care NHS Trust, Chichester Priority Care Services NHS Trust, Worthing and Southlands Hospitals NHS Trust, The Royal Sussex NHS Trust and Mid-Sussex NHS Trust. This information is taken from the Department of Health Annual Non-Medical Workforce Census.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many air miles have been earned by him and each of his Ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73333]

Ms Jowell: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 141.

No air miles have been earned by Ministers in this Department on official business.

Schizophrenia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with a main diagnosis of schizophrenia psychoses were discharged from mental illness hospitals in England in each of the last three years; and how many of them were taken into local authority residential care in the same year. [73362]

Mr. Hutton: Information is shown in the table. The figures provide information on the number of discharges from National Health Service trusts over the last three years where the patient was discharged to local authority care following inpatient care for schizophrenia. It is not possible to estimate the total numbers of patients who may have been referred to local authority residential care up to a year following their discharge from hospital.

Estimated five discharges from NHS trusts with a primary diagnosis of schizophrenia (F20-F29), 1995–96 to 1997–98

England

| Year | All discharges | Intended discharge destination Local Authority care |
|---|---|---|
| 1995–96 | 40,390 | 540 |
| 1996–97 | 31,850 | 430 |
| 1997–98 | 30,190 | 350 |

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service (Reserved Posts)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the criteria used to assign posts classified as reserved within the Civil Service. [72648]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Article 48 of the EC Treaty is concerned with the free movement of workers between Member States, but it contains a derogation in Article 48(4) which permits Member States to reserve to their own nationals posts which constitute "employment in the public service".

The term

"employment in the public service"

has been interpreted by the European Court as meaning posts which involve direct or indirect participation in the exercise of powers conferred by public law and duties designed to safeguard the general interests of the State or of other public authorities.

These criteria are applied on a case-by-case basis in determining whether a particular post in the civil service is reserved to a UK national.

Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the terms of reference of the Misc 6 Cabinet Committee and his responsibility for it as it relates to genetically modified crops. [73121]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The terms of reference of the Ministerial Group on Biotechnology and Genetic Modification, which I chair, are:

To consider issues relating to biotechnology, in particular those relating to genetic modification.

Public Appointments

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will put to the House proposals for a system of confirmation hearings for public appointments. [72138]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No. The Committee on Standards in Public Life recommended that ministerial accountability and selection on merit should be the key elements of the appointment system for public bodies, overseen by an independent Commissioner for Public Appointments. The Government have accepted this recommendation and have no plans to propose confirmation hearings.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Montserrat

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessments she has made of toxic air pollution levels in Montserrat; and if she will make a statement. [73226]

Clare Short: We have since 1997 been providing health warnings and monitoring the effects of the ash on health in Montserrat. Preliminary studies into the toxicity of the ash and the respiratory health of children on Montserrat have recently been completed. The results have been disseminated on the island via radio and information leaflets. Ash levels continue to be monitored daily from various points on the island. We plan to support further research on ash toxicity later this year. Further clinical surveys of Montserratians living on the island will also be undertaken. We have sought proposals for this work and are improving facilities on the island so that the work can be undertaken to a satisfactory standard.

Sudan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department is having with the Government of the Sudan; and if she will make a statement. [73610]

Clare Short: We keep in touch with the Sudanese authorities' views on humanitarian issues through our frequent dialogues with UN and donor government partners. But we have had no substantive bilateral discussions on these matters with the Government of Sudan since they withdrew their Ambassador and Deputy from London and the consequent temporary withdrawal of British staff from our Embassy in Khartoum last August.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on British aid to the Sudan. [73941]

Clare Short: We were a key donor to the 1998 crisis. The UN 1999 Inter Agency Consolidated Appeal recently issued and we discussed it with other multilateral and bilateral donors at a meeting of the Operation Lifeline Sudan International Advisory Committee on 12 February. There will continue to be substantial humanitarian needs in Sudan this year and the UN World Food Programme (WFP) currently holds enough food stock until at least early summer. We continue to press WFP to make full use of all delivery methods in order to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of good aid delivery and targeting. British aid to Sudan will focus on supporting the most vulnerable groups of people, particularly in those areas in the south where the situation following last year's crisis is most fragile.

We also continue to press all parties to the civil war in Sudan to come to a negotiated settlement. Peace is the only long-term solution to the continuing suffering.

Transnational Corporations

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to establish an international code of conduct for transnational corporations in developing countries. [73280]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

There are no specific plans for such a code. However, the Government are participating fully in the current review of the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, a set of recommendations representing Governments' firm expectations for multinational enterprise behaviour. A key question being addressed in the review is how the Guidelines relate to multinational enterprise activity outside OECD territories. We support also the use of voluntary codes of conduct by companies. Those based on internationally agreed core labour standards can bring improvements to the lives of millions of the poorest people.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what official visits she, her ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73454]

Clare Short: I visited Zimbabwe in January 1998 to meet the Department for International Development (DFID) staff in Harare. I also met the right hon. Herbert Murerwa, Minister of Finance, and discussed with him our White Paper on International Development as well as economic issues. Senior DFID officials have also visited Zimbabwe, to brief Harare-based staff on management and policy issues, and to discuss our development assistance programme with Zimbabwean Ministers and officials.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects in which British Government aid (a) workers and (b) advisers have been involved in Zimbabwe. [73297]

Clare Short: All development assistance projects funded by the Department for International Development are managed by British Government officials. I have already placed a list of projects funded in Zimbabwe in the Library of the House, as promised, in my answer of 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 15.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to the World Bank concerning developments in Zimbabwe. [73730]

Clare Short [holding answer 25 February 1999]: My officials in Washington work closely with the World Bank to address poverty in Zimbabwe. I am in continuous contact with my officials.

Human Rights

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those countries in receipt of British aid which (a) have a record of civil rights abuses, and (b) do not have a democratically-elected Government, indicating in each case the amount of aid they received in the last year for which figures are available. [73682]

Clare Short: Throughout our work, we seek to enhance respect for human rights, particularly those of the poorest. We consider civil and political rights and broader governance issues when we assess the scope for partnerships with developing countries and when we draw up country strategy papers. The position is kept continuously under review, but no country has a perfect record of respect for civil or other human rights and DFID work is concentrated in the poorest countries where it is difficult to secure all human rights for all citizens. Completed strategy papers are publicly available and provide details of progress to date and the prospects for development and partnerships. Full information of DFID's bilateral programmes in 1993–94—1997–98 was published in "Statistics on International Development" in December 1999.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civil Servants (Misconduct)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the offences or acts of misconduct under which a civil servant in her Department could have his pension removed or reduced; and how often this has happened during the last five years. [70780]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Forfeiture Act 1970 provides for the automatic loss of pension rights where a person is convicted of treason.

The rules of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (Northern Ireland PCSPS (NI)), which provides pension benefits for staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICs), give the Department of Finance and Personnel, the administrators of the Scheme, discretionary power to withhold benefits where a civil servant or former civil servant is convicted:

(i) of one or more offences under the Official Secrets Acts 1911 to 1989 for which the person concerned has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment of at least ten years or has been sentenced on the same occasion to two or more consecutive terms amounting in the aggregate to at least ten years or more; or

(ii) of an offence in connection with any employment to which the scheme applies, and a Minister of the Crown certifies that the offence is gravely injurious to the interests of the State or is liable to lead to serious loss of confidence in the public service.

The rules regarding the Home Civil Service (HCS) are as follows:

Under the rules of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme, the Minister for the Civil Service has the power to withhold pension benefits where a Civil Servant or former Civil Servant is convicted under the Official Secrets Act 1911 to 1989 to at least 10 years in prison or convicted of offences deigned to have been gravely injurious to the State or be liable to lead to serious loss of confidence in the public service.

The above rules apply to the Home Civil Servants employed in the Northern Ireland Office.

The discretionary forfeiture provisions, which apply to both the NICS and the HCS, have not been applied in the last five years.

Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what controls exist in respect of the importation of those animals which are subject to the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 into Northern Ireland. [71420]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 16 February 1999]: The import of those animals into Northern Ireland which are subject to the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 is governed by the Importation of Animals Order (Northern Ireland) 1986 made under the Diseases of Animals (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. There are further legislative provisions setting controls in relation to the import of animals susceptible to rabies and to the import of animals covered by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). These controls are in line with those in Great Britain.

Worktrain Programme

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many trainees are (a) on the new Worktrain Programme and (b) what was the average number of trainees in each month on the Action for Community Employment scheme in the last 12 months for which figures are available; [72542]

(2) what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the Worktrain Programme; and if she will make a statement; [72543]

(3) what special help will be made available to organisations which have used Action for Community Employment in order to help them adjust to the loss of funding. [72544]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 1 March 1999.

Parliamentary question 72542–72544

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the Action for Community Employment (ACE) and Worktrain programmes.

Parliamentary question 72542

(a) We are planning to introduce Worktrain on 1 August 1999 if not sooner. Currently there are no trainees participating in the programme.

(b) The number of trainees in the ACE programme during 1998 is shown in the attached table.

Parliamentary question 72543

A major review of the provision for the long-term unemployed and an independent evaluation of ACE highlighted the need for the programme to be better targeted, tailored to the individual needs and focused on helping people into permanent jobs. The introduction of Worktrain reflects the findings of this research and the allocation of resources in accordance with Government objectives and priorities.

The effectiveness of the programme will be fully evaluated.

Parliamentary question 72544

I am pleased to say that help is being offered on several fronts to ACE organisations.

Existing contracts with ACE providers have been extended to 31 July from their original expiry date of 31 March. This extension will allow ACE organisations more time to prepare for New Deal and Worktrain and to take business decisions about their future.

The Management Committees of organisations which might find it hard to survive are being encouraged to urgently consider the possibilities of amalgamating with others, subcontracting and, of course, the preparation of bids for Worktrain. The Agency is working as quickly as possible to implement the tendering and contracting process for Worktrain to minimise any period of uncertainty for organisations.

For those organisations already part of New Deal Consortia, there will be an increasing role for them to play under the Voluntary and Environmental Sector Options of the New Deal for 18–24 year olds and the Intensive Activity Period of the New Deal for the over 25s. As ACE numbers decline, New Deal numbers will increase, thereby helping to maintain an equilibrium within organisations.

Organisations are also being encouraged to work together to develop innovative proposals within the framework of Worktrain. There is scope for new approaches customised to meet the needs and circumstances of local communities. Contracts will be awarded on the basis of competitive tendering and ACE organisations, either individually or as a member of a partnership, will be well placed to bid.

The Minister, Mr. McFall, has established a cross departmental team which reports directly to him. The team is tasked with offering advice and whatever support may be possible to effect a smooth transition from ACE to New Deal and Worktrain.

I hope you find this reply useful.

ACE average occupancy January 1998-December 1998

| Month | Occupancy |
|---|---|
| January | 4,201 |
| February | 4,219 |
| March | 4,183 |
| April | 4,172 |
| May | 4,063 |
| June | 3,944 |
| July | 3,781 |
| August | 3,700 |
| September | 3,712 |
| October | 3,756 |
| November | 3,776 |
| December | 3,838 |

Hospital Waiting Lists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish waiting lists for hospital treatment and consultant appointments monthly. [72351]

Mr. McFall: In Northern Ireland waiting list figures are produced quarterly and are routinely available on request. I have asked officials within the Department of Health and Social Services to make arrangements for this information to be published each quarter.

Sinn Fein Members (Ministerial Appointments)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make it her policy to oppose Sinn Fein members taking up ministerial jobs in Northern Ireland before a start is made on decommissioning their arms and explosives. [72605]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government's policy on the Belfast Agreement is clear—all parties must live up to all their commitments. This means that decommissioning must take place and it means that the new institutions of government in Northern Ireland must be established.

As my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, said in response to a question from the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble), 24 February 1999, Official Report, column 388, the whole of the Agreement must be implemented in full and we must know that violence has been given up for good. It is unreasonable to expect people to sit down together unless they know that that is the case.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sugar

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1999, Official Report, column 120, what assessment he has made of the extent of competition within the UK sugar industry; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the sugar import levy on that competition. [66671]

Mr. Rooker: I have made no assessment of the extent of competition within the UK sugar industry. This is a matter for the competition authorities.

EU import tariffs restrict imports of sugar from third countries, with the important exception of some 1.6 million tonnes per annum under preferential agreements with African, Caribbean and Pacific countries and India, most of which come to the UK. In accordance with the Uruguay Round agreements, these tariffs will have to be cut by 20 per cent. by 2000–01.

The Government believe that the EU sugar regime imposes unnecessarily high prices on consumers and sugar-using industries, and will be seeking significant changes when it comes up for reform in 2001.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Ministry has made of the research work on genetically modified potatoes undertaken by Dr. Pusztai whilst at the Rowett Research Institute. [70046]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 16 February 1999]: I have been asked to reply as responsibility for this subject lies with The Scottish Office.

The Department has itself made no assessment of the work in question, but following the publicity which surrounded this project the Rowett Research Institute arranged last August for an audit committee, including external experts, to carry out a full analysis of all data available. The audit committee concluded that the data did not support any suggestion that the consumption by rats of transgenic potatoes expressing the lectin GNA (Galanthus nivalis) has an effect on growth, organ development or the immune system.

The report of the Audit Committee was published by the Director of the Rowett Research Institute in October 1998.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Agriculture Council (Brussels)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 22 and 23 February; and if he will make a statement. [73486]

Mr. Nick Brown: I represented the United Kingdom, accompanied by my noble Friends the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries for Scotland and for Northern Ireland and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, at a meeting of the European Union Agriculture Council in Brussels beginning on 22 February.

The Council embarked upon negotiations on the Commission's proposals for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy. These comprise proposals for reform of the arable crops, beef, milk and wine regimes, proposals on rural development and on common measures affecting direct payments to farmers, and a proposals concerning the financing of the CAP. My objective in the negotiations was to secure ambitious and worthwhile reforms in all sectors and to ensure that, by 2006, CAP spending is stabilised in real terms at its current level.

By the early hours of Friday morning, after several days of intensive negotiation, the conditions were not yet ripe for an overall agreement to be reached. The Council will accordingly meet again on Thursday 4 March to continue the negotiations.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teacher Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for 1998–99 the current number of applicants for (a) primary and (b) secondary teacher training courses including PGCE by (i) gender, (ii) age and (iii) subject. [69902]

Ms Estelle Morris: As at 6 February 1999, the current number of postgraduate applicants to primary and secondary PGCE courses is as follows:

Current applicants to postgraduate initial teacher training courses, by gender, phase and subject, in England and Wales, academic year of entry 1999–2000

| As at 6 February 1999 | Male | Female |

At the corresponding date in 1998, secondary applicants to 1998–99 PGCE courses made up about half of the final number of secondary postgraduate applicants. Over the last three years there has been a trend for postgraduate applications increasingly to be made later in the year.

Information is not available about applicants to undergraduate ITT, but the following table gives information about applications as at 5 February 1999. Undergraduate applicants can make up to six applications.

Current applications[1] to undergraduate initial teacher training courses, by gender, phase and subject, in England and Wales, academic year of entry 1999–2000

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will develop fast track PGCE qualifications for British teachers who have taught with non-PGCE qualifications abroad. [73199]

Ms Estelle Morris: The new employment-based training routes—the Graduate and Registered Teacher Programmes—which began last year, enable trainees to work as teachers at the same time as following an approved training programme designed to enable them to gain Qualified Teacher Status. In the case of people with relevant teaching experience, which can include experience overseas, graduates can gain Qualified Teacher Status in as little as three months.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what systems he has in place to ensure that policies being developed by his Department are subject to a crime impact (a) assessment and (b) audit and are not likely to lead to enhanced criminal opportunities. [72692]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 24 February 1999]: Government Departments are co-operating on policy development and, therefore, I work closely with other Ministers on any likely implications for crime of new developments, as indicated by research.

As far as my Department is concerned, all our policies should support Home Office Aim 1, which is to reduce crime and fear of crime. Giving everyone the chance, through education, training and work to realise their full potential and thereby contributing to the building of an inclusive and fair society supports this aim. Our research programme monitors and evaluates the effects of new policy and other interventions.

School Funding (Cumbria)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the provision of capital funding for schools in Cumbria. [72668]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 24 February 1999]: The following table shows the total amount of capital funding made available to Cumbria Local Education Authority since 1997–98. There are a significant number of Grant Maintained schools in Cumbria, for which the Funding Agency for Schools has funding responsibility. I have asked the Agency to arrange for a reply to be sent to the right hon. Member.

Announcements on the Class Size and New Deal for Schools allocations for 1999–2000 will be made shortly.

NVQs

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of adults are qualified to NVQ (a) level 3 and (b) level 4; and what the figures were in each year from 1992. [73389]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The information requested is contained in the following table. Figures for 1992 are not available on a comparable basis with later years.

Education Funding (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on levels of education funding in North Yorkshire schools following the setting of the education standard spending assessment. [73974]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 281.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the number of staff with engineering assessor and verifier qualifications in further education colleges. [73208]

Mr. Mudie: We have no such plans.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans the Government have to introduce (a) best practice in strategic planning and (b) evaluation in course development in further education colleges; [73203]

(2) what plans he has to improve the pass rates for GCSE courses in further education colleges; [73206]

(3) what action he proposes to improve retention rates in further education colleges. [73207]

Mr. Mudie: The Government are strongly committed to raising standards in further education. We have increased funding for the sector and are introducing measures to secure year on year improvements in achievement across the board and to promote better retention rates in colleges.

In particular, we are introducing a new Further Education Standards Fund from April 1999, worth £115 million over the next two years. This will provide additional and targeted financial support for improvement plans prepared by colleges causing significant concern; support for other colleges to implement improvements following a Further Education Funding Council inspection; and support for all colleges for the professional development and training of staff and governors.

The Fund will also be used to support the dissemination of good practice in all its forms by colleges identified as beacons of excellence.

These policies to secure better standards will be taken forward in close partnership with the further education sector, including key national bodies such as the Further Education Funding Council, the Further Education Development Agency, the Association of Colleges and the Further Education National Training Organisation.

Kingsbridge Primary School, South Devon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional funds he plans to make available for essential works to the Kingsbridge Primary School, South Devon, following its application under the New Deal scheme of 3 February. [73650]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We expect allocations under the 3rd phase of the New Deal for Schools Programme to be announced at the end of March.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to reform the teachers' pay system. [73196]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Government's proposals for reforming the teachers' pay system were set out in the Green Paper teachers: meeting the challenge of change (CM 4161), published on 3 December 1998, and the Technical Consultation Document on Pay and Performance Management, published on 1 February 1999. The consultation period on both documents ends on 31 March 1999.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to set up a teaching recruitment helpline. [73197]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Teacher Training Agency already operate a telephone Teaching Information line and website providing advice and information for those wishing to train as teachers. The information line received 72,841 calls in 1998. Responsibility for advertising vacancies and managing recruitment and selection rests with schools and local authorities and vacant posts are widely advertised in the national and local press and on the internet. In October last year, I announced £3 million of funding over the next year for a network of local advisers who will assist schools with recruitment and co-ordinate local recruitment efforts.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown of teacher requirement and recruitment rates on a regional basis. [73200]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the headcount of full-time teachers in service in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector at 31 March 1996 together with recruitment rates[1] by region.

| Government office region of service | Teachers in service | Recruitment rate |

[1] Recruitment rate is based on entrants to teaching in a region as a percentage of full-time and part-time teachers in service. "Entrants" means new entrants to teaching, returners to teaching, maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector teachers changing region, teachers moving to the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector from other sectors, either in the same or a different region.

New Deal (Public Sector)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to extend the New Deal within public sector employment. [73202]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The public sector has an important role in the labour market and we are keen to involve this sector in New Deal. We are working closely with public sector employers to encourage offers of public sector jobs to New Deal participants. However, the large majority of jobs in the economy are in the private sector, and we would expect this balance to be broadly reflected in job opportunities offered to New Deal participants.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71278]

Mr. Bayley: We are acting to ensure that the Department's policies meet the needs of disabled people and that we comply with our legal requirements. The Department already takes positive steps to make it easier for disabled people to make use of its services. We shall continue to do so, not only by complying fully with new duties in the Disability Discrimination Act but by aiming to exceed them where appropriate.

The Department will ensure that all new and existing policies and programmes are assessed for any adverse impact not only on disabled people, but on any minority or disadvantaged group. That includes the need to ensure that our policies and their outcomes comply with the law. Where necessary we shall act to remove or reduce the impact on these groups. This complements the guidance

"Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment" which the Cabinet Office issued to all Government Departments in November 1998, and which was signed jointly by my right hon. Friends the Minister for Women, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Home Secretary.

Asbestosis (North-west)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been awarded benefits related to asbestosis in (a) Bolton and (b) the north-west in the last five-year period for which figures are available; and, of these, how many previously worked in the locomotive industry. [72904]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Industrial Injuries Benefit is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Ms Ruth Kelly, dated March 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people have been awarded benefits related to asbestosis in (a) Bolton and (b) the North West in the last five year period for which figures are available; and, of these, how many previously worked in the locomotive industry.

The information is not available in the format requested. Data is only available for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB). Information for Bolton is not available as figures for IIDB are collated by Benefit Agency (BA) Area Directorate which do not correspond to Parliamentary constituency or Local Authority boundaries. The BA Area Directorate which includes Bolton also includes Salford and other areas of Greater Manchester. Data about injuries specific to the locomotive industry are not kept.

The information that is available is shown on the enclosed table.

I am sorry I could not be of more help on this occasion.

Industrial injuries disablement benefit asbestosis assessments in the North West

| Period | Number of assessments |
|---|---|
| 1995 | 140 |
| 1996 | 100 |
| 1997 | 104 |
| January to June 1998 | 33 |

Notes:
Figures are provisional and subject to change
Figures include Pneumoconiosis (PD D1), where the attributable agent has been asbestos, Diffuse Mesothelioma (PD D3), Primary Carcinoma of the Lung with accompanying evidence of one or both of the following: (a) asbestos (b) unilateral or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening (PD D8) and Unilateral or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening (PD D9).
Figures for the North West are available by Government Office Region (GOR). The North West GOR covers the counties of Cumbria, Cheshire, Greater Manchester and Lancashire.

Child Benefit

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many families in the Barnsley, East and Mexborough constituency will benefit from the increase in child benefit. [73375]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Child Benefit is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jeff Ennis, dated March 1999:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if I will estimate how many families in the Barnsley East and Mexborough constituency will benefit from the increase in child benefit.

Unfortunately the information to identify families, by region, who are receiving Child Benefit is not readily available. These figures could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I can however explain the new rates of Child Benefit from April 1999. They will be £14.40 for the eldest child and £9.60 for each subsequent child. The increase for the eldest child includes the extra £2.50 a week announced in the March budget, plus uprating. This is an overall increase of £3.25 for a family with two children.

I am sorry I could not have been of more help on this occasion but I am pleased to have had the opportunity to comment.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total amount of money lost through fraud to his Department's budget for 1997–98, indicating that amount as a percentage of the budget for that year; and if he will break down these figures by individual benefits. [73969]

Mr. Timms: The Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business; securing the future" set out the difficulties of measuring a covert activity such as fraud. Previous work reviewing individuals' claims shows that at least £2 billion per year is lost through fraud. This figure is based on a sample of cases where we have obtained firm evidence or an admission of fraud. There are strong indications that a further £3 billion is lost. This figure is based on a sample of cases where there is strong suspicion, but it cannot actually be shown that the claimant was guilty of fraud.

In other cases still, claim reviews have raised suspicions that there could be fraud, but the evidence is weak—for example, where people have been observed to be living above their means. Cases of this kind account for a further £2 billion per year in benefit claims. In addition, customer and staff errors lead to about £750 million being overpaid each year and £600 million being underpaid.

| | Amount |
|---|---|
| Confirmed fraud | 2 |
| Strong suspicion of fraud | 3 |
| Low suspicion of fraud | 2 |

The annexe to the Green Paper showed the estimates of the levels of fraud available at the time. Since the Green Paper, we have published further estimates for Housing Benefit and Jobseeker's Allowance (Contributory). These estimated levels of fraud and strong suspicion of fraud at £610 million for Housing Benefit and £47 million for Jobseeker's Allowance (Contributory).

We indicated in the Green Paper that we intended to overhaul how fraud was calculated. Working with the National Audit Office, we have developed and refined our methodology. We now have a continuous monthly programme of reviews using random samples of Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based) cases in each area of the Benefits Agency. The results from the first six months were published in November and showed around £640 million and £281 million fraud and error in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based) respectively. We have further investigated those cases where there was strong suspicion that the benefit was wrong to see whether the payment was in fact wrong. The results of this investigation will give a more complete picture of fraud and error in these benefits.

We shall extend this new methodology to other benefits to provide a complete picture.

Income Support

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if a person of working age, who has been refused incapacity benefit, will no longer have 20 per cent. deducted from the personal allowance element of his income support, pending the outcome of his appeal to the ITS. [73758]

Angela Eagle: There are no plans to change the Income Support rules.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the rates of income support for pensioners would be in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000, if they had been increased in (i) April 1998 and (ii) 1999 in line with average earnings. [73395]

Mr. Timms: The information is in the table.

Weekly rates of Income Support based on average earnings uprating from April 1998

| | April 1998 | April 1999 (a) | April 1999 (b) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Single aged 60–74 | 71.90 | 73.60 | 75.10 |
| Single aged 75–79 | 74.20 | 75.95 | 77.55 |
| Single aged 80+ | 79.10 | 81.00 | 82.65 |
| Couple one/both 60–74 | 111.60 | 114.40 | 116.65 |
| Couple one/both 75–79 | 114.80 | 117.55 | 120.00 |
| Couple one/both 80+ | 120.30 | 123.30 | 125.75 |

Notes:

1. Average earnings growth has been estimated at 4.5 per cent. in each year, based on Treasury estimates.

2. In column (a) the rates for April 1999 are based on uprating the actual rates which applied in 1998 by average earnings. In column (b), the rates for 1999–2000 are based on the rates for 1998–99 uprated by average earnings, and therefore show the cumulative effect of two successive earnings upratings.

3. The weekly rates in the table are the total of the appropriate personal allowance and pensioner premium before any adjustments for other income, and do not include any additional amounts which may apply in a particular case.

4. In the case of a couple, the age of the elder partner determines the rate which applies.

Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill conforms with all the provisions of the Human Rights Act 1998, with particular reference to article 9, Clause 11 concerning Christian conscience; and if he will make a statement. [73535]

Mr. Timms: Under section 19 of the Human Rights Act 1998, the Minister in charge of a Bill in the House must make a statement about the Bill's compatibility with the European Convention on Human Rights.

Accordingly, before the introduction of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State signed the following statement, which is printed on the front page of the Bill:

"In my view, the provisions of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill are compatible with the Convention rights."

Benefit Payments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the proportion of all benefit payments in 1997–98 which were accurate. [73940]

Mr. Timms: The figures used for reporting the accuracy of individual benefits to Parliament are reported to agreed levels of statistical confidence. The request to "estimate the proportion of all benefit payments in 1997–98 which was accurate" means providing a figure which does not carry statistical confidence. Bearing this in mind, it is estimated that 93.4 per cent. of recipients received accurate payments of benefit in 1997–98.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently claiming severe disablement allowance in each quintile of income distribution. [73899]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Number of people claiming severe disablement allowance in each quintile of income distribution

| Income quintile | Before housing costs | After housing costs |
|---|---|---|
| Bottom | 30,000 | 30,000 |
| Second | 70,000 | 70,000 |
| Third | 90,000 | 90,000 |
| Fourth | 50,000 | 50,000 |
| Top | 20,000 | 20,000 |
| Total | 260,000 | 260,000 |

Notes:

1. Estimates are rounded to the nearest ten thousand. Estimates may not sum owing to rounding.

2. Figures are an average of the recipients of Severe Disablement Allowance in the 1995–96 Households Below Average Income datasets based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS) and as such are subject to sampling error.

3. The measure of income used is household equivalised net income before housing costs and after housing costs. Incomes are equivalised to adjust for household size and composition. No adjustment is made to household income to reflect any additional needs that recipients of severe disablement allowance might have. A household can comprise more than one benefit unit, for example a pensioner living with their grown up children.

Source:

The dates are taken from the Family Resources Survey (FRS) and all estimates are subject to sampling error. The total of recipients of Severe Disablement Allowance living in private households is estimated to be 260,000 while the total 1996–97 caseload was 355,000. Part of this difference will be due to the fact that the FRS does not survey those who do not live in private households, for example those in residential homes. However, there may also be under-reporting of benefit receipt within the FRS.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 376, on pensions, what are the reasons for the lower cost of the state second pension compared with SERPS in 2010 and 2020. [73397]

Mr. Timms: Expenditure on State Second Pension will be lower than on SERPS over the first 20 years or so because the provisions for carers and the long-term disabled take longer to build up than the previous Government's policy of extending Home Responsibilities Protection to SERPS (which is included in the SERPS baseline). The main reason for this is that few carers of pre-school age children will reach State pension age before 2020.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) of 11 February 1999, Official Report, column 379, how much of the £2.5 billion package of measures to tackle pensioner poverty over the next three years is accounted for by the cost of (a) the minimum income guarantee, (b) winter fuel payments, (c) free eye tests and (d) concessionary travel, in each of those years. [73396]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 173.

Child Support

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of non-resident parents pay maintenance to their children; [73901]

(2) what proportion of non-resident parents who pay maintenance to their children are paying it through the Child Support Agency. [73900]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out.

As at 30 November 1998, 70 per cent. of non-resident parents who had been assessed by the Child Support Agency to pay maintenance, use the Agency's collection service. Of these, 69 per cent. are fully or partially compliant.

Widow's Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of people who will no longer be able to claim widow's pension and will instead be entitled to the transitional time-limited allowance within each quintile of the income distribution. [73805]

Angela Eagle: The position in each quintile of the income distribution of future claimants of Bereavement Allowance cannot be known.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Position of recipients of current widow's benefit in income distribution by quintile

Percentage

| Income quintile | Before housing costs | After housing costs |
|---|---|---|
| First | 22 | 18 |
| Second | 23 | 19 |
| Third | 20 | 24 |
| Forth | 21 | 18 |
| Top | 15 | 22 |

Source:
Figures in the table are from the 1996–97 Households Below Average Income dataset based on the Family Resources Survey.

Mrs. Karen Adams

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the case of Mrs. Karen Adams of Llithfaen, Pwlheli, (Ref. D42/190/1998/00070) to establish the reasons for her appeal against the reduction of the attendance component of her disability living allowance not being determined; and if he will undertake an inquiry into the workings of the appeal system. [72821]

Angela Eagle: Appeals in respect of claims for Disability Living Allowance are matters for the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS). A copy of the letter the right hon. Member sent on 19 February 1999 to the Secretary of Medical Appeal Tribunals in Cardiff has been passed to ITS Headquarters so that a reply can be sent to the right hon. Member directly.

We are currently overhauling the whole decision making and appeals system. We are firmly committed to tackling the unacceptable delays in the appeals service—currently averaging seven months, with some appellants waiting over a year for the decision on their case. Regulations will be debated shortly under affirmative procedures. Under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1998, which paves the way for modernising the delivery of Social Security, one of the major areas of change will be to reduce substantially the current waiting times for appeals. The intention of these changes is to provide a more effective and faster service and to reduce the kind of lengthy waiting period that Mrs. Adams suffered.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas (Supply Teachers)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current instructions issued by his Department to entry clearance officers on the admission of supply teachers on working holidaymaker visas, giving the date they were introduced and the criteria and reasons for their introduction. [71442]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 February 1999]: Instructions on the requirements to be met to qualify for entry clearance as a working holidaymaker (WHM) are contained in Chapter 20 of Diplomatic Service Procedure Entry Clearance Volume 1 which is available in the Library of the House. A specific concession has been incorporated in the instructions to enable supply teachers to take advantage of the WHM scheme, under certain conditions. Provided applicants meet these requirements they may take employment as a supply teacher.

The timing and policy reasons for the introduction of these requirements, as well as the terms of the concession for supply teachers, are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parliamentary questions for written answer have been tabled to his Department in each session since May 1997; and how many have not been answered on grounds of disproportionate cost. [71932]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In the 1997–98 session, this Department gave written answers to 3,137 questions, of which 131 could not be answered fully on grounds of disproportionate cost.

So far in this session, 700 questions have been given written answers, with eight not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost.

Burma

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the situation of the Karen people in Burma; and if he will make a statement. [72951]

Mr. Fatchett: The Burmese military regime's record of human rights abuses against ethnic minorities, including the Karen, is appalling. These include forced labour, forced repatriation, killings and torture. Many Karen have fled to neighbouring Thailand: there are over 80,000 in refugee camps in the border area. The UK urges the Burmese regime to stop all human rights abuses and to enter into dialogue with the democratic opposition, including ethnic minorities.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the Karen people in Burma. [72950]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government have received many representations from non-governmental organisations lobbying on the plight of Burmese ethnic minorities including the Karen; and from Members of Parliament and members of the public expressing concern at human rights abuses in Burma, including those against the Karen.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Burma concerning its treatment of the Karen people. [72949]

Mr. Fatchett: The Burmese military regime are well aware of our deep concerns about the plight of Burmese ethnic minorities, including the Karen. We take every opportunity, both in international forums such as the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and through our Embassy in Rangoon, to raise our concerns.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Myanmar about human rights, specifically in respect of the Karen people; what further action he intends taking; if he will arrange for EU foreign ministers to consider this matter; and if he will make a statement. [73488]

Mr. Fatchett: We take every opportunity to raise with the Burmese regime our concerns about their appalling human rights record, particularly against ethnic minorities. We support action within international forums; we support the efforts of the UN to bring about an improvement in Burma; we co-sponsored the UN General Assembly resolution on Burma last December; we, with our EU Partners, are working towards a tough resolution at the forthcoming UN Commission on Human Rights; and we expect Burma to be on the agenda of the forthcoming ILO session. EU Member States have taken strong action to bring pressure to bear on the Burmese regime in the form of a Common Position first adopted in 1996 and strengthened by EU Foreign Ministers last October. We also take bilateral action: our Ambassador in Rangoon makes representations to the Burmese regime about our concerns.

EEA Family Permit Applications

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the average processing time of applications by non-EEA national family members applying for EEA family permits has been since 1 February 1998. [72880]

Mr. Fatchett: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, guidance to overseas Posts stipulates that applications for Family Permits are to be given priority. Whenever possible, a decision should be taken at the time that the application is lodged (or interview conducted).

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for EEA family permits were refused on the grounds that the entry clearance officer judged the marriage to be one of convenience over the period 1 February 1998 to date. [72876]

Mr. Fatchett: This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many non-EEA family member nationals applied for EEA family permits during the period 1 February 1998 to date; [72856]

(2) how many EEA family permits have been refused to non-EEA family members of EEA nationals exercising treaty rights since 1 February 1998; [72879]

(3) how many EEA family permits have been granted to non-EEA family nationals since 1 February 1998. [72878]

Mr. Fatchett: During the period 1 February 1998 until 31 December 1998, 11,275 non-EEA family member nations applied for EEA family permits, 10,522 were issued and 109 were refused. The remainder (644) are accounted for by applications which were still being processed or had been withdrawn.

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in respect of determining the future status of the Commonwealth Institute; and if he will make a statement. [73153]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The discussions between Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials and the senior management of the Commonwealth Institute are making good progress, but have not yet reached a stage where a formal decision can be made in respect of the institute's future status.

Sudan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department is having with the Government of the Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [73609]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to have regular contact with the Sudanese authorities both in London and Khartoum. Through these contacts we continue to work towards the normalisation of Anglo-Sudanese relations.

Abdullah Ocalan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the Government's policy to call for international observers to monitor the forthcoming trial of Abdullah Ocalan in Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [73611]

Ms Quin: We have urged the Turkish authorities to make provision for attendance at the trial of Mr. Ocalan by international representatives, in line with their normal practice. The Turkish government have made it clear that no provision exists in Turkey for formal "observer status" within their courts.

Iran

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Iranian Government about human rights abuses in Iran. [73300]

Mr. Fatchett: We and our EU partners frequently raise our concerns over human rights with the Iranian authorities. The EU sponsored United Nations Commission on Human Rights (UNCHR) Resolution on human rights in Iran was adopted on 18 November 1998. We will also be supporting the EU sponsored UNCHR Resolution due for discussion in Geneva in March. We and our EU partners raised human rights issues during the EU/Iran talks in Tehran in July 1998 and in Vienna in December 1998. We frequently raise this issue also in working level contacts.

In conjunction with our German and Austrian Partners we made a demarche to the Iranian Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 4 October 1998 about the cases of Mr. Dhabihi-Muqaddam and Mr. Najafabadi, two Baha'is who had been sentenced to death. The EU also issued a declaration in December about the killings of dissidents in November/December last year. We welcome the Iranian government's determination to pursue the culprits, and the subsequent arrest of Ministry of Intelligence and Security officials.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will provide assistance to the National Council of Resistance of Iran; [73659]

(2) what assessment he has made of the objectives and activities of the National Council of Resistance of Iran. [73294]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government do not recognise the National Council for the Resistance of Iran, which is a coalition dominated by the Mujaheddin-e-Khalq Organisation (MKO). Despite its claims to be a democratic party, it has a long history of violence. The MKO has been responsible for many acts of terrorism and is closely associated with Saddam Hussein's regime in Iraq. The Government have taken action to stop people associated with acts of terrorism by the MKO coming to the UK, notably their President elect, Maryam Rajavi. The MKO continues to be listed by the US State Department as a terrorist organisation.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact (a) he and (b) his officials have had with the National Council of Resistance of Iran. [73295]

Mr. Fatchett: Neither this nor the previous Government recognise the National Council for the Resistance of Iran (NCRI). Therefore, FCO Ministers and officials avoid contact with member of the NCRI.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) trade concessions, (b) credits and (c) loans which the British Government have agreed with Iran since May 1997. [73299]

Mr. Fatchett: There have been no trade concessions of loans to Iran by HMG in this period. In July 1998 my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced the resumption of export credit guarantee cover for capital goods and service contracts concluded on cash payment terms, and for short term reinsurance for private sector insurers of consumer goods exports. As yet, no cover has been used under these facilities.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the numbers of people in Iran put to death since President Khatami came to power. [73298]

Mr. Fatchett: It is difficult to put an exact figure on the number of executions in Iran since President Khatami's election in May 1997. The latest report of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights Special Representative, Maurice Copithorne, estimates that between January and December 1998 155 executions took place. In his report for 1997 it was estimated that 220 executions took place. President Khatami was elected on 23 May 1997.

Kenya

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has had with the United Nations on the continuing location of the UNEP in Nairobi; [73681]

(2) what reports he has received concerning the destruction of the Karura Forest in Kenya. [73766]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment is responsible for UNEP issues. He has participated in discussions with UNEP's Executive Director, Klaus Toepfer, on reform of UNEP, including the continuing location of UNEP in Nairobi. In his speech at the UNEP Governing Council on 4 February, he underlined the United Kingdom's continued high level of support for UNEP, including the strengthening of the UN presence in Nairobi.

We have received regular reports from our High Commission in Nairobi about the destruction of the Karura Forest in Kenya. As the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), said in his written reply of 24 February 1999, Official Report, column 322, we supported, as part of the Democratic Development Group of diplomatic missions in Nairobi, a collective statement expressing our deep concern over the violence last month at the Karura Forest.

Our High Commissioner regularly raises the need for greater transparency and respect for the law in the allocation of public lands in Kenya, including the Karura Forest, with President Moi and senior Government Ministers.

Brit Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those ministers in his Department who were present at the recent Brit awards in an official capacity; and who or what organisation was acting as their sponsor or host. [73493]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office attended the Brit awards.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Air Miles have been earned by him and each of his ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73337]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 141.

Detailed information on any air miles earned by Ministers as a result of official travel is not recorded centrally.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on atrocities committed by ECOMOG forces in Sierra Leone. [73641]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the right hon. Member to my answer of 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 319.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to President Mugabe about the content of his recent statements to opposition groups. [73296]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I saw President Mugabe on 25 February and told him of our concerns about his recent remarks about the judiciary, the media and non-governmental organisations. I encouraged him to reassure the Zimbabwean people and the international community of this commitment to international human rights standards and the rule of law.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what official visits he, his ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73464]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I visited Zimbabwe in January 1998 and met the Acting President, the Foreign Minister and the Minister of Transport and Energy. I also met parliamentarians, non-governmental organisations, academics, unions, the media and business people. Topics discussed included regional issues, political and economic developments in Zimbabwe, land redistribution and human rights.

Most recently, I met President Mugabe when I visited Zimbabwe on 25 February, as part of a regional tour to discuss the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo. I also raised our concerns over recent human rights abuses.

There have been a number of visits by officials, for a variety of reasons. We do not keep a central database of all visits by officials to Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe concerning its plans to nationalise land. [73388]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 26 February 1999]: This Government recognise the need for land reform in Zimbabwe. We have told the Zimbabwe Government that we would be prepared to support a programme that is transparent and fair, follows the due process of law, is well-managed and affordable within an overall sound economic framework, has the support and participation of stakeholders and beneficiaries, and is aimed at poverty reduction.

Media Staff (Embassies)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes his Department has made in the deployment of staff handling media matters in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) embassies and high commissions abroad since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [73603]

Mr. Fatchett: Since 1 May 1997 the FCO News Department had recruited an additional 7 staff, of whom 4 are designated press officers and one spends half his time as a press officer. There have been no significant changes in the deployments of staff dealing with media matters overseas: a detailed analysis could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Kosovo

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reasons were given by President Milosevic for not travelling to the Rambouillet talks. [73384]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 26 February 1999]: The Contact Group Ministerial meeting held in London on 29 January agreed to summon representatives of the Federal Yugoslav and Serbian Governments and representatives of the Kosovo Albanians to negotiations for a political settlement on the basis of documents tabled by the Contact Group. The invitation was not issued to President Milosevic in person and it did not stipulate that he should attend.

Chile (Air Services)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Chilean Government concerning (a) British Airways flights to Santiago and (b) Lan Chile flights to Spain. [73386]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 26 February 1999]: (a) The most recent formal discussions took place during air services negotiations between the United Kingdom and Chile were held in June 1994. Air services negotiations due to be held in 1998 were postponed. We hope these will be re-instated soon. (b) None.

Falklands

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has held with the Governor of the Falklands concerning flights to the Falklands from (a) Chile, (b) Uruguay and (c) Brazil. [73385]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 26 February 1999]: We have told the Governor of the Falkland Islands that we share the Falkland Islands Government's hope that Lan Chile will continue to fly to the Falklands after the expiry of their present contract on 31 March 1999. We have assured him of our readiness to assist the Falkland Islands Government to explore other options for air links in the region.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reasons the Chilean Government have given for recognising Argentina's claim over the Falklands. [73387]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 26 February 1999]: We are aware of Chilean statements of support for the Argentine position on the Falklands in recent years. It is for the Government of Chile to explain the reasons for their statements. We have made clear to the Chilean Government that we have no doubt about British sovereignty over the Falklands and have called on them to recognise the right of the Falkland Islanders to determine their own future.

Yemen

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of human rights abuses in Yemen; and what representations he has made to the Government of Yemen. [73205]

Mr. Fatchett: There have been some tangible improvements in human rights in Yemen. There is a democratically elected parliament and universal franchise among men and women. The last elections in 1997 were judged to be largely free and fair. A broadly free press ensures that issues are properly aired. Our Embassy has provided modest financial support for human rights organisations operating in Yemen. Our priority is to help improve Yemen's judicial process. We have provided assistance in training judges and related officials on national and international human rights law and its application in the court-room.

The recent trial of eight UK citizens in Aden for alleged terrorist related crimes has, however, highlighted a number of weaknesses. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has raised our concerns with Prime Minister Iriyani three times this year.

Antarctic Secretariat

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects agreement to be reached on the establishment and siting of the Antarctic Secretariat; and if he will make a statement. [73162]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Antarctic Treaty Secretariat may be discussed at the next meeting of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to be held in Peru in May 1999. The need for an Antarctic Treaty Secretariat has long been acknowledged by Consultative Parties, including the UK. But consensus on its location has not yet been reached.

The UK looks forward to a resolution on the matter of the Secretariat's location and will continue constructive dialogue with other Treaty Parties.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the treatment of Kurdish people in Turkey; and what representations have been made to the Turkish Government. [73163]

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish Government concerning the violation of the human rights of Kurdish citizens. [72823]

Ms Quin: We regularly raise human rights issues in our bilateral discussions with the Turkish government. We have repeatedly stressed to the Turkish authorities that a lasting solution to the conflict in south east Turkey can come about only if the Turkish government address the social and economic problems of the south east and the aspirations of the Kurdish population there.

British Council (Damascus)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1999, Official Report, column 436, on the British Council property in Damascus, when he expects the costs of the damage to have been evaluated. [72891]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Council estimate the cost of damage to their property in Damascus to be between £90,000 and £95,000.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 1999, Official Report, columns 583–84, on the engagements of the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), where the dinner with Next Century Foundation was held. [73149]

Mr. Fatchett: The dinner was held at the Kuwaiti Ambassador's residence in London.

Indonesian Elections

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures of support for the Indonesian elections were agreed at the General Affairs Council on 21 and 22 February. [73756]

Mr. Fatchett: A UK initiative for increased European Union funding for the Indonesian elections was approved. The European Commission is producing proposals for an assistance package worth 7 million euros.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he held with EU ministers at the General Affairs Council on 21 and 22 February on the subject of East Timor. [73757]

Mr. Fatchett: Ministers discussed the latest developments in the talks on East Timor being held under United Nations auspices in New York.

Bay of Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to refer to the Bay of Gibraltar as the Bay of Algeciras. [73408]

Ms Quin: Yes.

Vietnam

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Vietnam regarding the treatment of Christians in that country; and if he will make a statement. [73637]

Mr. Fatchett: We are deeply concerned about reports of religious persecution in Vietnam. We have repeatedly, with our EU partners made representations to the Vietnamese government about human rights. In June last year the British Ambassador in Hanoi handed over a list of prisoners of conscience, urging their release. These included many imprisoned for exercising their religion freedoms. I raised the issue with the Vietnamese Ambassador in January. We shall continue to press the Vietnamese to improve respect for human rights.

At the forthcoming UN Commission on Human Rights, the UK will give its full support to a resolution highlighting our concern about religious intolerance wherever it occurs.

CABINET OFFICE

Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has for reform of Part 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [74713]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government have reviewed the operation of the deregulation order-making power in Part 1 of the Act. We believe the safeguards in the process are proven, but that the legislative limitations on the application of this power restrict our ability to deal effectively with measures which are no longer needed, or which impose a greater burden than necessary.

When Parliamentary time allows, the Government intend to extend the scope of the deregulation order-making process, whilst maintaining the statutory protection against its misuse. I am launching today an extensive public consultation on proposals for reform of this power. I have sent copies of the consultation document to all MPs and have placed copies in the Libraries of the House.

New Deal (Trainees)

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many New Deal for Young People Trainees were employed in (a) Her Majesty's Treasury, (b) the Home Office, (c) the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, (d) the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (e) the Cabinet Office, (f) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, (g) the Department of Health, (h) the Department for Foreign and International Development, (i) the Lord Chancellor's Department, (j) the Department of Social Security, (k) the Department of Trade and Industry, (l) the Scottish Office, (m) the Welsh Office and (n) the Northern Ireland Office, on 31 January. [74216]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, the hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Mudie), to my hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) on 19 November 1998, Official Report, column 755. Updated figures will be available towards the end of April and will, for the first time, distinguish between the numbers of those employed under the programme for 18–24 year olds and the programme for 25 year olds and above.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, columns 576–77, if he will list the expenditure not included in his answer incurred (a) by task forces and review bodies, (b) by focus groups, (c) on market research and (d) for publications and publicity; and if he will list the bodies which incurred the expenditure. [71021]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 15 February 1999]: My answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, columns 576–77, was inclusive of expenditure on (a) task forces and review bodies and (b) by focus groups which included expenditure on market research and publicity. It is not possible to provide a further breakdown of expenditure without incurring disproportionate costs. The total own expenditure on publications by my Department itself since May 1997 is £3,724,259. This is broken down as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Core Cabinet Office | 2,656,929 |
| Civil Service College | 711,140 |
| Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency | 86,675 |
| Government Car and Despatch Agency | 8,090 |
| Property Advisers to the Civil Estate | 41,000 |
| The Buying Agency | 92,740 |
| Central Office of Information | 127,685 |
| Grand Total | 3,724,259 |

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of those who have entered the New Deal for Young People have spent more than four months on the Gateway. [74203]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Damian Green, dated 2 March 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the percentage of young people who have spent more than four months on the New Deal Gateway. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

By the end of December 1998, 214,300 young people had entered the New Deal including those leaving before attending a Gateway interview. Of the total 20% were recorded as having spent more than 4 months in the Gateway. This includes people who returned to the Gateway after breaks including short periods of work or illness.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many New Deal for Young People trainees were employed at his Department on 31 January; and what percentage this is of total employment in his Department. [74204]

Mr. Mudie: As at 31 January 1999, the Department for Education and Employment had 5 New Deal for Young People employees in post, representing 0.12 per cent. of the Department. Though the current position is that we now have 11 people employed on New Deal.

New Deal (West Sussex)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many jobless people under the age of 25 years have so far been enrolled in the New Deal scheme in (i) the East Worthing and Shoreham constituency, (ii) the Worthing travel-to-work area and (iii) West Sussex; and how many of them are in (i) subsidised jobs and (ii) unsubsidised jobs. [74205]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Tim Loughton, dated 2 March 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the numbers of young people participating in New Deal for 18–24 year olds in the East Worthing and Shoreham constituency; the Worthing travel to work area and West Sussex and the number who have secured subsidised and unsubsidised jobs. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I regret that separate figures are not available for constituencies or travel-to-work areas. Government Statistical Service figures are produced for Employment Service Unit of Delivery areas. Both Worthing and Shoreham fall within the West Sussex and Costal Plain Unit of Delivery.

The latest Government Statistical Service figures to the end of December 1998, and including Employment Service management information to the end of January 1999, show that 366 young people have started on New Deal for 18–24 year olds in the West Sussex Coastal Plain Unit of Delivery. Of these, 68 have secured unsubsidised employment and 51 have started subsidised employment through the New Deal Employment option. In addition there will be other young people who have left the New Deal and stopped receiving Jobseeker's Allowance, without notifying the Employment Service of their reasons for leaving, who will have secured unsubsidised jobs.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment Discrimination

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action the Government propose to take following the completion of its review of ILO conventions 111 on discrimination in employment and 138 on minimum age. [74712]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am pleased to announce that we will ratify ILO Convention 111 on discrimination in employment. I hope to make an announcement on ILO Convention 138, on minimum age in the near future.

Teachers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of non-monetary special incentives to attract teachers back into the profession. [73201]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 1 March 1999]: We are aware of the large pool of qualified teachers who are currently not active in the profession, and we are keen to maximise the number who are attracted back into teaching. Around 12,000 people do re-enter teaching in England and Wales every year. Over time, the proposals for better rewards, support and training in our Green Paper, "Teachers—Meeting the challenge of change", will be key in boosting our ability to draw back former teachers.

In the shorter term, the Teacher Training Agency funds a number of courses specifically designed to update the skills of returners and ease their way back into teaching. Last year, 618 returners made use of TTA-funded courses, and we have just increased the amount of funding available for these courses. The new network of local recruitment advisers I announced last October are working to promote these courses and find other creative ways of targeting returners. We also changed the pensions abatement provision last year to introduce greater flexibility for retired teachers considering a return to work. It is too early to assess the impact of these initiatives, but we will be evaluating their effect later this year.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 664, how many and what percentage of teachers in secondary schools in England do not have a first degree. [73639]

Ms Estelle Morris: Full and part-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in England at March 1997[1] without a first degree[2] are as follows:

Number of teachers

Full-time: 45,800

Part-time: 10,400.

Percentage of all teachers

Full-time: 26

Part-time: 39.

[1] Data for 1997 are provisional.

[2] Some teachers who did not have a first degree at the time they received qualified teacher status, or in the case of teachers no trained in England or Wales when they entered the teaching profession, will have obtained a degree later, but are counted as without a first degree in the answer.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what official visits he, his Ministers or officials have paid to Zimbabwe since May 1997; whom they met; and what was discussed. [73461]

Mr. Mudie: No Ministers from this Department have visited Zimbabwe since May 1997. There has been one visit by an official to meet the National Commission on Education to discuss UK education policies.

Air Miles

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many air miles have been earned by him and each of his ministers; and how he proposes to use them. [73341]

Mr. Mudie: The Government's policy on the use and disposal of air miles was set out by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister on 12 January 1999, Official Report, column 141.

Detailed information on any air miles earned by Ministers as a result of official travel is not recorded centrally.

Brit Awards

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those Ministers in his Department who were present at the recent Brit Awards in an official capacity, indicating the organisation acting as their sponsor or host. [73491]

Mr. Mudie: No Ministers from this Department were present at the recent Brit awards.

Class Sizes

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 271–73, if he will list by local education authority for the present and previous rounds of bidding for capital grants for class size reductions (a) the total value of bids and (b) the total value of capital expenditure grants made; and what is the total budget allocated by the Government for (i) capital and (ii) revenue expenditure on class size reductions. [72559]

Ms Estelle Morris: The total budget allocated for (i) capital and (ii) revenue expenditure on class size reductions is as follows:

£ million

| Financial year | Capital budget | Revenue budget |
|---|---|---|
| 1998–99 | 45 | 22 |
| 1999–2000 | 80 | 80 |
| 2000–01 | 60 | 160 |
| 2001–02 | 20 | 160 |

Details of the present round of bidding were given in my answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, columns 271–73. No grants have yet been made. The values of the applications for capital funding for 1998–99 are set out in the following table. Capital grants to reduce class sizes in 1998–99 were announced on 3 July 1998 and are included in tables that have been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on his Department's policies of the goods and services provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to be implemented in October 1999. [71274]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are acting to ensure that the Department's policies meet the needs of disabled people and that we comply with our legal requirements. The Department already takes positive steps to make it easier for disabled people to make use of its services. We shall continue to do so, not only by complying fully with new duties in the Disability Discrimination Act but by aiming to exceed them where appropriate.

The Department issued internal guidance recently on mainstreaming which ensures that all new and existing policies and programmes are assessed for any adverse impact not only on disabled people, but on any minority or disadvantaged group. That includes the need to ensure that our policies and their outcomes comply with the law. Where necessary we shall act to remove or reduce the impact on these groups. This complements the guidance "Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment" which the Cabinet Office issued to all Government Departments in November 1998, and which was signed jointly by the Minister for Women, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Home Secretary.

The Departmental Board monitors the Department's performance and will publish information on the progress being made in this area, as will other Government Departments.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reviews, task forces and advisory groups have been established by his Department since 1 May 1997; what costs they have incurred to date; and what reports they have published. [71506]

Mr. Prescott: I have today placed in the Library of the House a list of the reviews, task forces and advisory groups that have been established by my Department since 1 May 1997 and the reports which they have published. Information on costs incurred to date cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies have not been included, since information on these is provided in the publication "Public Bodies 1998" which is available in the Libraries of the House.

London Underground

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many journeys (a) he and (b) Ministers in his Department made on the London Underground in the last six months. [71913]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Although records are not kept of the methods of transport used on official visits, Ministers have used London Underground on a number of occasions over the last six months, as well as buses, taxis and walking.

In addition to using London Underground for their official duties, Ministers in my Department use it regularly in their private lives.

Cycle Lanes (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with London borough councils on the development of cycle lanes within their boroughs; and if he will make a statement. [72774]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the Transport Policies and Programme settlement for 1999–2000, announced on 17 December last year, authorities were advised on the priorities for developing the London Cycle Network. In the coming year they should continue to take a more strategic approach, with the overall aim of encouraging more people to cycle in London.

All the London Boroughs have been involved with the development of the LCN, with the Royal London Borough of Kingston upon Thames acting as the overall co-ordinating authority. Through TPP funding good progress has been made on the LCN, with over 1000km of cycle routes already available for use.

The intention is to produce an initial network by April 2000—to be launched alongside the London part of the Thames Cycle Route—that will be of a standard to facilitate cycling in London and provide a satisfactory base for taking forward and completing the LCN in future years.

Advice on the prioritisation of cycling provisions was also included in the guidance recently issued to Local Authorities in London, on the preparation of their Interim Transport Plans, for the 2000–01 bidding round.

I have consistently raised the issue of cycle provisions during visits to various London Boroughs over the last 18 months, and my officials will continue to attend regular meetings of the London Cycle Network steering group, and of the Borough Cycling Officers' Group. Progress reports, including information monitoring the usage on newly completed cycle routes, will be discussed with the boroughs.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instruct local authorities in London to create trial cycle lanes along main thoroughfares. [73473]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend does not have the power to issue such an instruction. The London Boroughs are responsible for deciding whether cycle lanes or other measures should be provided on their local roads.

My Department publishes Traffic Advisory Leaflets on the results of research projects carried out into traffic management issues—including facilities to encourage cycling. In addition, there already exists a design manual, produced by the LCN lead authority, to encourage good practice in the establishment of cycle lanes and other cycling measures.

Passenger Transport Executives

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to create additional passenger transport executives. [73172]

Dr. Reid: The power to establish PTEs was removed under s57 of The Transport Act 1985. The need for more PTA/Es was considered in the lead-up to the White Paper. PTA/Es were established because of the heavy reliance on public transport in the metropolitan conurbations outside London. They have co-operated closely with the metropolitan district councils (the highway authorities) to produce joint local transport strategies under the package approach.

Shires and Unitary Authorities have the same public transport powers as PTA/Es (except for the special duty which PTEs have for local rail services which reflects the high number of local rail services in the metropolitan areas). Shires and Unitaries are, therefore, ideally placed to produce integrated local transport plans for their areas.

The creation of additional Passenger Transport Executives would require primary legislation. The Government have no plans for any such legislation.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations his Department has received in the past six months from (a) Communities Against Nuclear Transport and (b) other community groups concerning the safety of the rail transport of spent nuclear fuel and nuclear wastes. [72964]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This Department has received (a) one letter from Communities Against Nuclear Transport (Brent Terrace Residents Association) and (b) eight letters from other community groups on these subjects.

Commission for Integrated Transport

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times the selection panel for the Commission for Integrated Transport has met. [73505]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The selection panels for the Commission for Integrated Transport have met three times in total so far.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the criteria for appointments to the Commission for Integrated Transport. [73621]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have today arranged for a copy of the criteria for appointments to the Commission to be placed in the House Library.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many names were considered by the selection panel for the Commission for Integrated Transport. [73509]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department received 262 applications for the posts of Chair and Vice Chair to the Commission for Integrated Transport and 290 expressions of interest in membership. The selection panels considered all these names during the sift process.

Ivory Ban (CITES)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the British Government's policy in respect of the CITES negotiations on the ivory ban. [73305]

Mr. Meacher: The 1997 CITES Conference decided by a two thirds majority to transfer the elephants of Botswana, Namibia and Zimbabwe from Appendix I to Appendix II of the Convention. The Conference also agreed a one-off experimental export of stockpiled ivory to Japan to raise revenue for conservation and community development projects in the African countries concerned, provided that the CITES Standing Committee, which the UK now chairs, was content that strict conditions had been met.

At its 41st meeting last month, the Standing Committee examined a report prepared by the CITES Secretariat on verification missions made to each of the four countries concerned. The report concluded that the conditions had been met by all the countries except Botswana. After careful consideration of the report, the Standing Committee endorsed the CITES Secretariat's conclusions and agreed that Namibia and Zimbabwe should be authorised to sell and ship 13.8 and 20 tonnes of ivory respectively to Japan on or after 18 March 1999. The proceeds from the sales must be directed towards conservation and community development projects. Botswana cannot participate until full compliance has been verified by the CITES Secretariat.

The resumption of commercial trade is limited to this one-off trial shipment. There is no possibility of further shipments being made without the express permission of a future Conference of CITES Parties. The shipments themselves will be closely monitored by the CITES Secretariat who will ensure compliance with marking and registering requirements.

As part of the agreement, the CITES Secretariat had already established a reporting and monitoring procedure to assess illegal hunting and trade in elephants and elephant products. At the February meeting, the Standing Committee endorsed new measures, which the Government fully supported, to build on this by providing two new elephant monitoring systems. The United Kingdom has already offered to provide the first year's funding for the Elephant Trade Information System (ETIS) which will monitor legal and illegal trading in ivory. At the meeting, the European Union, United States and Japan pledged substantial funding towards the second part of the system, MIKE, (Monitoring of Illegal Killing of Elephants), which will involve tracking, analysis and assessment of illegal killing and trends in poaching on a representative sample of sites across Africa and south Asia.

In addition, the Standing Committee agreed a mechanism to reinstate the elephant populations currently listed on Appendix II, to Appendix I of CITES if there is evidence of increased poaching or failure by any of the Parties concerned to comply with the conditions set by the 1997 Conference.

The Government believe that the proper implementation of the new pan-African and Asian elephant trade and poaching monitoring systems, together with the early warning system agreed at the meeting, should protect the elephant against the risk of any escalation in poaching caused by the very limited ivory trade agreed by CITES Parties. As Chair of the CITES Standing Committee, we will, along with the CITES Secretariat and others, continue to monitor the situation in Africa closely.

The decisions taken at the last CITES Conference also addressed the problem of rising ivory stockpiles elsewhere in Africa. The risk posed by these stocks, which are difficult and expensive to protect, is frequently overlooked. For the first time, CITES has put in place a system for registering and auditing stocks and encouraging donors to buy them up for non-commercial purposes with the proceeds being re-invested in conservation trust funds established for that purpose. In practice, this is likely to mean destruction of much of these ivory stockpiles.

I recently announced that the Government are willing to offer up to £60,000 to fund new elephant conservation work in return for disposal of part of these ivory stockpiles. We hope that other donors—including conservation organisations—will also come forward to take stockpiled ivory out of the system and at the same time raise revenue for elephant conservation.

Single Currency

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the subject areas within his Department's responsibilities which will be covered by the information campaign on Britain's membership of a single currency. [73662]

Mr. Prescott: Any plans by the Government to issue information during a referendum campaign on whether or not the UK should join the single currency would be made in the light of the Government's response to the recommendations when my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary publishes a White Paper and draft bill before the Summer Recess.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to issue information from his Department to help the public make an informed decision when they vote on the single currency. [73592]

Mr. Prescott: The Treasury will continue its dialogue with key external bodies to determine what information the public and business would need at each stage of the changeover process. Any information campaign would cover key concerns that the public and business may have. Chapter Eight of the Treasury's Outline National Changeover Plan provides further information. Copies of the plan are available in the House Library.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the future of the British Waterways Board. [73683]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 18 February the Government's decision on the future status and direction for British Waterways. The full package of measures is set out in the booklet "Unlocking the Potential ... A New Future for British Waterways", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The key elements of the package are:

British Waterways will remain in the public sector as a public corporation, charged with the stewardship of an important national asset;

Improved funding. An extra £8 million per annum, to enable British Waterways to eliminate the serious maintenance backlog over a timescale of seven years and subject to the achievement of challenging performance targets;

Phasing out debt and increased flexibility in cash flow management. British Waterways will be relieved of the burden of refinancing old loans as they mature and will benefit from new financial flexibility at the end of each financial year.

Three proposed partnerships with the private sector (property, water transfer and maintenance), which are currently being worked up with the Treasury Private Finance Taskforce;

Partnerships with the public sector. British Waterways will build on and broaden its partnerships with local authorities and other public sector organisations, including the new Regional Development Agencies;

A membership scheme: to get British Waterways closer to all people who use its waterways. There are a number of options for a membership scheme and these will be the subject of a consultation exercise by British Waterways. The consultation will include the suggestion that a seat on the British Waterways Board might eventually be offered to the membership;

A Framework Document setting new objectives for British Waterways, clarifying its relationship with the Department, and confirming British Waterways' contribution to sustainable development and to Government policies on transport (including freight), regeneration, heritage, conservation and leisure; and Improved openness and accountability. British Waterways will build on last year's publication of a forward plan at a public meeting by publishing more detailed information about its activities and plans.

I have also placed in the Library copies of the Framework Document and a paper setting out the facts and analysis relevant to the Government's announcement.

The package demonstrates the Government's commitment to a successful future for British Waterways. The additional investment, together with the public and private partnerships, offer exciting opportunities for British Waterways to unlock the potential, modernise its network and provide a system of historic waterways worthy of the new millennium.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of the number of public rights of way that are (a) blocked and (b) otherwise difficult to negotiate because of crops or encroaching vegetation. [73569]

Mr. Meacher: A national rights of way condition survey carried out in 1994 by the Countryside Commission found that on average 26 per cent. of rights of way were blocked or difficult to use, 2 per cent. were blocked and 4 per cent. were difficult to use because of crops or other cultivated surface, and 3 per cent. were blocked and 4 per cent. difficult to use because of overgrown or overhanging natural vegetation.

Flight Crew Licensing

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he will take to ensure that all EU countries implement the Joint Aviation Authorities' Requirements on Flight Crew Licensing by 1 July 1999, with particular reference to pilots in the age group 60 to 65 years. [73487]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This Government take very seriously the implementation of the Joint Aviation Requirements on Flight Crew Licensing (JAR-FCL,) in order to harmonise the standards for licensing pilots in the 29 member states of the Joint Aviation Authorities (JAA). The requirements will enable pilots to operate aircraft up to the age of 65 years either as Pilot-in-Command or Co-Pilot, provided that only one pilot in the crew is 60 or over.

It will be for individual states to decide how to implement JAR-FCL with respect to their airspace, but we have urged JAA states to apply it consistently.

We understand that the European Commission aims to bring forward, this year, proposals to incorporate the JAR-FCL provisions into EU legislation.

Regional Development Agencies

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure equity in distribution of Government funding to the English regional development agencies. [73612]
